Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government pertaining to whether the government is really acting within the spirit of the law. Is it the intention of the government to allow the National Parole Board to continue its ingenious practice of gating inmates who, by law, are required to be released from custody to the supervision of the Canadian Corrections Service—a practice, honourable senators, which really falls within the realm of cruel and unusual punishment and has been found by the Supreme Court of Ontario to be illegal?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot give an appropriate response to that question now. I will take it as notice.

THE COMMONWEALTH

DISTINCTIVE FLAG

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I am prompted to ask it, recalling that he and I were members of the House of Commons, when he belonged to a party different from mine—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I still do.

Senator Macquarrie: But I am prompted particularly by the fact that yesterday, which was Commonwealth Day, as I came to the Hill early in the morning, as a Calvinist should, I noticed that the courtesy staff, in celebration of Commonwealth Day, was flying the Union Jack.

When the leader was a member of the Social Credit Party and I was a Conservative member of the House of Commons—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Why rub it in?

Senator Macquarrie: —I was engaged in a debate suggesting—and the suggestion was supported by the late Raoul Caouette, a wonderful man and my friend's colleague—that we should have in the Commonwealth a distinctive Commonwealth flag. Our motion, as was the case with most of the motions I ever moved in that place, was defeated.

However, with all the maturity of this chamber, and recalling that the Senate can deal with long-range matters and not only the temporary items that flurry the attention of the public, would this not now be something the leader might follow through, considering the great importance of the Commonwealth? I suggest that we should not just pick the flag of one member of the Commonwealth, but that we should, together with our colleagues in the Commonwealth, concert our efforts towards developing a distinctive Commonwealth flag which would be more appropriately flown on Commonwealth Day than the flag of one member of the Commonwealth, regardless of how prestigious or popular that member is.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will consider Senator Macquarrie's suggestion. I do not know whether it is a revival of a discussion we had a number of years ago. I cannot immediately recall that I participated in such a debate.

Senator Flynn: You have been trying to forget that you were with the Social Credit Party.

Senator Olson: No, not at all. Senator Flynn may make allegations, but there was nothing within the activities I enjoyed in that party that I regret or would want to forget. I enjoyed the associations I had with the people Senator Macquarrie referred to, and with others as well. There is nothing I want to forget from those years. Whatever Senator Flynn's allegations may be, they do not square with my memories of that time.

In answering Senator Macquarrie's question I was referring to the specific committee report or activity that dealt with the promotion of a Commonwealth flag. That I do not recall. It may be that I am not even forgetting it. It may be that it never even happened.

Senator Flynn: You have a selective memory.

Senator Olson: I should tell Senator Macquarrie, however, that, although it may be useful for me to make some promotion of this, it may be even more beneficial and useful for him, as a member of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, to raise the matter through that association, where many useful exchanges take place. Perhaps he could make an assessment of whether that association might also like to promote the idea.

● (2040)

Senator Macquarrie: I can assure the honourable leader that it did happen because I took part in the debate and made a magnificent speech with which not everyone agreed. Senator McIlraith says he enjoyed it.

I like the minister's answer in reference to the CPA, and, indeed, being fairly forward in these things, I did discuss it yesterday. It is not a burning issue like unemployment or inflation, but it might be some good leadership. I will consult with him and, perhaps, in 364 days we may have something.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

ENERGY

DOMESTIC OIL PRICE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, on March 2 last I put a series of questions to the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning oil pricing. As he now has had almost two weeks to reflect on the matter and investigate it, I wonder whether he has been able to ascertain what the agreement between Canada and Alberta provides in the event of a lowering of the world price.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I recall that very clearly, but I do not have a series of replies to that series of questions with me this evening. There is, of course, the problem, as I am certain Senator Murray appreciates, that in some of those questions he asked me for opinions and interpretations, and we can give replies somewhat more quickly if he asks for facts.

Senator Murray: I would be glad to have the facts as to what the view of the government is on what the agreement between Canada and Alberta provides. On the previous occasion, the minister said that he did not know what the agreement provided. Can he assure me that there is somebody in the government who does know what the agreement provides?

Senator Olson: I can assure my honourable friend that there are many people in the government who have read the agreement.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That was not his question.

Senator Olson: I am absolutely certain that Senator Murray has read it, and he probably has a copy of it in his office now. What he is asking me for is a view and, therefore, an interpretation of what is involved. If Senator Murray does not have a copy of the agreement that was signed on September 1, 1981, I will provide him with one and he can read it for himself.

Senator Murray: On a matter as serious as this, the minister should not play with words. What I am asking for, and what I think the Senate and the people of Canada are entitled to know is: What is the position of the Government of Canada with respect to this agreement and to its provisions in the event of a decline in the world price of oil? I am not asking for the minister's personal interpretation or that of his staff. What is the official position of the Government of Canada? Surely, honourable senators, I am entitled to ask for that, and surely, after two weeks, the Senate and the people of Canada are entitled to have a straight answer.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator can get a straight answer, but obviously what he is asking for is an interpretation.

The honourable senator has just reminded me that he asked another question—I do not have any of this in front of me—and that was whether or not there was a disagreement between the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada as to the interpretation. I answered him precisely that there was no express disagreement that I knew of. He then asked me if it was implied. He can put his own interpretation on that.

Honourable senators, I take the question very seriously. He knows now that the Government of Canada and other signatories to that agreement, particularly Alberta, obviously take it very seriously. A number of circumstances have changed profoundly since those who were party to it projected the circumstances that would be involved in that agreement. Therefore, I gave an accurate answer then, and I repeat it now: I do not have that interpretation with me.

Senator Murray: With great respect, that is a lot of baloney. Circumstances have changed, but the terms of the agreement have not changed.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister has indicated that there is a difference of opinion between the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that there is a disagreement. The Government of Alberta has indicated that there is a disagreement.

What I was interested in knowing two weeks ago was, and what I am interested in knowing this evening is, what is the position of the Government of Canada, what is the interpretation of the Government of Canada concerning the provisions of that agreement. Surely, the minister can tell us that or can obtain the answer from the Prime Minister or from his colleague, Mr. Chrétien.

Senator Olson: I gave an undertaking to do that some time ago.

Senator Murray: Two weeks ago.

Senator Olson: I understand why my honourable friend is pressing, but he also knows that there have been some questions about certain memoranda which were attached to the agreement, which in some cases had some initials on them and in other cases did not. Therefore, in giving an answer to what he is asking, we have to be extremely careful to ensure that we have considered all of these things, and we are doing that.

Senator Flynn: The answer is that you have not taken any position as yet. It is as simple as that. If you would simply reply to the question, there would be no problem.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question which is perhaps supplementary because it deals with the price of gasoline.

Can the minister give me an explanation as to why in Minneapolis gasoline is about 50 cents a gallon cheaper than it is in Winnipeg? Even taking into account that the provincial tax, although it has not changed in an absolute way, is an ad valorem tax and, therefore, goes up with the price of gasoline, there is a difference of 50 cents a gallon between the price in Winnipeg and the price in Minneapolis.

I have been asked by some people who question me on this subject: How come, when we are supposed to have a 75 per cent relative ceiling on the price of gasoline in this country so that we can have this so-called "made-in-Canada" gasoline price which is going to do us all some good? Would the minister tell me what the problem is?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will answer the question more specifically. I will try to obtain a calculation of all of the factors that go into the price charged per gallon in Minneapolis and in Winnipeg. Then my honourable friend and I can go into further detail. However, it seems to me that the first things we need to know are the numbers that make up the price of a gallon of gasoline.

Senator Roblin: I want to tell my honourable friend that the question of adjustment for the relative value of the dollar and the question of adjustment for the different size of gallon have been taken into account in this calculation.

Some of my friends say to me that if they want to go to Calgary the best thing to do is to drive to Highway No. 2 in North Dakota, turn west and keep going until they get to Montana, and then go north to Calgary, in spite of the fact that Alberta and Saskatchewan do not have gasoline taxes. They want to know where this made-in-Canada gasoline price is getting them.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I give an undertaking to try to get all of that information so that we can find out what the calculation comes out to.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

FARM BANKRUPTCIES—REQUEST FOR AID

Hon. Martial Asselin: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government. It is a very important one, and I would like to know the opinion of the Leader of the Government in the Senate on this subject. We know that farmers are having a very difficult time. Bankruptcies are increasing every month. In 1983, the number of farm bankruptcies was 32 times as high as in January 1982. They were 100 per cent higher than in January 1981. For many weeks and many months, farmers have been making representations. They came in force yesterday to meet members at the other place to emphasize their claims, since it seems the government is hesitant about tabling the appropriate legislation to help these people. In a case like this, should the Senate not consider the problem and refer the question to the appropriate Senate committee which would then invite the executives of agriculture associations in Canada to set forth their grievances before the Senate?

● (2050)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a number of factors go into making amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. I believe the government house leader in the other place has indicated that in response to a number of questions that have been put to him. There is legislation on the order paper in the other place that can, indeed, deal with some of the difficulties that are involved.

You must also bear in mind that we do not want to make amendments to the Bankruptcy Act or, indeed, any other act respecting credit in this country that will make it difficult for farmers to borrow money to do the financing they think necessary for their operations. Therefore, if we go too far with it, the reluctance of lenders is a problem that could visit difficulties on many farmers across the country.

I should remind my honourable friend that there is, in fact, an unacceptably high number of farmers in financial difficulty. If repayment schedules and interest rates were imposed on farmers and conditions were laid down regarding the recovery of moneys by a lender, then it may be that that would lead to a problem that would be a disadvantage to agriculture and the vast majority of farmers.

Banks and credit unions have significantly extended their long-term farm loans over the past few years, and in particular over the past six years. In 1981, of the $2.3 billion in long-term farm credit extended, approximately $793 million, or 32 per cent, was provided by the banks; $471 million, or 20 per cent, was provided by the federal government; $370 million, or approximately 16 per cent, was provided by individuals; $347 million, or 15.1 per cent, was provided by credit unions. The credit extended by the provinces—which is a significant amount—works out to $335 million, or approximately 14 per cent.

So I suggest to my honourable friend that we have to take a balanced approach to this problem. We do not want to precipitously do things that will make it more difficult for farmers generally to obtain the credit they legitimately require.

Senator Asselin: I thank the leader for his answer, but could he assure the Senate that before the Easter recess the government will introduce some measures to help those farmers who are experiencing severe problems? Could he assure the Senate that legislation will be introduced and passed by both houses as soon as possible?

Senator Olson: I can tell my honourable friend that legislation has in fact already been introduced. A private member's bill, Bill C-653—

Senator Asselin: A private bill?

Senator Olson: Yes. That was introduced by the member for Lambton-Middlesex. There is also Bill C-12 that was introduced by the government. That bill will assist farmers facing possible foreclosure by permitting them to file arrangements covering both secured and unsecured creditors. In addition to that, the Superintendent of Bankruptcy recently met with a number of people to discuss possible amendments to Bill C-12 to incorporate the major principles involved.

The task of getting legislation through the other place and the Senate is not one the Liberal Party can accomplish on its own—

Senator Asselin: Where is the problem?

Senator Olson: I do not want to be too heavy-handed, but my honourable friends opposite know exactly where the problem is.

Senator Asselin: Is it our fault?

Senator Olson: We would appreciate anything the opposition can do to help Parliament get on with essential public business and to lift the blockade that has been in effect in the other place for some time.

Senator Asselin: In the other place yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition promised the government leader that legislation, if put forward, would be adopted quickly, but the Leader of the Opposition has not received an answer from him.

Senator Olson: Those bills are already on the order paper. My honourable friends opposite know that.

The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport has an important bill before the House of Commons that the government would like to see passed. In addition to that, there are hundreds of thousands of taxpayers who would like to see Bill C-139 passed, for a variety of reasons. To date, legislation has not been passed except when time allocation has been introduced. If my honourable friends opposite think that is the way a democratic parliament ought to be run, well, that is not our view.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Does the leader accept no responsibility for three budgets during the same fiscal year? Does he not see any connection between the reluctance of Parliament to pass legislation and the fact that this is the third effort the government has made to have a decent tax bill passed? There has to be some relationship there. Before he castigates the opposition for doing its job, he ought to think about that.

Senator Olson: I was a member of the House of Commons for a number of years and sat in opposition for a while. I know that there has developed recently an unacceptable practice of delay, obstruction, filibuster and so forth that is not in keeping with the wishes of the majority to make a decision once in a while.

Hon. Lowell Murray: What about the majority of Canadians?

Senator Olson: If my honourable friend wants to bring that up, I can tell him that the composition of the House of Commons is a result of the majority view of Canadians at a properly constituted election, and they should respect that during the mandate that was given by Canadians.

Senator Asselin: You do not have the confidence of the Canadian people!

Senator Flynn: I should remind the Leader of the Government that the last election was won under false pretences. That is the reason they now have a mandate.

Senator Olson: That is the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition, and if that is the kind of interpretation he puts on it, then I think that is a clear demonstration—

Senator Flynn: Fraudulent!

Senator Olson: —of why the people of Canada lost confidence in him and his colleagues.

Senator Flynn: You will not say that on behalf of the people of your province, I am quite sure.

PETRO-CANADA
CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INVESTMENT OF FUNDS IN CAPE BRETON COAL VENTURE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers, although I can hardly resist some of the comments being made by the members of the opposition.

On February 17, Senator Phillips asked what funds Petro-Canada had used for investment in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, and if any of the Canadian ownership taxes had been diverted to the project.

Senator Muir then asked what amount of money had been provided by the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the Synfuels Project. That question was also taken as notice.

I cannot plead that it is a long answer this evening, but it is a very precise and accurate answer, so I shall read it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): For once!

Senator Olson: No, not for once. Quite often they are short.

In response to Senator Phillips' question, it can be said that Petro-Canada made a $300,000 investment in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. Those funds were a part of the company's total capital investment program which is financed through retained earnings, corporate borrowing and government equity. Petro-Canada's participation in this project was not financed through the Canadian Ownership Special Charge.

With regard to Senator Muir's question, the Cape Breton Development Corporation invested $300,000 in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government tell me what has happened to the question I asked him regarding the government's decision to place 25,000 to 50,000 unemployed in the armed forces, a policy which the Leader of the Government supports. Is there an answer to that question yet?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have an answer now. I thought I gave a full and accurate answer insofar as any decisions that had been made to date.

• (2100)

Senator Marshall: You did not give me an answer as to numbers.

Senator Olson: I understood the honourable senator asked me to give an estimate of the numbers, and I indicated to him very clearly at that time that I was not willing to make an estimate of the numbers until an assessment had been made of the spaces that are available and that could, in fact, be usefully employed.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS CONFERENCE—AGENDA

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Haidasz regarding the agenda of the First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Too late!

Senator Frith: The conference started today, but the response to his question, as to whether Senate reform will be one of the items on the agenda, is that the issue of Senate reform will not be on the agenda scheduled for the First Ministers' Conference. However, it will be raised by Premier Lougheed informally in conference with the other first ministers at 24 Sussex Drive.

Senator Haidasz also asked if the Government of Quebec notified the federal government as to whether it would attend the meeting. The Quebec government has informed the federal government that Premier Lévesque will, indeed, attend the conference. We saw today that he has attended.

As a supplementary question, the Leader of the Opposition asked what items will the federal government refuse to discuss. Aboriginal rights will be the focus of the conference. Other issues of interest to the first ministers will be informally discussed at 24 Sussex Drive.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—SITE OF PROPOSED FORESTRY CENTRE

Question No. 98 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

> With regard to the establishment of a new forestry centre in the Province of Newfoundland, (i) has the Federal Government undertaken a site selection process (ii) what sites were looked at and what conclusions were drawn as to the best site (iii) if a decision has been made, what is the location chosen?

Reply by the Minister of the Environment:

> (i) The Department of the Environment has established a Site Selection Committee to study the advantages and disadvantages of a possible relocation of the Newfoundland Forest Research Centre.
>
> (ii) The Committee has considered locations, in addition to St. John's, in Corner Brook, Gander, Grand Falls and Lewisporte. The Committee's conclusions are at present being discussed within the department and cannot be released at this time.
>
> (iii) No decision has yet been made concerning relocation of the Centre.

• (2110)

[Translation]

CANADA-KOREA FRIENDSHIP GROUP

MEETING IN KOREA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc rose pursuant to notices of Monday, October 25, 1982:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the meeting of the Canada-Korea Friendship Group, held in Korea from October 2 to 8, 1982.

He said: Honourable senators, if we compare the Republic of Korea to our Canadian provinces, the area of the former is slightly smaller than that of the Island of Newfoundland, while it has a very dense population of about forty-one million people, more than the total population of Canada. The capital, Seoul, has eight million people. With population figures such as these, it is not surprising that South Koreans should be interested in emigrating. There are about 40,000 Koreans in Canada.

The Republic of Korea is governed by a National Assembly whose Members are elected, with power being mainly in the hands of an executive body. The Cabinet consists of twenty-four members, including the Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister and twenty-two Ministers, with Ministries whose names are very similar to those of our Departments, except for one, the Ministry of National Unification. The Canadian delegation did, in fact, meet the Minister responsible for National Unification, the Hon. Shon Jae-Shik, who showed us some slides illustrating the crucial problem of unifying the two Koreas, and who also gave us material which explained in detail the representations made by South Korea to North Korea with a view to unifying the country.

I shall merely mention the titles of the papers that you have been given, if you will allow me, honourable senators, The first one is Advancing Peaceful Unification, Highlights from the New Year Policy Statement, by President Chun Doo Hwan, January 22, 1982, the Republic of Korea.

The second document that I have is numbered 028 of March 1982 and entitled South-North Dialogue in Korea, International Cultural Society of Korea, Seoul Korea.

I have another one entitled Inter-Korean Dialogue and Its Prospects.

Another document given to me by the minister responsible, the Honourable Shon Jae Shik is called Unification Problems of the Korean Peninsula and Formula for National Reconciliation and Democratic Unification.

Since it is a crucial problem in Korea, I thought it would be helpful to list the documents which were given to me and to comment on the problem of the unification of the two Koreas.

Among the proposals for reunification, the one dated January 1982 advocates the creation of an advisory committee of representatives of both countries who would be responsible for drafting the constitution of a Republic of Unified Koreas.

In the meantime, a seven-point agreement based on mutual knowledge would govern relations between the two Koreas. That proposition was rejected by North Korea, as were all others before. In addition, South Korea is in favour of both Koreas joining the United Nations. As honourable senators know, in a speech delivered before the General Assembly of the United Nations by our Secretary of State for External Affairs, Canada has already indicated that it would support any such application by South Korea.

The parliamentary delegation, of which I was a member as ad hoc vice-chairman, was not the first one to visit our South Korean friends. Indeed, we have had regular bilateral visits since the Korean conflict. Some 27,000 Canadians fought in that war and, unfortunately, 516 were killed. That fact was highlighted in a dramatic fashion when President Chun visited Canada last August: he did insist on visiting Quebec's Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue Hospital to meet with the 73-odd Canadian veterans of the Korean war who are hospitalized there. In addition, he laid a wreath at the cenotaph in commemoration of the Canadians who fought in the war.

The Koreans remember Canada's contribution and they show Canadians a gratitude brimming over with kindness and hospitality. They remember and speak highly of the Prime Minister's visit to Korea. During a special meeting of our delegation with the President of the Republic, His Excellency Chun Doo Hwan, who insisted on giving us 45 minutes of his valuable time, we noted to what extent a deep friendship has developed between our two countries. Before our visit in October 1982, other members of the Canada-Korea Friendship Group had been given the opportunity of making that trip. I know of two senators who made that trip before I did, and they are Senators Guay and Muir. I have to mention here the trip made by the Honourable Ed Lumley, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the one made by the Honourable Jean Marchand, Speaker of the Senate. The list of Canadians who have now visited the Republic of Korea is getting longer every year and is an indication of that friendship to which I referred a few moments ago. I had the privilege along with other members to meet the chairman of the Canada-Korea Friendship Group, a worthy parliamentarian, a born speaker, in full command of both the French and English languages as well as of his own Korean language, the Honourable Duwan Pong, David Pong for us, whose graciousness and hospitality I found most attractive. I wish to thank him for his courteousness towards the Canadian delegation and for all the activities which he had so well organized with great success. To him and to all the Korean parliamentarians our sincere thanks for having made our visit so pleasant, so informative and so relaxed on occasions.

Upon its arrival at the airport the Canadian delegation was presented with a bilingual program in the English and Korean languages. The leader of our delegation was the member for Cumberland-Colchester, Robert Carman Coates, Chairman of the Canada-Korean Friendship Group. He was on his seventh trip and was quite helpful to the members of the delegation who were on their first trip to Korea as in my case. From the Senate, Senator Guy Charbonneau showed great interest throughout this short trip. Among the other parliamentarians were the members for Gamelin, Arthur Portelance; for Halton, Otto John Jelinek; for Dunvernay, Yves Demers; for Portage-Marquette, Charles James Mayer; and for Portneuf, Rolland Dion. The secretary and clerk of the delegation, Mr. Rick Logan, showed constant concern for the welfare of the entire delegation. In all, those nine Canadians maintained the tradition of Korean-Canadian friendship. Certain senators have asked me how we were selected for such a trip and by whom. The executive council of this parliamentary association makes the decisions and selects senators and members of Parliament who already are members of the association. It is important that both Houses of Parliament be represented, that there be a rotation among members at each trip and that the delegation represent Canada as a whole rather than just the West or just the East, or only francophones or anglophones. It is important to select delegates who have varied interests such as, agriculture, sports, trade and commerce, industry, culture and so on. The executive council feels so much more at ease when the Canadian government is not involved in the funding of such a trip. Indeed, all expenses are paid for by the Koreans, either the private or the public sector. The delegates only had to pay for their travel expenses from Ottawa to New York and their stay in New York. The other expenses were handled by our friend Duwang Pong, the Chairman of the Canada-Korea Friendship Group. It would be appropriate at this point, on my behalf and on behalf of the delegation, to thank him and all the Koreans who contributed financially to that trip, and to express our appreciation.

I will attempt to give a few names, even though I am sure to forget some of them. I ask the forgiveness of those whose names I forget, but after five months it is difficult to remember the names of all the Korean and Canadian personalities we met during our trip.

I also wish to express my gratitude to all those who made our stay so enjoyable. I want to thank the Ambassador of the Republic of Korea in Canada, His Excellency Mr. Kyoo Hyun Lee, who was kind and courteous enough to offer us a farewell dinner party where he explained the problems and goals of his country. My thanks also to the Canadian Embassy in Seoul which, through its chargé-d'affaires, Mr. Lawrence T. Dickenson, welcomed us in Korea upon our arrival at the airport. In the absence of our Ambassador, Mr. Dickenson helped us through work sessions, accompanied us during our stay and gave us the opportunity to meet, during a luncheon given in his home, Canadian businessmen working in Korea who are a credit to our country.

The majority of these businessmen were in charge of several Canadian stands at the International Trade Fair or SITRA 82. Canada Day, fortunately, came up during our visit and the whole delegation was present at the official proclamation. Bob Coates, head of our delegation, delivered a well appreciated speech on our behalf at the invitation of the trade commissioner for Canada, Mr. Dickenson, after which we had the opportunity to visit some of the Canadian stands. Personally, I was mostly attracted by the one that explained the functioning of our CANDU nuclear reactor. Before that, we had had the opportunity to visit Wolsung where Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. has just finished building an important nuclear centre in that mountainous southern area of the country. We travelled from Seoul to Wolsung in an airplane and then a helicopter that Daewoo Enterprises had graciously provided us with. During that visit, we met some Canadians, men and women, who live there while supervising the construction of our nuclear reactor. We really had a great time with them. I want to assure my honourable friends that we made every effort possible during the trip to charm the Koreans into persisting in their endeavour to develop their own electrical power through other CANDU reactors that they would buy from us.

I mentioned Daewoo Enterprises, because during the same day we were invited to visit one of their plants, namely Daewoo Shipbuilding & Heavy Machinery Ltd., (OKPO). They explained to us that this shipbuilding operation is the largest in the world. During this most interesting visit, we saw a ship being built and received all sorts of technical information. And we dined splendidly. Moreover, we had the opportunity to visit the Daewoo offices in Seoul. I think it is appropriate at this time to thank once again the various presidents and vice-presidents of this corporation whose hospitality was equalled only by their kindness.

Another very interesting visit was that to the Seoul Sports Complex. We had elected as our leader during this visit Mr. Jelinek, our colleague from the other place, who, as honourable senators are certainly aware, is a former figure skating champion and, therefore, a sports specialist.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Did he give you a small exhibition?

Senator Leblanc: Of figure skating? In 1988, that is two years after holding the Asian Games, the Republic of Korea will host the Olympic Games. For this purpose, they have built over a period of five years, a sports complex which will be completed this year—compare this, if you wish, with the situation in Montreal before the Olympic Games. During our visit, the authorities provided us with a booklet describing the various buildings in full detail. I will dispense with all this literature and I will just give you a summary—

• (2120)

[English]

It has a total capacity of 200,000 persons, and the construction period is from 1977 to 1983. The complex includes a main stadium, a gymnasium, an indoor swimming pool, parking for 10,000 cars, a student indoor swimming pool, a student gymnasium, a baseball stadium and a velodrome. This is quite an achievement for them.

[Translation]

In addition to having the privilege of speaking with President Chun, as I said earlier, we met the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, His Excellency Jung Nae-Hink, in his offices, where he received us with his usual courtesy. We were also invited to sit in the Legislative Assembly during a budget debate and sat in seats usually reserved for ministers. We were told that this had never been done before and that no other foreign parliamentarian had ever sat in the Legislative Assembly itself. This visit was followed by a reception which was held in the rooms of the Legislative Assembly, which was also a first. Our host was the Honourable Lee Jong Chaw, Chairman of the House Steering Committee, and I wish to thank him for his hospitality.

As you will have guessed, on every occasion, the chairman Bob Coates transmitted the acknowledgements of the delegation in the English language, and as ad hoc vice-chairman, I had the honour of following him in French because we wanted to show the Koreans that our country is bilingual and that this bilingualism is demonstrated at every opportunity.

It also gives me pleasure to thank once again the Honourable Ha-Dae-Don, President of the Korea National Tourist Corporation (Daewongak) for his legendary hospitality, as well as the Honourable Hon-Yoo Chang-Soon, President of the National Red Cross of the Republic of Korea. My pronunciation of Korean words is perhaps not quite correct, but I am doing my best. I also want to mention the reception which was given by Roh In-Hwan, Executive Vice-President of the Federation of Korean Industries, where we met an impressive group of Korean businessmen who, with the support of the government, have over the last 20 years brought about a remarkable economic transformation, which is being hailed as an economic miracle in some circles, by going from an agricultural economy to an export-oriented industrial economy. In the early sixties, the GNP per capita amounted to $87 and in 1981, it had increased to $1,500 and is still rising, but at a somewhat slower rate. In order to improve the situation, the government has taken a number of economic measures that are viewed by observers as an attempt to restore confidence in the business community, such as the lowering of interest rates and the raising of the maximum money supply. Those measures are aimed at bringing inflation under control and promoting exports.

Mr. Choong Hoon Cho, President of Korean Air Lines, has also played a major role in the success of our mission. I am pleased to express to him as well to his vice-president, Mr. Ho Yong Chong, the gratitude of the 1982 Canadian delegation.

● (2130)

The Republic of Korea also has trade relations with other countries such as Japan, the United States, Australia, the Middle East, Europe and many others.

It is no wonder the Republic of Korea has close ties with the Americans since the United States ensures the security of that country with a force of 40,000 men and is Korea's main trade partner, immediately before Japan. In the energy field—which is most important for us—South Korea is largely dependent upon imports and must necessarily give high priority to its relations with countries richly endowed with natural resources, including Canada.

It must be kept in mind that our bilateral trade relations with Korea have considerably increased since the opening of our embassy in Seoul in 1973. In 1981, exchanges between our two countries had increased more than tenfold, totalling $1 billion. This boom is largely due to the rapid and continuing expansion of Canadian exportations in Korea, with the material and equipment intended for the CANDU nuclear reactor under construction ranking first, followed by various other semi-finished products and raw materials.

Canada will probably continue to benefit from joint efforts from the Korean government and business community in view of diversifying their supply sources. Korea is determined to improve its relations with Canada, among other nations, in order to create a more favourable climate leading to the conclusion of long term deals involving raw materials and semi-finished products. This could also boost the sale of Canadian manufactured products since Koreans will more frequently travel to Canada and will have the opportunity to become acquainted with other aspects of Canadian skill.

The recent acceleration in the growth of the Korean economy should open new markets for Canadian exports and should offer major opportunities for mutual investments, joint ventures and other economic activities. It should be noted that three Canadian banks have branches in Korea and that two Korean banks have just opened branches in Canada.

The Export Development Corporation has allocated more money to support Canadian exports, while feasibility studies and other research projects have been financed by both the International Development Research Center and the Canadian International Development Agency.

Honourable senators, I will not hold your attention for very much longer on this matter. I believe I am saying rather important things about bilateral relations between the two countries.

Our two economies being complementary, there is an opportunity to expand the trade relations between both countries, and I am convinced that bilateral parliamentary relations can only further the friendship between our two countries and promote our economic development.

It was the wish expressed by the members of the Canadian delegation of October 1982, and we encourage the Canadian businessmen to take advantage of these relations in the best tradition of Canadian business.

To all our Korean friends, I say Kamsahamnida, or thank you very much for your hospitality.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of this debate, I would like to congratulate our colleague, Senator Leblanc, for his speech and for the fact that he still speaks French without a Korean accent.

Now, if I may, I would like to move the adjournment of the debate on behalf of Senator Charbonneau so that he can speak on this subject, because I think he was a member of that delegation.

Senator Leblanc: Yes.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Charbonneau, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5429)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1983

MARCH 15, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, was referred, does, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, March 3, 1983, report as follows:

The Subcommittee on Estimates, chaired by the Honourable Senator Doody, was authorized by the Committee to examine and report to the Committee upon the expenditures proposed in Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983.

In obedience to the foregoing, the Subcommittee heard evidence from the following witnesses from the Treasury Board: The Honourable Herb Gray, P.C., M.P., President; Mr. H. J. Mullington, Assistant Secretary, Crown Corporations, Program Branch; and Mr. E. R. Stimpson, Director General, Budget Co-ordination Group, Program Branch.

Supplementary Estimates (C) totalling $1.9 billion represents the last regular Supplementary Estimates for the current fiscal year. These Supplementary Estimates, together with the 1982-83 Main Estimates of $74.2 billion, Supplementary Estimates (A) of $0.1 billion and Supplementary Estimates (B) of $5.3 billion bring the total 1982-83 Estimates to $81.5 billion.

Of the $1.9 billion in Supplementary Estimates (C), an amount of $1.1 billion or approximately 58 per cent, is for payments already authorized by statutes, hence this amount is non-discretionary. An amount of $732 million is for expenditures that Parliament will be requested to vote.

The Treasury Board supplied the Subcommittee with a list of $1 votes included in Supplementary Estimates (C) which is attached as an appendix to this report.

$1 Votes

The President of the Treasury Board provided explanations for the thirty (30) $1 votes. Officials of the Treasury Board indicated that the proliferation of $1 votes is the result of a preference to utilize existing funds by transferring them from one vote to another rather than to request authority for new funds. The Subcommittee was of the opinion that this was an inappropriate use of Supplementary Estimates. It felt that it would be more appropriate if funds lapse within votes, and Departments, in need of additional resources, go through appropriate Parliamentary channels and request additional funds.

Canada Student Loans Act

The Subcommittee questioned the need by the Canada Student Loans Programme for an additional $30 million. Senators were particularly concerned that lending institutions were receiving 16⅜ per cent interest on outstanding loans from the government while recipients were still at school and 15⅞ per cent directly from recipients who had graduated last year. The Subcommittee suggested that the government, in cooperation with designated lending institutions, consider introducing interest rates for the programme linked to the prime rate. The Subcommittee also expressed concern for the high rate of interest being paid by some recipients of the programme and that some form of interest relief should be considered.

Secretary of State

The Subcommittee noted that a contribution was made for the celebration of the 450th Anniversary of the arrival of Jacques Cartier in Quebec in the value of $500,000 (five hundred thousand dollars). Senators were particularly anxious to learn whether there was any commensurate contribution by the Province of Quebec either in the form of cash or services rendered.

Audit and Controls

The Subcommittee noted many examples of items requesting funds for additional grants and contributions. For example, in the Citizenship Programme of the Secretary of State, additional funds were requested for grants to implement projects under the Special Employment Initiatives Programme; this item appears both under Citizenship Participation and Multiculturalism. The Subcommittee expressed concern that sufficient controls be in place to ensure that such grants are made to qualified recipients and that appropriate procedures be set in place to assure this.

Professional and Special Services

Senators felt strongly that the expenditures for Professional and Special Services should be monitored and used minimally. When professional and special services are required and are not available within government, careful scrutiny is advised to ensure that the best services are obtained at the lowest price. Particularly, Senators felt that the use of non-government legal services and the fees charged, should be more competitive.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT,
Chairman.

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1982-83

The 30 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix I, according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an "*".

A. Six votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

B. Twenty-one votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

C. Two votes which amend previous Appropriation Acts. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II.)

D. One vote which authorizes an increase in the statutory limit of a Revolving Fund. (An additional explanation is provided in Appendix II.)

March 1983
Estimates Division

APPENDIX I

LIST OF $1 VOTES IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1982-83

Page	Department or Agency	Vote	Categories A	B	C	D
12	Agriculture	10c		x
12		15c	x
12		16c				x
28	Employment and Immigration	1c		x
30	—Canada Employment and Immigration Commission	5c		x
32		15c	x
34		20c		x
46	External Affairs	5c			x
46		10c	*	x
50		25c		x
52	—Canadian International Development Agency	35c	x
64	Fisheries and Oceans	1c		x
66		L11c			x
74	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	35c		x
80	Industry, Trade and Commerce	10c	x
80		25c		x
82		45c		x
92	Labour	5c	x
94	National Defence	1c		x
94		5c		x
94		10c	x
98	National Health and Welfare	1c		x
100		5c		x
104		15c		x
124	Public Works	30c		x
156	Transport	10c		x
156		11c		x
156		12c		x
156		35c		x
176	Veterans Affairs	1c		x

APPENDIX II

ADDITIONAL EXPLANATIONS

Category C—Amendment of Previous Appropriation Acts External Affairs

Vote 10c—Authority is requested to purchase all the issued and outstanding shares of the Company, Societa a Responsibilita Limitata Immobilaire San Sebastiano for the purpose of purchasing an official residence.

Explanation—The Department of External Affairs has been leasing an official residence in the Vatican, Holy See, since 1970. Approval was given in early 1983 to purchase this property as Canada's official residence in Rome. In order to purchase the current residence, on the expiration of the existing lease in April, 1983, it is necessary to acquire all issued and outstanding shares of Immobilaire San Sebastiano whose sole asset is the residence. The total cost of the residence will be $1.4 million, of which $1.2 million is required in 1982-83.

Fisheries and Oceans

Vote L11c—Authority is requested to increase the borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation by $10 million to a total of $30 million.

Explanation—The borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was increased to $20 million by Appropriation Act No. 1, 1974. As a result of inflationary pressure it is now proposed to increase this limit to $30 million to provide for the working capital requirements of the Corporation to 1986 and beyond.

Category D—Increase In The Statutory Limit of a Revolving Fund

Agriculture

Vote 16c—To authorize an increase of $1.8 million to a total of $2 million in the statutory limit of the Race Track Supervision Revolving Fund.

Explanation—The Race Track Supervision Revolving Fund was established in 1969-70 with a non-lapsing statutory limit of $200,000. This Fund operates under the continuing authority of the Adjustments of Accounts Act and in accordance with Section 33 of this Act the authority can be increased to provide sufficient working capital.

The reduction in the levels of betting and the new betting systems (telephone account betting, track to track betting) have resulted in insufficient working capital in the Fund to meet operating requirements. The increase in the limit is required to meet the operating loss anticipated in 1982 and to provide sufficient working capital for future years. The Fund is financed by revenues obtained through a levy on all pari-mutuel betting.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 16, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not ready to present a motion at this moment, but perhaps this would be an appropriate time to share with you some thoughts about our schedule for the next few weeks, at least between now and March 30, the date, according to the rules adopted in the other place, fixed for the Easter recess until April 11. Of course, although we are not bound by those rules we are affected by them.

Honourable senators, I am sure we will not receive any legislation this week, but there is the probability that next week we will receive Bill C-139, dealing with the income tax amendments and/or Bill C-143, the borrowing authority. We may also receive some non-controversial legislation or even a private member's bill next week. The difficulty is in knowing when this legislation will come before us because, as I understand the scheduling and the allocation of time in the other place, it could happen that those bills will not be passed in the other place before Wednesday.

Therefore, honourable senators, I propose that we adjourn today until next Tuesday at 8 p.m. I also propose that, as an experiment at least until the Easter adjournment, we sit on Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock; that we do not sit on Wednesday afternoons, in order to leave Wednesday afternoons for committee meetings and to take some of the pressure off Tuesdays, and thus avoid what has been happening and, indeed, happened this week when many senators had three meetings to attend at the same time; and that we sit on Thursday afternoons at 2 o'clock.

I suggest that we try this new formula until March 30 and perhaps even until the end of the session.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What difference is there between the end of March and the end of the session?

Senator Frith: I suggest that we try this until March 30, when the House of Commons will adjourn. I referred to this before the Leader of the Opposition entered the chamber.

We will then sit on Tuesdays at 8 p.m., which will allow committees to meet during the day on Tuesdays; we will not sit on Wednesday afternoons, to allow committees to meet on Wednesday afternoons—we will then have Wednesday evenings in our hip pockets, so to speak, if there is a need to deal with legislation; and we will sit on Thursdays at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

As for this week, honourable senators will have observed from notices sent to them that tomorrow the Subcommittee on National Defence will meet at 9 a.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will meet at 9.30 a.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, Subcommittee on the Estimates, will meet at 9.30 a.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 11.15 a.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will meet at 11.15 a.m.; and the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration will meet at 11.15 a.m.

• (1410)

My suggestion, honourable senators, is that we do not sit tomorrow, unless there is a strong feeling that we need Question Period tomorrow.

An Hon. Senator: We need an Answer Period.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): We give good answers to good questions.

Senator Frith: By not sitting tomorrow we could allow some of those committees to sit longer, if they wished. However, that would be an exception to our new formula, because the new formula will be: Tuesday at 8 p.m.; Wednesday, no sitting in the afternoon but an evening sitting, if necessary; and Thursday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

If honourable senators feel inclined to support that program, I will proceed with a motion to adjourn until Tuesday, March 22, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Before moving that motion, however, I will ask honourable senators to give an indication whether they are prepared to do so.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have been in consultation with my leader and I may say that program would suit us. It would enable us to have committee meetings on Wednesday afternoon, which we have been hoping for. The understanding would be that we would not sit on Wednesday evening unless we had to. That program looks sensible to us.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Question!

Senator Flynn: Are you asking the Speaker to call Question Period?

Senator Everett: No, I was simply hoping to bring the matter to a vote now.

Senator Frith: Judging from your response, I assume that honourable senators are prepared to support the program at least on an experimental basis for a few weeks.

Accordingly, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g):

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 22, 1983, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE HONOURABLE PAUL YUZYK

FELICITATIONS ON BEING NAMED KNIGHT-COMMANDER OF THE ORDER OF ST. GREGORY THE GREAT

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I take great pleasure in calling your attention to the fact that one of our colleagues, the Honourable Paul Yuzyk, has been honoured by being named Knight-Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great.

[Translation]

I refer to Senator Yuzyk's appointment to that Order. I think that I can say on behalf of you all that this honour is shared by the whole Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES, 1988

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport relating to what I am sure is now his pet project, the Calgary Winter Olympic Games.

In June of last year half a million dollars in seed money or start-up cost money was promised to the committee responsible for those games. From my reading of newspaper accounts I understand that $125,000 of that money was paid immediately. Can the minister tell us the current status of the payments of seed money? I must say that some reports I have read indicate that the funds are not being received by the committee.

● (1415)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I am very pleased to report that the other day our distinguished colleague, the Honourable Senator Bud Olson, and I delivered a cheque for $5 million to the Calgary Olympic organizing committee. This is in addition to an earlier payment of $500,000. The total amount paid by the federal government to the Calgary Olympic committee, therefore, is $5.5 million, which is the largest direct grant paid by any of the sponsoring parties to date. The $5.5 million amount is tangible evidence of our interest in the games and our determination to make them the most successful Winter Olympics in the history of the Olympic Games.

Senator Nurgitz: I wonder if the minister could tell us the source of the funds—that is, whether they come from consolidated revenue or out of the budget figures of his department.

Senator Perrault: The money represents a prepayment from non-tax revenue sources which, as the honourable senator is aware, will provide the basis of the federal contribution to the Calgary Winter Olympics.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, as a further supplementary, do I assume, therefore, that it would be the sports lottery program, which is still a matter to be dealt with in both houses of Parliament, that would provide the funds for that?

Senator Perrault: It is anticipated, honourable senators, that the funds will be derived from that source, but, as well, from other non-tax revenue sources. There is in preparation, for example, what I believe will be one of the most outstanding coin and stamp programs ever launched in connection with the Olympics. Much credit goes to the Calgary organizing committee for their fine work in this regard. They are receiving the fullest possible co-operation from the federal government in this area.

The preparations for bringing the games to a successful staging are moving along very well. We have in place our federal structure, our organizing committee, headed by Anita Szlazak working with Anthony Campbell and with Harold Millican. Mr. Millican, of course, is a respected Calgarian, known, I am sure, to the honourable senator. We have a good team in place. Together with these people I have had a number of meetings with representatives of the Calgary organizing committee.

There are some expressions of concern in the media as to whether Calgary will be able to move ahead and present the games. I feel confident that they will do so in magnificent fashion. There has been some discussion about sites for the downhill and for the slalom and other events. Any project as large as this is certain to generate a dialogue and questions relating to sites and planning. What I am saying is that in my view good progress is being made.

SPORT

SOCCER—1986 WORLD CUP COMPETITION—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN VENUE

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister. I am almost tempted to ask if he has anything in his pocket for the city of Winnipeg in Manitoba, but I will leave that for the moment.

I am aware of the announcement that the minister made in Vancouver during the Queen's visit. He made reference to world soccer. I thought that there was something mentioned about the fact that you had to wait for confirmation from Zurich, or somewhere, in this particular regard. Could you explain to the Senate what is taking place?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I appreciate that question from the honourable senator. I thank him and his Senate government colleagues from Manitoba for the support they are giving to Canada's World Cup application, and their helpful advocacy on behalf of the city of Winnipeg.

I am pleased to tell the Senate that there are nine playing sites involved in Canada's bid for the World Cup. The list includes Winnipeg. I am pleased to state that other centres included are Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, Hamilton, Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal. If a suitable stadium is constructed in the maritime provinces, honourable senators, I will be more than delighted to suggest that the maritime provinces be included as well.

Senator Guay: When is the final decision to be made, and how many teams can we expect to participate in this event?

Senator Perrault: There will be over 20 of the world's leading soccer teams participating in the tournament. The final site decision will be made in Stockholm on May 20.

• (1420)

Between now and May 20, I invite honourable senators to lend their support to this Canadian World Cup application by, for example, attending receptions in the various centres when the International Soccer Committee evaluates the proposed playing sites in Canada, by making use of their international contacts and through other efforts. This is a project which transcends party differences. For this reason, I know that Canada's bid will have the enthusiastic support of members of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, as well as the established and demonstrated assistance of the supporters of this government.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning a question that was asked in the other place last Thursday by the member for Portneuf. He asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration what progress had been made by his department and the Department of National Defence with respect to job creation under the NEED program. He was referring to the recruitment of unemployables into the forces.

The reply from the Minister of Employment and Immigration was that a job creation agreement had been signed with DND providing for 3,000 places for people on the NEED program.

Are we to take it that that is the total number that will be in any program with the Department of National Defence, along the lines of the concept we both support, namely, to take unemployables into the military?

[Senator Guay.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot answer in exactly the terms put by the honourable senator, but I believe the answer—and I would like to look at it more specifically—said that an agreement had been signed for 3,000 places out of the NEED program. But that is not the total, because I already know of an addition to that. It is not a large number, but it is the number that has been agreed to, where the commitment for the funding and agreement between the two departments have been arranged. There could be some more; indeed, there are likely to be more.

I know what my honourable friend is trying to do. I have seen him do it well in the past. He is trying to anticipate the budget. I want to caution him that he will not be able to draw that out of me.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government indicated that he knew of others, that he knows of numbers. Can he disclose that?

Senator Olson: Yes. I can tell him of a number, for example, in my home province, where there was an amount of approximately $500,000 allocated to the militia units, so that they could take in a larger number of applicants than their regular budget would allow. In many cases the infrastructure—such as spaces in the training units, where there was vehicle training or training in some other trade they had to offer—was such that they were not fully occupied, and what we needed was a financial commitment to pay the allowances to the recruits. It is a highly successful program.

Senator Marshall: Will the Leader of the Government tell us what is in the budget?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Having gone that far.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, as a supplementary question on the reply given by the Leader of the Government on the extra contribution to the Alberta militia, was this available also in other provinces?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there was an option with respect to the allocation of some special employment program. After looking over what could be done immediately, I made a recommendation to the government and to the Department of National Defence that we would probably get better value for the funds, for that $500,000, than some of the other options that were open. But other provinces had options.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—CONFERENCE ON RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In May 1981 I had the privilege of heading a Canadian delegation to Zimbabwe, to a conference on reconstruction and development which took place in Salisbury. I had with me an interesting delegation, and Canada made a commitment to Zimbabwe. It was the first anniversary of the country's independence, and because it had been a year of orderly and peaceful transition Canada made a commitment of $50 million in aid over a five-year period.

● (1425)

For those of us who have watched the scene in Zimbabwe, it is a matter of real distress to see the recent developments that have taken place in that very beautiful country. I am sure the Senate will allow me to repeat one or two things I said about that country in my report to the Senate. There was a rather orderly transition from the days of the Rhodesian rebellion and Ian Smith. I have personally met many of the people involved in the political scene there: Mr. Nkomo, Mr. Mugabe and others. After visiting the country, I came away with the feeling that basically it was heading in the right direction. However, I can recall saying to the Senate that the major problem was the tribal differences that still seemed to exist because they could lead to trouble in that beleaguered country.

I have tried to keep abreast of what is happening in Zimbabwe. I listened with interest to reports on the 5th Brigade, which is not an army unit but the personal support force of Prime Minister Mugabe which was trained by the North Koreans. I have followed what has happened to Joshua Nkomo and read with distress of the number of atrocities that have taken place there. Some of us are rather fearful that the situation could become quite serious.

My question to the minister is: Is Canada considering withholding any part of the commitment made at the ZIMCORD Conference? I understand that Sweden has taken such action. I would also ask the leader—and he may have to take this question as notice—to report on the part Canada is playing in this particular situation, and on whether Canada is able to exert any influence for the good. The fact is that Canada is a highly respected nation in the eyes of Zimbabwe. I might say that I had the privilege of cutting the ribbon opening the new Canadian chancellery where we installed the Canadian high commissioner. As I say, we were welcomed with open arms by our friends in Zimbabwe and that is all the more reason why Canada must be concerned with the events there. I ask for a reply from the Leader of the Government at his earliest convenience.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to take as notice some parts of Senator Buckwold's question. However, I do want to acknowledge that Canada did, in fact, pledge $50 million in development assistance for the period 1981 to 1986 at the ZIMCORD Conference in Harare. I can tell the honourable senator that some of that funding has, in fact, been spent in such areas as enhanced funding for teachers, for teacher training, and some of it has been directed through the World University Service of Canada.

With regard to the other part of the honourable senator's question—and I shall try to obtain a more complete answer soon—we are very concerned about the reports of strife in Zimbabwe and the apparent escalation of that strife over the past few months. We hope that there will be a renewal of trust and confidence which will put an end to this insurgency and restore peaceful conditions. While seeking further information, we are also drawing our concern to the attention of the Zimbabwe authorities and conveying the hope that peace and conciliation will replace the conflict there.

That is about all I can say at this point. I shall try to get a more complete answer for Senator Buckwold with respect to the remaining parts of his question.

● (1430)

Senator Buckwold: I have a supplementary for the Leader of the Government. It would appear to me that if the nations of the world which gathered in Zimbabwe in 1981 and pledged several billion dollars for reconstruction would indicate to that country that those funds, committed to aid in Zimbabwe, could be in jeopardy unless some kind of settlement was made of the interior tribal warfare, it may have a very salutary effect in bringing these two parties together and thereby bring peace to that area. I would ask, when the question is answered, to have some comment on that particular statement.

Senator Olson: Your statement will be noted in the request for information.

AGRICULTURE

ATLANTIC REGION VETERINARY COLLEGE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. As he will recall, I have asked him before about the progress on construction of the veterinary college in the city of Charlottetown to serve the maritime region. Since I have made those inquiries there have been some very positive developments in that it appears that his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, now realizes that when the distinguished Premier of Nova Scotia makes a commitment, that commitment is as good as gold, and that the fine work of that great diplomat, Premier Lee of Prince Edward Island, has brought about a splendid consensus.

I am seizing this opportunity to praise the government, a situation that does not often arise, and I would like Senator Argue to convey to his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, that, in the light of his positive response on this project, we in the maritime region are not only prepared to forgive his former apostasy but even to forget it and congratulate him and the government for forward steps in what I am sure will be a most splendid institution, as I am sure the minister here, as a distinguished agriculturist, will realize.

I would ask him to convey my remarks to his colleague and bring the Senate up to date on the present status of the federal contribution to this most exciting and needed project.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I thank Senator Macquarrie for his remarks. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will be very pleased to learn of them. We have all been interested in the veterinary college for eastern Canada and the Atlantic provinces. There have been some difficulties in the past related to the position taken by the Premier of Nova Scotia, but I am glad to hear that agreement has been reached.

I shall be very happy to convey the honourable senator's remarks to the Minister of Agriculture, and I join with him in looking forward to the fulfilment of this worthwhile project.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government. It is in reference to the question I asked him yesterday in regard to the practice of gating inmates, and denying them a fundamental right that has been confirmed by the Parliament of Canada. This right is being denied them on the basis of a decision by an administrative board which has no more ability to predict capacity for violence than any member of this house.

I draw this to your attention, honourable senators, because it is urgent. I understand that at the moment there are ten inmates being denied that right to be released from custody to supervision under the provisions of mandatory supervision.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I took that question as notice yesterday and I realize its urgency, as Senator Hastings has so eloquently pointed out, but I am sorry, I do not have an answer today.

Senator Hastings: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. I wonder if the Leader of the Government, in his discussions with the minister on the subject of mandatory supervision, would draw to the attention of the minister that we have just gone through the exercise of passing an act which says that a Canadian is a Canadian. That means that a Canadian who is an inmate in a penitentiary in Ontario is entitled to the same treatment as an inmate confined in a federal penitentiary in any other province, and the treatment of those inmates must be fair and just. Any procedure whereby that right is revoked in the province of Ontario is not in keeping with the spirit of that act. In other words, a Canadian is a Canadian wherever he is.

Senator Olson: I will see that the minister responsible gets a copy of Senator Hastings' comments.

● (1435)

ENERGY

OIL AND NATURAL GAS PRICING

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government regarding energy prices in Canada.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that the increase of $4.00 a barrel in the price of old oil, which was planned for July 1 of this year, will now not take place in view of what has happened to the world price. But there is another energy source which is caught in somewhat the same bind—that is, natural gas. I am not aware that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has made any statement regarding the pricing of domestic natural gas.

[Senator Argue.]

As the Leader of the Government knows, natural gas is programmed to rise by 25 cents per thousand cubic feet every six months from 1981 to 1986, regardless of what happens to the world price of oil. There is no connection between the two. The fixed increase per 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas every six months from now until 1986 is 25 cents. The modifying condition is that the gate price of this escalated domestic gas will not rise beyond 65 per cent of the blended cost of old and new oil. There is to be that differential.

Up until the present time, the government has been able to increase the price of natural gas by 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and still have a margin that it taxed under the natural gas and gas liquids tax, which made up the difference between the escalated price of natural gas and the 65 per cent figure. The government, therefore, was able to collect a tax on natural gas. It now appears that that will no longer be the case, and if it wants to maintain the 65 per cent ratio between the price of natural gas and the blended price of oil in Canada it will have to pay a rebate to someone, so the tax will be a negative tax instead of a positive one.

This is a serious matter and an important one to the users of natural gas, and to those who sell natural gas.

I should like the Leader of the Government to tell us, when he can, what the policy of the government will be. Is it going to change the agreement on the 25 cent escalation steps; is it going to change the 65 per cent ratio; will it subsidize the price with this negative natural gas and gas liquids tax, or will the policy involve all three? What is the government's policy position on this matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, what Senator Roblin has just described is a very volatile situation with respect to some of the prices and, indeed, some of the factors in the formula that take into account those prices at the end with respect to what the base price of natural gas will be, as well as the tax.

Not very long ago, of course, Senator Roblin will recall that the amount of tax on natural gas was reduced by 29 per cent because of the factors that he has just described forming part of the formula.

It may be that one can look ahead and see a situation where some of the numbers and percentage factors that go into the gas pricing formula would be significantly different from the circumstances envisaged when the energy agreement was signed. I really do not wish to comment on that at this point, although I realize he has asked me what the government's policy position will be with respect to that.

As Senator Roblin can well imagine, there are intense discussions going on now with respect to a number of things in the agreement, and I presume those discussions would include this, although there is more to it than that because we also have some international considerations to take into account with respect to natural gas pricing.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, has slated some meetings with the Minister of Energy for Alberta later this week. I do not think it would be productive for me, or indeed anyone else, to make any anticipatory remarks with respect to what might develop as a result of those discussions.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps I should draw the leader's attention to the fact that, with respect to oil, a decision has already been made. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has looked ahead with respect to oil. He has said, "We are not going to increase it by $4 a barrel on July 1." Therefore, he has taken a stand. He has announced policy. I submit that the situation with respect to natural gas is pretty much the same. The same factors are involved—escalating price, lower world oil prices and a particular situation where if the government does not do something it is going to be caught in a very expensive, negative tax because of this increase of 25 cents every six months.

• (1440)

While I grant the leader all the difficulties of the situation that he has mentioned—I will not fight about those—my point is that with respect to oil the minister has looked ahead and made the decision that he is not going to increase the price. Why can we not expect the same kind of decision with respect to natural gas?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I gave a perfectly reasonable and logical response when I said that we should at least wait until some discussions have taken place between the two ministers who are most directly responsible. We should not try to anticipate what their agreement, if they come to one, is going to be. I have already said those meetings are going to take place later this week, although I do not think it would be reasonable for me to say positively now that they are going to reach an agreement. Surely, in the name of everything that has common sense attached to it we should not try to anticipate what the conclusions of the discussions are going to be. As Senator Roblin has pointed out, we can try to add up some of the factors that have to be taken into account, but surely they ought to have a discussion about that and a number of other matters that are of great concern to both the federal government and the governments of the producing provinces. We should not try to state in advance what they are going to agree to.

Senator Roblin: I should like to state what my problem is here. I cannot conceive how the minister can set the price of oil, which is one of the salient facts in connection with the 65 per cent ceiling on natural gas, without considering the same matter. If he says it has not been considered, I take his word for it, but all I can say is that it is a funny way of running the store.

Senator Olson: You cannot come to that conclusion because I do not think I said that it has not been considered. I said an agreement or an announcement has not been made. Of course, the minister is considering these things, but with respect to the price of oil what the minister said—I want to be somewhat careful about this and also put in a reservation that it might not be entirely accurate—was that according to his calculation the international price of oil came down sufficiently and that on the way down it did, in fact, come to the 75 per cent point, or so close to it that any further anticipated increase on July 1 was not warranted under the formula. That is somewhat more clear than the other very complex factors that go into the price of gas and what could spin out of all that. As I said when we talked about this situation earlier, there was, indeed, a 29 per cent decrease in the federal tax on gas.

Senator Roblin: The minister made my point for me perfectly, and obviously the one follows from the other. Since I cannot get any more out of him on that line, I now ask him if he will ask his colleague to let us know when he is going to make an announcement with respect to the price of natural gas.

Senator Olson: Yes, and I think I can anticipate some of the answers. If he asks when, then I will say it will be after he has had discussions with the producing provinces, particularly Alberta, the major producing province. He has a meeting slated for Friday with the minister there.

Senator Roblin: Tell me on Tuesday.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, by way of a supplementary, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether he has been able to obtain the information I asked him for two weeks ago, and again last evening?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am glad Senator Murray asked that question again today because I did have the exchange looked up. It took place on March 2 and is reported at page 5422 of Hansard. When Senator Murray asked a series of questions yesterday, he said that I undertook to give him an answer. According to page 5422, in response to the question on the interpretation of the agreement, I said:

> Honourable senators, I am not prepared to answer that question.

The point is that I did not give him an undertaking to get a reply to the question in the way it was put.

I am not prepared to give an interpretation on the basis that Senator Murray put it, but if he does not have a copy of the agreement that was signed on September 1, 1981, I brought one with me, and he can read it for himself.

Senator Murray: Indeed, and I can draw my own conclusions from it.

Senator Olson: They are usually wrong.

Senator Murray: What I am asking the minister to do is to tell the Senate and the people of Canada what the position of the Government of Canada is with regard to the provisions of that agreement in the event of a decline in the world price of oil. I see no reason why the minister cannot obtain that information and give it to us as a statement of policy of the Government of Canada.

I was under the impression that he had undertaken to do that two weeks ago and so was he, because I notice from page

5435 of Hansard of yesterday, March 15, that the following exchange took place. I said:

> Surely, the minister can tell us that or can obtain the answer from the Prime Minister or from his colleague, Mr. Chrétien.
>
> SENATOR OLSON: I gave an undertaking to do that some time ago.
>
> SENATOR MURRAY: Two weeks ago.

That exchange indicates pretty clearly that not only I but also the minister was under the impression that he had given such an undertaking.

Senator Olson: On a serious note, I do not care whether Senator Murray wins certain debating points or not, although he probably does. The point that I think has to be made is that if I gave any undertaking it certainly was on the basis that there would have to be some discussions between the principal parties involved in the agreement, because there are new circumstances that were not provided for in the agreement. If you want to think that is strange or untrue, then go ahead. You cannot laugh it off because there are circumstances surrounding the international price of energy and factors contributing to those circumstances that were not known or, indeed, not anticipated at the time of the signing of the agreement by both sides.

Senator Murray: I did not write down the words but the record will show that the minister said just now that circumstances have arisen that were not provided for in the agreement. Is that then the position of the Government of Canada—that the agreement does not make any provision in respect of a decline in world oil prices?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I told Senator Murray this before, but just in case he did not hear it correctly, or misinterpreted what I said, I will repeat it. He was asking me whether or not there was agreement as to the interpretation by both levels of government. I want him to know clearly that discussions involving this matter as well will be going ahead in the next few days, and I did not intend to anticipate the answer of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Nothing is being hidden in that reply. Whether my honourable friend likes it or not, there are major factors that have significantly changed since the signing of the agreement.

PARLIAMENT

REFORM—CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION REPORT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. An article in today's Globe and Mail reported:

> Canada's lawyers told the country's lawmakers yesterday that they do a poor job of passing legislation and examining public expenditures.

● (1450)

The article mentions a 120-page report of the special committee studying parliamentary reform. Was that report tabled in this chamber, or does the Leader of the Government have copies available?

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not think it was tabled in this chamber, and, frankly, I do not see why it should be. I believe the report relates to a study done by the Canadian Bar Association respecting Senate reform. If that is where the quote emanates from, I guess even lawyers have a right to an opinion if they want to have one.

Senator Marshall: Evidently, they appeared before a committee studying parliamentary reform. To my mind, parliamentary reform means reform of the whole of Parliament—the House of Commons and the Senate. If that is true, why is it not called a House of Commons committee?

I would also point out that the report really castigates Parliament. It states that Parliament has a sorry record in passing even the most routine, non-controversial laws.

Evidently, a committee on Senate reform is to be set up, constituted of senators and members of the other place. What I cannot understand is why we are relying on a committee of the other place when, after 115 years of Parliament, it is said that it cannot pass even the most routine laws. It has taken them up to four years to pass the garnishment law. I should like to know why a committee studying the reform of the Senate should be a joint committee when there already appears to be a report of a joint committee outlining what is wrong with Parliament and pointing out that it is not doing a very good job.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think there is some misunderstanding, at least on Senator Marshall's part. I wonder if this is a committee on parliamentary reform sponsored and handled by the Law Society or the Canadian Bar Association.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It is the Canadian Bar Association.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is a committee of the Canadian Bar Association.

Senator Olson: It is not a parliamentary committee. The honourable senator certainly has the right to disagree with the report, but I do not think he should expect me to intervene in their discussions about parliamentary reform. Perhaps they will make some comments with which both Senator Marshall and I will disagree, and we do have that right.

Senator Marshall: Am I correct that it is a committee that has come up with the concept of parliamentary reform affecting the other place?

Senator Olson: I do not think so.

Senator Frith: It could be, but I believe it is a committee of the Canadian Bar Association.

Senator Marshall: In order to clarify the situation, I would like to have a copy of the report. Can that be provided?

INDUSTRY

PHARMACEUTICAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—EFFECT OF PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, on December 1, 1982 I asked the Leader of the Government a question concerning pharmaceutical research and development and the effect of Patent Act amendments. I would appreciate having a reply to that question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make an inquiry to see if I can bring the matter forward.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in view of the announcement that the Senate will not sit tomorrow, March 17, I wonder whether the leader would permit me to express my sincere best wishes to all my Irish friends on the occasion of St. Patrick's Day.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is leave granted?

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I feel moved by the expression of devotion to St. Patrick by Senator Tipperary O'Bosa.

A certain compulsion makes me rise to my feet on St. Patrick's Day because, being an immigrant boy, the mention of that saint's venerable name leads me to nostalgic thoughts of the mists of Ireland, the valleys and the sea. I am thinking now of the view of Donegal Bay. As a young boy, I would travel over the mountains and down into the verdant valleys and then suddenly see that sweep of the Atlantic—that wide expanse of golden sand and tolling waves.

On this occasion, I think all of us must feel a certain nostalgia for the Emerald Isle. Even my good friend, Senator Bosa, has been affected by its beauty.

I want to join in a tribute to those who hold high office in the United States, who have decided to refrain from taking part in the parade scheduled for tomorrow because they do not wish to associate with those who do encourage violence, bloodshed and brutality in my small homeland. I admire the courage of such men as Senator Kennedy, who have decided they will not associate themselves with this great, traditional parade because on this occasion it may mean associating with people who espoused violence as a means of achieving justice and peace in Ireland.

Honourable senators, I should like to point out that this is March 16 and that St. Patrick's Day is on March 17. There has always been confusion about the date. There was a time when it was considered that St. Patrick's Day should be celebrated on March 9. Some thought it should be celebrated on March 8.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: That's the Irish for you.

Senator Thompson: A wise, renowned priest, Father Mulcahy, intervened when the argument put forward by both sides became heated. He said to them, "Now, boys, if you add nine and eight together you'll get 17; and that's the date we will celebrate."

I hope another Father Mulcahy comes to Ireland to encourage those on both sides, who now favour suspicion and violence, to practise some such compromise addition and to arrive at an acceptable solution, compatible with the beauty and tranquility of that wonderful island.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to add a word or two on behalf of another group of immigrants in another part of the country. I and my people came to Canada at about the same time as Peter did, although I may have become a Canadian citizen just a year later.

Hon. Jack Marshall: How did you both get in?

Senator Doody: I don't know about Peter, but I had considerable difficulty.

On behalf of more than 40 per cent of the population of Newfoundland who can proudly say they are of Irish extraction, I would be quite remiss in not responding to Peter's sentiments. It is a tribute, indeed, to know that so many Newfoundlanders have Irish backgrounds. Some 300 years ago, my people had the exquisite good sense to leave that delightful island and to head for a better one.

To those latecomers and to all of you who have never had the opportunity of being associated with Ireland, I would like to bid you the "Top o' the morning!" and I hope you have as good a day tomorrow as I intend having.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, only because Tipperary was mentioned do I feel constrained to say that my grandfather, Thomas Royce, came from Tipperary.

Also, I am grateful to Senator Thompson for drawing to our attention that on at least one occasion Irishmen compromised.

GRAIN

CANOLA—CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, if I may digress from this most interesting subject to another one of more immediate concern to western Canada, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

I received a press release entitled, "Canola Acreage Increase Needed". The press release indicates that we may not be able to meet our commitments in external markets unless there is a substantial increase in acreage.

My understanding has been that the main resistance to increasing acreage has been due to some fear on the part of farmers regarding price. It has not been adequate to encourage greater planting.

Would the minister give us an indication as to what the situation is and whether we can expect better prices and a subsequent increase in acreage?

● (1500)

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, it is rather difficult for anyone to forecast what prices may be. In a relative sense, canola prices are somewhat better today than they have been, and in relation to the current prices for wheat and barley there is some indication of an incentive to producers to increase their canola acreage.

The Wheat Board has been most successful in exporting wheat. We have been exporting it at record levels. We have large supplies of barley this year. The price for feed barley on the world market is quite low, however, and there is an indication that unless barley prices improve there may well be a substantial deficit in the Wheat Board barley account.

Canola presents a particular opportunity for Canadian producers in western Canada, because there is a substantial market for canola in Japan, one that approaches a million tonnes a year. There is a substantial market for canola in Canada as well, because our crushing industry today is short of canola.

Because we are having difficulty meeting the demand for canola in the Japanese market, and bearing in mind that the Canadian crushing industry is in short supply of canola, the challenge to the Canadian canola producers is to increase production to meet those market demands. I am confident that our producers will respond to that challenge because the opportunity is there. Certainly, if they do not respond, if Canada does not take advantage of this important market opportunity, foreign rapeseed producers will step in and take the opportunity away from us.

I visited the European Economic Community and I discussed with them their canola situation; they indicated to me that they are in the process of improving their varieties of rapeseed so that in the near future, within the next three or four years, their rapeseed will be of a quality equal to the Canadian canola.

Another factor is that the rate of production on acreage in the European Common Market is about two to three times as great as the rate of production in Canada. That is partly because theirs is a winter type of rapeseed. Their production of rapeseed, as it is referred to in the European Economic Community, is about twice as high per acre as the production in Canada. Their support prices are almost twice the level of those received by the Canadian canola producers. They recognize that there is a need, from their point of view, to increase production and to improve their varieties, and there is every likelihood that an increased production of those improved varieties will be forthcoming.

In my opinion, the Canadian producers of canola have only two or three years in which to increase their production and to set their house in order, to be able to meet what will be much greater competition in the years ahead. To meet that challenge it is imperative that our Canadian canola producers this year increase by a substantial amount their acreage seeded to canola.

[Senator Molgat.]

THE ESTIMATES, 1982-83

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, it is quite a transition in mood for me to speak on this subject. A few moments ago I was quite euphoric in thinking about St. Patrick's Day, but now I have to get down to the mundane and rather disheartening question of the excessive spending of this irresponsible government.

Yesterday I had the honour to report the supplementary estimates (C) on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. I must make clear that there is a broad distinction between reporting and supporting these estimates. I was honoured to report them, but I cannot support them at all.

This was the first set of estimates considered by the newly-constituted subcommittee. In considering them we had before us the President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Herb Gray, and several of his senior officials. They did a masterful job of defending the supplementary estimates, but I must say, quite candidly, that even after their spirited and able defence some of us were still not completely convinced.

When you take the huge sum of money in these estimates, $1.9 billion, together with the 1982-83 main estimates of $74.2 billion and the supplementary estimates (A) of $0.1 billion and the supplementary estimates (B) of $5.3 billion, you find that total government spending, as outlined in these various sets of estimates, is a round sum of $81.5 billion.

I deliberately use the expression "as outlined in the estimates," because the types of estimates vary from year to year. In some years certain things are included that are not included in other years. The system seems to change from time to time and it becomes increasingly difficult to make comparisons. Indeed, one sometimes wonders if the process of estimating is still legitimate. Perhaps we should really be referring to a platform or floor below which government spending will not go but on the basis of which we should be quite prepared to accept various supplementary estimates as times goes on. In other words, the main estimates would be considered as the base or platform from which the government will continue to take off and to advance further spending programs.

I hardly need to point out that the increase in spending is in excess of the six-and-five guidelines. That is hardly a surprise. Other exceptions have already been pointed out in various debates in this house.

Among the major items in supplementary estimates (C) are $402.6 million for the CMHC, $130 million compensation to the railways, and almost $20 million for the Secretary of State for fitness and amateur sport.

I felt compelled to mention that last item since the minister is present in the chamber. I am sure he is delighted to know that he has been fully funded. Incidentally, that $20 million includes $10 million for the Olympics Winter Games, the Summer Canada Games and so on.

Also included in the supplementaries is $7.8 million for the purchase of tomatoes by the Agricultural Products Board. When you consider that expenditure together with the fact that Canagrex does not exist yet, you can see that we can look forward to great things in government-approved vegetable purchases over the coming years.

There is $4.5 million for subsidies to workers for the purchase of metric tools. Apparently, in the process of converting to the metric system the government is helping those who need to obtain new metric equipment.

I should point out that there is an amount of $431,000 to be put towards the cost of the visit of Her Majesty, and a $500,000 amount to be put towards the celebration of the visit of Jacques Cartier, who arrived some 450 years before.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: There is the additional cost of servicing the gargantuan debt load of the country, which amounts to approximately $536 million. That is a statutory item. Indeed, about 64 per cent of the total is statutory. In other words, it must be paid. It has already been ordained by law and the government has no option but to pay it. Perhaps one of the most frightening aspects about budgeting and spending these days is the fact that so much of the spending power of the government is pre-committed. That trend seems to be growing. There seems to be less and less leeway and more and more commitment, and as new programs, new policies, emergencies and contingencies develop, obviously we go further and further into greater and greater deficits. The greatest single amount is the debt servicing: interest, bonds, discounts, premiums, commissions and so on.

There is an additional $36 million in transfer payments to the provinces. The UIC fund has had to have another transfusion of some $182 million. Honourable senators spent quite a bit of time discussing that matter, since it is one of concern to many of us because of the way the UIC program is managed. The last time the funding or contributions in the UIC program were adjusted there was an increase. I understand at the time of the previous adjustment it was a decrease, because times were pretty good and the fund was in good shape. It has been suggested that perhaps a formula or system should be set up in an effort to make it more equitable, or more of an average.

• (1510)

One of the most unusual supplementary votes is one to the Secretary of State of some $67 million for educational support programs. There is $37 million for post-secondary education, and $30 million for Canada student loans. In themselves there is nothing very unusual about these votes; they are quite necessary. With regard to the student loans situation, however, there is an item that is passing strange. I guess it is a reflection of government/bureaucratic thinking. It seems that in certain specified times an interest rate is set, is fixed, and will stay constant for a given year. When the interest rate is set at one level it stays set for that particular year. The current rate which the government is paying to chartered banks for student loans is 16⅜ per cent. This was fixed last June, and so now we are stuck with it, or, more precisely, I guess the students are stuck with it, eventually, despite the fact that the interest rates are so much lower now; but government has refused to go along with the banks' offer of prime-plus-one because they felt—I do not know what they felt, but anyway, they have refused it. I understand that the banks are still willing to go along with prime-plus-one, and I suggest it would certainly be in the interests of good management, and in the interest of students who have to pay these amounts back, that this item should be looked at very carefully.

Perhaps in the same vein the government should try to find a way of refunding or forgiving at least a portion of this amount that the students have to pay in the way of additional interest rates which are not their fault but for which they are still being held responsible.

There is a $21 million payment to PetroCan. Of course that is becoming traditional now. We always have a payment to PetroCan in the estimates.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Government): For what?

Senator Doody: This particular $21 million is for the overseas work of PetroCan. There is a corporation set up called PetroCan International. The item in question refers to a payment to Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation. I understand that the Government of Canada, through PetroCan, is assisting countries in the developing world in their search for resources, in the way of oil or gas, and to help them solve their balance-of-payments problems, to fulfil their energy requirements, and so on.

One of the unfortunate aspects of this particular set of estimates, at least from my point of view, is the fact that there is a reversion to the $1 votes syndrome. There are no less than 30 $1 votes in these supplementary estimates. Of these, 21 are simple transfers from one vote to another in a particular department. These are defended by Treasury Board with the suggestion that it is far easier, and makes more sense, to transfer these funds rather than let them lapse and then ask Parliament for new funding for another program. I disagree with that. I think that whenever the funds voted for a particular program are not used by that program they should lapse, and Parliament should be consulted as to the allocation of new funds or as to the allocation of funds for another program. That is a difference of opinion. I thought we in the committee had convinced Treasury Board of that during the past two years, and that they were coming around to using fewer $1 votes.

There are nine other $1 votes in here, some of which represent new programs. Perhaps these are even more serious from our point of view. One of them is the purchase of a building in the Vatican for a Canadian embassy there. Why that has to be done through supplementary estimates and not through the regular proceedings of the House of Commons is something I cannot answer and with regard to which I could not get an answer from Treasury Board.

In any event, honourable senators, I have not talked about many of the other items that I will get into when the main estimates are before us, such as the government's interest in the crown corporations, and my own on-going concern with regard to de Havilland, Canadair and so on. I simply report on this particular set of estimates. As I say, I do not support them, but simply report. I thank you for your patience and pass the estimates to the Senate.

Senator Flynn: No comment from the government?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure whether any other senator wishes to speak on this order, but to provide an opportunity to do so, I will move adjournment of the debate, and then yield to anyone who does want to speak.

Senator Flynn: We should have a reply from the government on the comments from this side.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING, LONDON, ENGLAND

Hon. Earl A. Hastings rose, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, December 8, 1982:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-eighth Annual Meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly, held at London, England, from 14th to 19th November, 1982, and to the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the inquiry standing in my name pertains to the Twenty-eighth Annual Meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in London. The London meetings represented the twenty-eighth annual session of the North Atlantic Assembly, an assembly which, over the past 20 years, has become a well established, worthwhile parliamentary institution of Western Europe and North America. In a world that daily becomes more interdependent it stands as a bridge of understanding across the Atlantic, with its 16 members representing countries that lie thousands of miles apart on this globe, but that are, at the same time, conscious of their common interests and their determination to defend their liberties, and dedicated to the preservation of peace.

In fulfilling its progress, it is essential that Canada play its role on the international stage. Not only must we strive to be strong at home in defence of our institutions, but we have an obligation to understand the democratic concerns and aspirations of the people in other countries with which we are allied. In short, we must practise, as Canadian parliamentarians, in real terms, international democracy. In this process, over the years the assembly has played an important central role. It provides a forum where the different countries can discuss together problems that are common to all of them. We can seek solutions from shared experiences and can learn from each other. We can remind our member governments of those concerns and those aspects of the alliance which continue to give concern to the people we have the honour to represent in our various parliaments. In these institutions it is essential that the backbench members of Parliament should be able, through committee meetings, through plenary sessions, through meetings with experts, to share our views and our experience on behalf of the people we represent. It is essential also that governments heed these views and representations.

At the recent meeting in London, the Canadian delegation played its full role in the deliberations of that assembly. Our delegation was led by Mr. Leonard Hopkins, the member of Parliament for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. This chamber was represented by the Honourable Senators Balfour, Hastings, Leblanc and McElman. The delegation from the House of Commons included Mr. Joseph-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne), Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West), Mr. Michael Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East), Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier), Mr. Thomas Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle), Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette), the Honourable Allan McKinnon (Victoria), Mr. Terrence Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake), and Mr. Michel Veillette (Champlain).

● (1520)

The support staff included Mr. Stephen Knowles, who acted as secretary to the delegation, and Mr. Daniel Bon, who acted as research adviser and consultant.

In addition, Canada was represented by Mr. John Graham, of the Science and Technology Division, Research Branch, Library of Parliament. He participated in meetings of the Scientific and Technical Committee, and presented a paper before that committee outlining Canada's position with respect to acid rain. He did an honourable job of defending that position before the committee.

Speaking for myself—and, I have no doubt, on behalf of all members of the delegation—I believe that in exercising our individual and collective responsibility as members of the delegation, and participating in that international forum, with trusted friends and colleagues, where a reservoir of good will existed, we all benefited and were better equipped to perform our services as Canadian parliamentarians at home.

I will digress for a moment to tell you of the opening ceremonies which were held in that famous British landmark, Westminster Hall. That hall has stood for one thousand years, and throughout those years it has been a focus of the nation's life. It was in that hall that the first commoners were called to Parliament, where kings have been tried and where men have been impeached. I stood on the exact spot where a Hastings stood trial for treason. He was found not guilty.

An Hon. Senator: Naturally.

Senator Hastings: He was no kin of mine. My roots are deep within County Tyrone in Northern Ireland.

Being in that hall, which represents the home of the rule of law and stands next to the centre of parliamentary authority—namely, Westminster, the mother of Parliaments—and attending those ceremonies, presided over by Mr. Jack Brooks, the president, in the presence of the Speaker of the House of Lords and the Speaker of the House of Commons, who addressed the delegates, and also of the Right Honourable Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister of Britain, it inspired me and reminded me that I, as an anglophone Canadian, also have roots and an historic past and a contribution to make to Canada. It reminded me again of the great Canadian experiment and the responsibility that is ours. I refer to those great cultures of Europe, French and English together, combined with all the other cultures and linguistic groups that have come together, and the future we have in which to show the world that we can live in understanding and harmony.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hastings: Even though a man may speak another language and have a different culture, it does not make mine better. All it takes is a little understanding and appreciation of his culture, and then perhaps mine is that much more enriched.

There were other functions of the assembly. I believe it was Abraham Lincoln who once said that no nation could ever continue to exist or survive half slave and half free. Likewise, no alliance can prosper and survive with half of its members poor and half rich. Through the years it has become evident that there is need for the regular discussion of related matters, not only of nuclear weapons, armaments and defence but also of other matters that are of concern and to which the alliance has turned its efforts. I refer to economic, scientific and social issues. This is accomplished through the work of the various committees of the Assembly.

In that respect, Canada plays its full part. A Canadian parliamentarian occupies a position on the executive of the six committees. Mr. Leonard Hopkins is on the Standing Committee. Mr. J.-R. Comtois is rapporteur for the Education, Cultural Affairs and Information Committee. Mr. Michael Forrestall is general rapporteur of the Military Committee. Mr. Tom Lefebvre is general rapporteur of the Scientific and Technical Committee. And at the recent meeting I had the honour to be elected chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy Sources and Uses within the Alliance and also special energy rapporteur on the Economic Committee. So members of the Canadian parliamentary delegation play their full role with regard to the work of those committees.

I had the honour to present a detailed report with respect to the changing energy challenges of the future, and, with the permission of honourable senators, I should like to discuss the highlights of that report, which become important in the light of recent OPEC developments in London, and which become even more important, as has been indicated in the house this afternoon, with respect to questions pertaining to the price of oil in Canada.

At the meetings of the committee to which I referred there was general consensus that the oil supply problem experienced over the past number of years was actually one of price, not resources, and although there may be technical and economic problems associated with exploitation—there is no foreseeable oil supply problem—which represents a radical change in the views of some concerning our ability to provide the energy that we shall need well into the twenty-first century. Apart from the dangers of politically motivated costs, conventional oil supplies can satisfy market demands well into the twenty-first century.

Many observers at the meeting once felt that the demand for oil would exceed productive capacity by the end of this century; but the dramatic decline in oil demand over the past three years is now used as the rationale for stating that the fears of yesterday were perhaps unfounded. The decline in oil demand over those three years has probably been due to three important factors. The most important has been the downturn in economic activity throughout the world, and the continued increase in oil prices which, in turn, has led to both increased energy conservation and substitution of alternative fuels.

There is a further reason, and that is with respect to the supply side. It now appears that more oil is available and that our original estimates were overly conservative. In addition, we have modern technological methods for recapturing more oil through enhanced recovery; and there now appear to be many areas throughout the world which are under-explored and offer a challenge for the future. One region within the alliance is the Canadian Arctic.

This decline in demand, combined with the recent glut, resulting in reduced oil prices, may lead the industrial West to be lulled into a false sense of security, to believe that the energy crisis has ended and is behind us. If that is so, it is probably due to the widely held belief that the depressed oil demand we are experiencing and the price reduction are due to permanent changes in the way we use energy and are an indicator that we have now achieved a more rational oil market.

● (1530)

Undoubtedly, the price increases of 1979-80 contributed to the global decline in consumption. Between 1980 and 1982 there was a 15 per cent decline in consumption. But although this statistic is impressive it will not be possible to quantify the impact that conservation and substitution for oil have had until we return to a more buoyant economic condition. In other words, the decrease in demand has been due to a lack of economic activity and conservation, but it is impossible at this point to quantify what each contributed to that decline. To assume that we have now reached the stage of rational use of oil is dangerous until this relationship is quantified. It is only when we can quantify that relationship that it will be apparent whether the recent slump in energy demand simply reflects the downturn in oil or whether the traditional link between energy demand and economic growth has been actually attained.

The second oil price shock in 1979-80 resulted in oil prices increasing by 170 per cent. It reduced real incomes in the OECD countries by 5 per cent in 1980 and by 8 per cent in 1981. One of the goals of the Venice summit held in 1980 by the western industrialized nations was to break the link between economic growth and oil consumption. The target settled upon by International Energy Agency officials was to try to achieve a ratio between growth and energy consumption and growth in GDP of 0.6, but officials now believe that a ratio of 0.55 can be achieved. Furthermore, International Energy Agency officials now suspect that oil's share of total energy consumption will fall to 39 per cent by 1990 compared to the target of 40 per cent set at the Venice conference.

One question which looms foremost in the minds of many energy analysts at this time is whether or not future demands for oil will increase as economic growth gathers pace. Certainly, oil is seen as continuing to be necessary to meet any accelerating energy demand which cannot be supplied by other sources such as coal and nuclear energy. The scale of funding required for both these latter energy supply options is a deterrent until supply-and-demand trends become better established. Furthermore, public opposition to nuclear generation, combined with the lead time required for enforcing strict regulatory procedures, will also deter growth in the nuclear sector. Insofar as expanded coal development is concerned, transportation infrastructure costs, security of supply, and environmental problems are three important issues which must be seriously addressed before coal comes into much wider use.

However, the question still remains in the Western industrialized world, "Are we being lulled into a false sense of security over energy and, in particular, petroleum supplies?" Undoubtedly, the change in the strength of the OPEC cartel has had a great deal to do with changing our perceptions about the value and availability of oil. From 1973 onwards, OPEC's members were in a position to force up prices, create artificial petroleum shortages and maintain an iron grip on the sellers' market. But as of March 1982, cartel members found it necessary to submit to production quotas limiting overall output to a maximum of 17.5 million barrels per day in an attempt to stabilize rapidly falling oil prices. Some observers feel that the readiness with which the majority of OPEC members submitted to voluntary cuts suggests that the cartel realizes its grip on the market has been greatly weakened since the consumer countries began responding seriously to the price movements made in 1979.

At that time OPEC was marketing more than 30 million barrels a day and they controlled some 60 per cent of the petroleum market. Today, with sales standing at less than 13 million barrels per day, they can claim barely 30 per cent of the market. This has not only resulted from a declining demand for oil but also from the competition OPEC now faces from other oil supplying regions of the world, such as Alaska, Mexico and the North Sea. Today, OPEC's production is less than 50 per cent of what it was at its peak.

There are other strains on OPEC. Levels of production as a means of influencing price have become a major source of conflict. A commodity cartel like OPEC can only continue to control prices in a depressed market by maintaining strict discipline over how much its members produce. Cash hungry members of OPEC, such as Iran, Nigeria and Libya, now produce in excess of their quotas. It is therefore abundantly clear that the monthly monitoring mechanisms set up by OPEC to gauge oil market fluctuations have not been totally successful in persuading some of its members to adhere to their production quotas. If they could not adhere to their production quotas at 17 million barrels per day over the past year, I do not think that they will have much success in the future in adhering to any quota they set at their meeting in London.

Despite some signs of an economic upturn, recovery in the industrialized West is not happening fast enough to suit some of the poorer OPEC nations which are under severe pressure to keep up production in order to increase their earnings. This means that oil's share of the overall energy market has been predicted to continue to decline by 1 per cent annually as nuclear power, coal and gas continue to reduce the need for petroleum. By the time there is substantial economic recovery, the cartel may not be able to recapture its former position in view of the changed nature of the energy market. These developments are interesting because at a time when OPEC objectives in relation to the West are becoming more reasonable, the West may be less amenable to dialogue even though the way is open for genuine negotiations. While OPEC production continues to decline, non-OPEC production continues to increase. For the first time in 20 years in the free-world non-OPEC production will exceed OPEC production.

The decline in total world oil production was borne almost entirely by OPEC producers because OPEC kept its official price up even though the spot price for oil fell. Non-OPEC producers such as Britain and Mexico dramatically dropped their prices in order to increase sales and maintain revenues. Eventually, OPEC itself has been forced to set production levels so as to ease the over-supply of petroleum. At a recent meeting in London that great cartel, through its daily manipulations, appeared more like a group of Arab rug dealers than the great cartel it once was, and after all the haggling they set the production quota at 17.5 million barrels per day, which is quite unrealistic in light of the fact they have only been able to sell 13 million barrels per day over the last year. They reduced the price by US$5 per barrel, from US$34 per barrel to US$29 per barrel. It is the first cut in 22 years. OPEC bowed to market pressure to avoid an all-out war and to maintain an uneasy truce. I suggest, honourable senators, that that is all it is, an uneasy truce, and that it will only be temporary because of the actions of various members of the cartel.

No longer do we have one OPEC; we now have three OPECs. We have one OPEC led by Saudi Arabia which represents the Gulf producers; another OPEC led by Iraq which seeks to use OPEC to propagate its political views throughout the Far East; and, finally, an OPEC led by Nigeria which represents the poorer members of the great cartel. In addition, there are non-OPEC producers such as Great Britain, which has stated quite clearly that it will not reduce the price of its oil. Yesterday we saw that Russia dropped its price per barrel down to where it is now $1.50 below the OPEC price.

• (1540)

In conclusion, honourable senators, it was the consensus of the group that the future of oil with respect to energy remains fraught with uncertainty and very fragile. It was also the consensus of the members that, in spite of the present comfortable situation of the petroleum market from the consumer point of view, one has to warn against any dilution of energy-saving policies or abandonment of policies for the development of alternative energy sources. Regrettably, pressure to do so will rise in the future with the resumption of full economic activity in industrialized countries and in other parts of the world. This temptation must be strenuously resisted—and that includes Canada.

Furthermore, the energy dependence of the western European countries on the Middle East is still too high and should be reduced by conserving energy and by bringing about a diversification in sources of supply. It is evident that incentives for engendering structural adjustment in traditional energy supply-and-demand relationships have to be maintained in order to diminish the risk of another oil price shock or an interruption of petroleum supplies.

With respect to the establishment of secure supply, honourable senators, the Canadian group has organized a trip for members of the Economic Committee and the Scientific and Technical Committee to the Canadian Arctic from April 10 to April 16. Those meetings will be held across the northern Arctic, from Resolute to the Alaska oil fields. Their purpose is to permit European parliamentarians to view for themselves, to hold meetings with the producers and to establish in the minds of these parliamentarians a better knowledge of the source that is locked within the Canadian Arctic—a secure supply that will be available to Europe perhaps ten or twenty years from now. It should also impress upon them that this secure supply might be a much better investment for them than some of the other sources they are presently looking at.

It is in that spirit that we shall be showing our fellow European parliamentarians the value of the Canadian Arctic with respect to a secure supply of energy for the future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Hastings: Yes.

Senator Molgat: If I understood him correctly, the analysis of his group is that we have sufficient oil supplies to last us into the twenty-first century. Is that prediction based on some production from areas like Hibernia or the Beaufort Sea? In other words, is there a production figure to be attributed to those areas or are they still purely speculative?

Senator Hastings: There are no figures available for Hibernia or the Arctic. What we do know is that there are areas throughout the alliance which have been under-developed and under-drilled, and these offer a great deal of opportunity for the future.

For example, when the group goes up to Rae Point and meets with officials from PanArctic, they will learn that there are 750,000 barrels of oil in reserve. From conversations with PanArctic we learned that two more wells will give us over a billion barrels, and this area could be the Prudhoe Bay of Canada. However, until they are proven, you treat those as possible reserves, but on the basis of proven reserves, possible reserves, under-developed fields and, in addition, technological advances with respect to the recovery of more oil in present fields, it is safe to say that we have adequate supply well into the twenty-first century. The only thing which must be overcome is the economic and political situation.

Senator Molgat: I have a supplementary question. Since it is based, then, on proven, possible and underdeveloped fields, will $29 be a realistic price for that oil?

Senator Hastings: I think that is always a consideration, but I said "subject to economic and political considerations." An oil man in Calgary will ask you how much oil you want, and he inverts a triangle. At the bottom it is $1 a barrel; at the top it is $100 a barrel. You tell him what you want and he will provide what you need. Certainly, economics are always a consideration.

We had the honour of meeting with officials from coal gasification plants in the Ruhr Valley in West Germany. One has to give credit to the Germans who took the lead in coal gasification, but the economic fact is that it is $120 a barrel. They are spending $200 million or $300 million on these projects for the future. At the moment $100 a barrel is uneconomic; a year ago $60 a barrel was economic and it could quite easily have gone to $100. If there is one thing that we have learned since 1973 it is that a shortage today can be an abundance tomorrow, and we have to be prepared to insulate ourselves against those vagaries.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator rises to speak or wishes to adjourn the debate, I declare the inquiry debated.

THE ESTIMATES

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF THE NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Leave having been given to proceed to the Order for Tuesday, March 22, 1983:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the Supplementary Estimates (c) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1983.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Everett.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, you will be aware that some time ago we set up the Subcommittee on Estimates as a subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The concept is that the subcommittee will conduct the studies that the main committee had been conducting on the estimates, and this will leave the main committee free to look at government economic policy.

We were fortunate in that Senator Doody was willing to chair the subcommittee. He has taken over that function, and may I say how impressed I am by the way he has been doing it.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear—except for his speech today!

Hon. C. William Doody: A momentary lapse. I will get back on track tomorrow!

Senator Everett: In his speech Senator Doody dealt with many of the complaints that the committee has had in the past regarding the way the estimates are presented, and especially in respect of $1 votes.

Requests for more information from Treasury Board have been made by Parliament over a number of years, and this year Treasury Board has taken those requests seriously, as honourable senators will know from the flood of material that has been provided in the main estimates for the year ending March 31, 1984. In fact, it may be more than we really need or want.

What we are dealing with in supplementary estimates (C) is a request for an additional $1.9 billion, bringing the spending estimates for the year to $81.5 billion. With lapses, this will be reduced to $81.1 billion.

I find it interesting that these estimates are for expenditures that are related to the problems of an economy that is operating well below its capacity. I think it would be difficult for anybody to argue that, in the present economic climate, these expenditures should not be made. For example, there is $182 million to the unemployment insurance account; $76 million under the Canada Assistance Plan; $49 million to the Farm Credit Corporation for loans to farmers in financial distress; $40 million to the Federal Business Development Bank to encourage further investment; $30 million in additional payments under the Canada Student Loans Act; $390 million of additional funds to encourage the purchase of new homes; and $500 million for the additional costs of servicing the public debt.

● (1550)

The fact of the matter is that you have a down economy. As the economy recedes, your expenditures go up and your revenues go down. Obviously, that is going to mean a greater deficit, and it is going to add to the costs of servicing the public debt. It is also going to add to the outlays, and, as honourable senators can see, most of those outlays are attempts by the government to reduce the effect of an economy in recession.

Now, I must say that the policy that was embarked upon to reduce inflation is probably the cause of the situation in which we find ourselves today; nonetheless, that was a correct policy. What we tend to forget is the virulence of inflation that existed twelve to twenty months ago—an inflation that was getting very close to becoming out of control. It was essential for the central bank and the government to take action to reduce that inflation and, no matter what people tell you, what nostrums they suggest, the only way that that can be done is by dampening down demand in the economy. That is a painful process, a process that takes time, and a process that takes a certain amount of living with for it to become effective.

We are at that stage of the cycle when the process has become effective. Inflation is down substantially, and it is falling and will likely fall even further. It is a painful process, and about all that a government can do at that stage is to attempt, through its expenditures, to mitigate the effects of recession on those groups that are least able to protect themselves.

I suggest to you, honourable senators, that what is happening now is that inflation is very much more under control, that the economy now is dishing out and is starting to come back. I predict that we will see a vigorous growth in the economy over the next 12 months.

I know that the predictions are that it will be a long time before we come out of this, but I personally do not think that that is right. I think that we will rebound much quicker than some economists are suggesting. We will rebound, and when we rebound, two things will happen: our revenues will increase and, because of the efficiencies and the increase in productivity we have achieved through this recession, I believe that our expenditures will be held very much under control, well within the six-and-five guidelines.

So, I think we can predict with some optimism that the deficit will narrow to a considerable extent over the next while, the economy will grow, and that the policy that this government and the central bank embarked upon will be seen to be very successful.

What we have here are estimates that tend to remove the pain of the present recession. What we have is the realistic hope that we are coming out of that recession, that the deficit will narrow, and that the GNP will grow by a substantial amount.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to participate in this debate, this order is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 22, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 22, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1982, pursuant to section 34(2) of the Official Languages Act, Chapter O-2, R.S.C., 1970.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1982-83

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-145, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Is there any special reason?

Senator Frith: No special reason; just to get it done.

Senator Flynn: Do you want to put it on the record that there is no special reason?

Senator Frith: Just the usual one.

Senator Flynn: No one will understand that.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I will.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1983-84

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-146, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): For the same reason as for the previous bill?

Senator Frith: Yes, the usual one.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a number of reports and other documents to table this evening. First, there are two memoranda of agreement between the Government of Canada and a number of municipalities in many provinces. It is a very long list, but I am fully prepared to read it if honourable senators insist.

• (2010)

Let me explain. This is the Memorandum of Agreement between the Government of Canada and these municipalities respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. Of course, I will table the document, but if honourable senators will agree to take the names of all these municipalities as having been read, I shall be happy to proceed in that way. If, on the other hand, they want me to read the list, and if I can pronounce every one of the names properly, I shall be glad to do so. My suggestion is that this be taken as read.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, might I ask my honourable friend whether the material he refers to consists of the contracts for policing services as between the municipalities and the RCMP? Is that what he is talking about?

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators, it is the Memorandum of Agreement between the Government of Canada and these municipalities pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. I believe that is essentially what Senator Roblin has referred to.

Senator Roblin: If it is merely the tabling of the documents relating to the policing contracts in the municipalities, then it seems to me that there is no reason why we should not comply with the minister's suggestion.

Senator Olson: Thank you.

I have a number of other documents to table this evening, one of which is the revised document entitled: "1983 Constitutional Accord on Aboriginal Rights," signed at Ottawa on March 16, 1983.

Another is the report on the operations of the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979, for the year 1982, pursuant to section 20 of that act.

There is also the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and Statement of Accounts for the year ended December 31, 1982, pursuant to section 26(3) of the Bank of Canada Act, as amended.

There is also Order in Council P.C. 1983-738, dated March 10, 1983, amending Part I of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of that act.

There is then the report of Statistics Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, pursuant to section 4(3) of the Statistics Act.

Lastly, there is the report of the Canadian Transport Commission for the year ended December 31, 1982, pursuant to section 28(2) of the National Transportation Act.

Senator Roblin: May I ask my honourable friend some questions in connection with two of the documents he has tabled? The first has to do with the so-called constitutional amendment. I recall that there has been a dispute between some of the native peoples and the government with respect to the wording of that particular amendment to the Constitution. Can the minister tell us which set of words has finally been accepted as correct?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the simple answer to that question is no, I cannot tell my honourable friend which set of words has been accepted or if there is any disagreement about it. Senator Roblin and other honourable senators may read the document which has now been tabled, and if they have any difficulty with it they can so inform us at the next sitting. I do not have, off the top of my head, information as to the wording.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend now that I would appreciate an explanation from him as to the difference between the two claims, because I believe that the wording is different in the case of the document that was tabled tonight. It has to do with the rights of men and women within existing regulations and statutes, whereas some of the indigenous people wish it to have a wider application. Perhaps the minister would bear in mind that I shall be seeking from him elaboration on that point as to the government's policy with respect to the matter.

The second question has to do with the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. We have had the happy opportunity, in recent times, of being able to invite the Governor to a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance in order to discuss his report with him as soon as possible after its tabling and while the matter is still current. Can my honourable friend give me an undertaking that that same privilege will be provided for members of the chamber in the immediate future with respect to the report that has been tabled this evening?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, with respect to the last question I am not sure what kind of an undertaking I can give in terms of the body of the Senate, including the chairman of that committee. At first blush, in trying to reply to that question, I have no difficulty in—

• (2015)

Senator Flynn: Not opposing?

Senator Olson: Pardon me?

Senator Flynn: You are not opposing the move?

Senator Olson: I think that if my honourable friend would allow me to finish the sentence that I had started, we would arrive almost at the same place.

Senator Flynn: I was helping you; that's all.

Senator Olson: Thank you very much. I was about to say that I have no difficulty with the usual practice with respect to the appearance of the Governor before the committee. We do, however, have to give some consideration to the fact that the other place will adjourn on the 30th, which is a week from tomorrow. Within the time frame that we have left for a lot of important committee work and other things, I would have to temper my undertaking, to allow full and adequate consideration of those factors.

As far as concerns the other question with respect to the interpretation of what was agreed to and what is shown in the document that I have just tabled, I can make some inquiries about that. However, we are not in a position now, nor will we be even after that is done, to have a debate on the interpretation of what was intended and the words which were used to convey what was intended.

Senator Roblin: On the point that the minister has just referred to, I am not so much anxious to have a debate as to have an understanding. What I really want him to do is explain his position as opposed to the counterclaims made by the others, so that we will know what the government's position and the government's policy is. That could be done by way of a short statement on Motions some time soon.

With respect to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the first thing that is necessary is to invite him, because he will not come unless he is invited. He may find it possible to come if he is invited at a convenient time. If we are no more busy in the next few days than we have been in the last few days in this house, we will have plenty of time to hear the Governor if he has the time to come and talk to us.

I note that the amiable deputy chairman of the committee is in the house tonight. Perhaps an invitation might be extended by Senator Leblanc.

Senator Olson: I wouldn't like Senator Roblin to assume that I have gone a lot further with the undertaking than I indicated in my reply to him a few minutes ago. I feel rather like someone who is being led down the garden path. My undertaking is still tempered by consideration for what is termed as classified, essential or extremely important legislation that needs to go all the way to Royal Assent. That, of course, in many cases includes some committee work. We will have to assess that on the basis of priorities, bearing in mind the limited number of days that we have left.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend is not more forthcoming, I am going to report him to the Chairman of the National Finance Committee, and he will make sure that the Governor comes.

Senator Olson: I am not trembling at that threat.

Senator Roblin: I will report that, too.

Senator Olson: The chairman is a very reasonable person.

BUDGET TAX MEASURES

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the second report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the advance study of budget resolutions respecting income tax and other matters relating thereto. I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 5474)

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving supplementary budgets of the following committees:

Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and Special Senate Committee on the Northern Pipeline.

(For text of reports see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER REFERRED TO SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1982 tabled in the Senate on March 22, 1983, be referred to the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (2020)

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, March 24, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this motion to adjourn until Thursday at 2 o'clock is consistent with the understanding I believe we reached last week that we would sit on Tuesday at 8 o'clock and on Thursday at 2 o'clock, leaving Wednesday afternoon free for committees to meet, but with the possibility of sitting Wednesday evening, if necessary.

I can advise honourable senators that I see no reason for sitting Wednesday evening this week. We have two pieces of legislation before us now, but I do not think we will receive anything else this week. Therefore, the plan we set up last week seems to be unfolding as it should.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not like the last words of the deputy leader, that everything is "unfolding as it should."

Senator Frith: I was referring just to the plan that we had last week, not to everything in the universe.

Senator Flynn: The fact is that we have before us only the two supply bills mentioned previously. It seems obvious to me that the government would like to deal with Bill C-139, Bill C-143 and even with Canagrex, if possible, before the adjournment of the House of Commons next week.

As you know, the presence of the House of Commons is necessary for Royal Assent. The Leader of the Government has indicated that the House of Commons will adjourn, but that it is not absolutely necessary for us to adjourn on the 30th. Of course, we could sit on Good Friday and on the following Saturday and during the whole of Easter week. I am sure honourable senators are quite willing to do that, if necessary; I am sure they would be happy to do that. However, if the government really wants the Senate to deal with and pass Bill C-139, Bill C-143 and the Canagrex bill before March 30, it is rather presumptuous of it to ask us to do so in three days next week.

• (2025)

The deputy leader has said that we do not expect any legislation to reach us this week. That is obvious. It seems to me, however, that the government is playing a game. I know you will tell me that the opposition is also playing a game, but the government, as far as this house is concerned, has the majority here, and their attitude is of some concern to the Senate. With regard to time allocation, the other place voted time allocation before Christmas, with respect to the Canagrex bill.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): There are two days now.

Senator Flynn: Two days left, and since we came back in January the government has not moved; it has done nothing to have this bill passed by the house. Now it comes to us, and they are playing the same game with Bill C-139.

I do not know if Senator Guay has something to say, or if he merely wants to make a noise.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Well, I can ask you. I was talking to my colleague, wondering whether you were supporting Crosbie or Mulroney. That is all I asked.

Senator Flynn: I am not surprised that you have only that kind of thought on your mind. It is the only kind of thought you can have. It is not of the slightest importance in connection with the question we are dealing with at this time, but whomever you would support yourself would mean nothing in any event.

Senator Guay: I suppose you are not opposing them.

Senator Flynn: I would never do that, and I hope you would never try to do that, because you would be mistaken once more.

I come back to the serious business before us, and leave Senator Guay grumbling at the end of the chamber with his big voice.

Senator Guay: That is better than you can do.

Senator Flynn: Well, that is your own opinion, and I know what that is worth.

I will try to come to more serious matters, which are of interest to the Senate—as a rule, at least. With regard to Bill C-139, Bill C-133 and the Canagrex bill, what is going to happen if we get these three bills? I am asking the Leader of the Government if he seriously thinks that we can pass these three bills next week, since it is obvious that we cannot expect any of them this week.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Perhaps if we were to sit night and day?

Senator Flynn: That is all right.

Senator Langlois: Are you ready to do that?

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Flynn: I would not be too happy, I guess, and I am as sincere as you are in that respect.

Senator Guay: I would question that.

Senator Flynn: The echo again.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Little Sir Echo!

Senator Flynn: Are you rising on a point of order?

Senator Guay: Yes.

Senator Flynn: What do you have to say this time?

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition if he should not, in his wisdom, make representations to his leader in the other place, and ask him to accelerate the legislation so that we can deal with it in the Senate immediately.

Senator Flynn: Of course, you did not have to make that suggestion. I said that the opposition was doing certain things. I am speaking of the responsibility of the government, and the responsibility of the majority in this place. If you do not care about that, Senator Guay, and if you are willing to pass three important bills in two days and a half, with our eyes blindfolded as usual, that is your responsibility; but I do not think you should agree to allow the Leader of the Government in the other place to put you in that awful situation, and compel you to act in that way. If it does not show too much, all well and good, but if it shows the degree to which you are prepared to agree to such treatment, that is something else.

I am asking the Leader of the Government if the leader of the government in the other place really thinks that he can finish these three bills, even with time allocation so that they will come to us next week at the earliest. If time allocation is to be used, it should be used with some regard for the position of the Senate and that of the majority here on the other side—excluding, of course, Senator Guay.

• (2030)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn has raised a number of interesting propositions with respect to how we can influence and expedite the business in the other place. He mentioned that there is time allocation on Bill C-85, the Canagrex bill. Bill C-139 is an extremely important bill for thousands, and perhaps millions, of Canadian taxpayers who are awaiting its passage in order to facilitate an orderly calculation of their income tax returns and, in some cases for a lot of other things, including tax refunds. The leader of the government and, particularly, the house leader in the other place, indicated publicly a number of times that they would like to have that bill dealt with. They did not ask the opposition to agree with it, but to come to a decision. That has been going on for a long time.

Bill C-143, which is a borrowing authority bill, is relatively brief and has been debated for quite some time in the other place. The Leader of the Opposition suggests that we do something to persuade those in the other place to put some time allocation on it. I am not sure that it is useful for us to debate what the other place ought to do.

With respect to Bill C-85, the Senate has conducted a very exhaustive pre-study, the subject matter having been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. I believe the hope is that that process shortens the time considerably for consideration in this chamber. In some cases, the bill is not even sent to committee after it comes over here, because the committee has already been at work. It has heard the witnesses, and the evidence adduced is available to all senators.

With respect to Bill C-139, an exhaustive examination has been made. Senators have spent a great deal of time on it, and the acting chairman of that committee has tabled the second report this evening. There is a great deal of useful material in that report since the examination of that bill provided an opportunity for outside witnesses to be heard.

Bill C-143 is not a very long or complicated bill, although it probably has some very important aspects. I do not see why we should have to spend that much time on it.

Looking at those three bills, it seems to me that the Senate has done—and I might say with the co-operation of the opposition—

Senator Guay: Very good!

Senator Olson: —all of the preliminary work, and has done it so well that we can have expeditious passage of those bills in this place. We will not have the problem that we had for some time before those techniques were employed, when there was not time to call witnesses in order to hear their views. The Senate committees have already been through that.

If you look at what has been exchanged with respect to when those bills may come, we do have Monday and Tuesday, and Wednesday up until a few minutes before 6 o'clock, in which to deal with them. We have done the preliminary work. I am sure that the house leader, working with others, can find a way to put them through. We have some business this evening that we can deal with. Certainly, because of all the pre-study that has gone into these matters, we may find we can have a longer than usual debate on second reading. Perhaps we can consider some of them in Committee of the Whole. In my view, all that leads to a possibility, at least, that the Senate can deal with those three bills in three days next week.

• (2035)

Senator Flynn: I could not hope to have the Leader of the Government be more frank than he has been up until now. I cannot vouch for the following discussion. At this time he has admitted that the new closure technique, that was used before Christmas, will be used again before the Easter recess—the subtle technique of closure, based on the excuse that a bill has been pre-studied by a committee, or that a bill, such as the borrowing authority bill, does not involve much wording or a long text and, therefore, can be passed in a few minutes.

The Leader of the Government will not claim that this is the proper way to deal with these important bills. I am not speaking of the supplementary estimates, which may have been pre-studied, for we know that the Senate generally cannot voice important objections to appropriation bills. I am speaking of the three other bills, the Canagrex bill, the income tax bill, and the borrowing authority bill, which are important pieces of legislation. When the Senate is caught with Easter or Christmas closure, when many members, on both sides of the house, are away—I do not mind admitting that quite clearly; we know that many are away—it is impossible to conduct a normal debate. We cannot follow the normal procedure of moving amendments, and having decent votes—not votes with 15 on one side and 30 on the other, with less than 50 per cent of the membership here. We know very well that the government counts on that. We know very well that the leadership in this house counts on that; and we know very well that the majority here, perhaps on both sides of the house, do not care about it. But I do care, and I say I don't like it. I want to put that on the record with regard to what is likely to happen next week.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it is useful to know what the Leader of the Opposition is in favour of and what he is somewhat opposed to. I believe he used the words, "I don't like it", but, in fairness, the Leader of the Opposition would have to agree—perhaps that word is too strong; so I shall say "concede"—that we have done every conceivable thing that the Senate can do—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Olson: —so that we can face up to our responsibility to the Canadian public and do everything possible to get the bills passed.

Hon. Jack Marshall: What about the Canada Day bill?

Senator Olson: In my opinion, we cannot—and that is the suggestion that was made at the beginning—give any commitment about what the opposition in the other place will do. All those bills have been there for weeks or months.

• (2040)

Senator Flynn: Speak of the Senate.

Senator Olson: Let us talk more frankly. It may be that the honourable senator disagrees with some of the provisions in these bills, but I do not believe that carries into the situation where we deny the majority from taking a decision after a long period of debate. That is also part of the democratic process and it should be respected.

Obstructions and log-jams are all right for a few days, but this has gone on for quite a long time. Therefore, we have taken that action. I really do not think we would be performing our duty, after we have taken all the preliminary action open to us, if we complain that we have to sit here for five, six or eight hours a day for three days, if all of this legislation is coming over. Hopefully, within that length of time, we can consider the evidence and the suggestions that have already been made so it can go through that process.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government can say what he wants about what is going on in the other place. We do not have to pass judgment, necessarily, on the whole, but the government could very well proceed in a way that would take into account the problems of the Senate.

Really, what we should do, in the circumstances that we are going to be faced with, is adjourn until after Easter and consider the bills in the regular way, rather than be pushed to decide in a short period of time. It is all right to say that we can have eight hours of debate in the Senate and sit here until midnight, but that is not the way to deal with important legislation, and that is not the way we should discharge our responsibilities. Senators should be able to dispose of these bills in a normal way and have three, four or five days of debate if necessary, as we usually do when we are not pushed. The Leader of the Government is only too happy to agree that we can be pushed, that we have to decide before March 30, and that we are going to pass all these bills under very difficult circumstances with only 50 per cent of the senators in attendance.

I say to the Leader of the Government: You should talk to the Leader of the Government in the other place and ask him to try to arrange a schedule because he knows very well that, in some cases, time allocation is necessary.

I would remind the Leader of the Government of the circumstances surrounding the Canagrex bill. An order was made before Christmas. Only two days were required, and the government has not moved.

Senator Olson: Yes, we have.

Senator Flynn: The bill has not progressed.

Senator Olson: Yes, it has.

Senator Frith: They refused to let it be called by raising points of order.

Senator Flynn: The government can call this bill any time.

Senator Frith: We tried.

Senator Flynn: And the order has been made.

Senator Frith: Look it up.

Senator Flynn: It is not impossible. Even if points of order are raised, you can dispose of them. It is my own feeling and my own conviction that the government is only too happy to have the opposition delay the legislation—

Senator Olson: Not at all.

Senator Flynn: —because then it is not forced to start a new session and to announce a new program after three years. That is my own conviction.

In any event, I am talking about the position in which the Senate will be put next week. If the Leader of the Government and the majority are happy with that, then that is fine.

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Government would have been much happier if those bills had been passed in the other place so that we had been in formal possession of them several weeks ago. There is no question in my mind about that.

Senator Flynn: We have to do something about it.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Olson: We have to live with the real world and the way it is. I repeat that we have done all the preparation, and I do not believe that we can legitimately argue that we need go again through all of what we have already done.

Therefore, I hope that the Leader of the Opposition will accept, as we do, his responsibility to the general public, which is waiting for these bills, so that we can carry on the business of governing this country in an orderly way. The best the Leader of the Opposition can do is help us to do that. I want to say that he has done that up until now, and we appreciate it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion to adjourn until Thursday at 2 p.m.?

Senator Flynn: Of course. We have nothing to do.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCOME TAX

BILL C-139—RECOMMENDATIONS OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Senator McIlraith.

I understand that he has tabled a report on Bill C-139. As yet, I have not seen the report, but, in order to have some idea of what we should do about it, I should like to know if the report contains recommendations for amendments or changes, or if it contains only general observations?

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, regrettably the report is rather lengthy. It contains no specific recommendations for amendment except in regard to one small point.

One of the major subjects dealt with is the situation regarding aviation fuel, that is, the system of trying to collect an additional amount of money for the purchase of aviation fuel by foreign airlines operating in Canada and by Canadian airlines operating out of Canada. That matter is dealt with in a complex way by the airlines being charged a higher price than the contract price; by adding a deemed income, on the sale of such fuel, to the income of the fuel suppliers; and by them, in turn, hoping to recover taxes from that added income from the fuel suppliers, some of whom are taxpayers and some of whom are not. We did not establish which suppliers were taxpayers and which ones were not, or their rate of tax, because that was beyond our authority.

The report contains a lengthy explanation of that very complex taxation system because the committee heard some critical evidence on this subject from the fuel suppliers, foreign carriers into Canada and Canadian carriers. That evidence is set out in great detail. The committee's report does not recommend the rejection of those clauses or amendments.

The report then deals at some length with the capital cost allowance.

It also deals with the question of distribution tax on corporate dividends paid out of income affecting small business corporations particularly. I might add that Senator Roblin was concerned about this subject and dealt with it in committee on several occasions.

The investment tax credit is also dealt with.

In conclusion, the committee report states:

> The Committee has reviewed the matters set forth in the Orders of Reference in accordance with its terms of reference and, except as noted above, has no comment to make at this time.

● (2050)

I apologize for the length of what I just read, but I could not see how we could adequately cover the work we have been doing without going into the evidence that was given at some length.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if I may be allowed a brief comment on this report. The acting chairman of the committee, quite correctly, made reference to my views in respect to small business taxation. Perhaps it would be appropriate for me at this stage to say that I would be much happier if the committee had made a recommendation that the bill be amended in respect to these matters.

There are two points in particular which deserve the attention of the Senate, and I hope that when the bill comes before the house for second reading it may go back to the committee for consideration of an amendment, rather than merely an expression of opinion which is all that we have found possible to put in this report. The first point has to do with the cumulative dividend account by which, in the words of the tax experts, they replenish the capacity of small businesses to continue to take advantage of the small business tax level. It is proposed that this replenishment be removed from the bill so that it will no longer apply. Obviously, such a move would increase the taxation paid by small business, though not significantly, in the near future.

Of more importance, and of greater significance, is the proposal to increase the taxation on small business by 12.5 per cent, which is a surcharge on the dividends that small businesses pay in the future. That increase amounts to a 50 per cent increase in the corporation tax that small businesses will be paying.

I do not wish to anticipate what I will say on another occasion. I merely want to make it clear to the chamber that as far as I am concerned, as a member of the committee, I am disappointed that we in the committee have not found it possible to be more emphatic in connection with this swingeing taxation of small business. I serve notice now that when the bill does come before the house I intend to move that it be amended to give effect to the removal of these two objectionable and ill-advised measures by which we are going to reduce the cash flow, the capacity to raise equity, the profitability and effectiveness of the small business sector. I shall be elaborating on the importance of the small business sector in our economy when the time comes. The chairman of the committee has reported in respect to small business, in my opinion, quite accurately. However, I thought it necessary for me to make it clear that I have views on that subject which are not held by the majority of the committee.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I do not wish to open a debate on the report now and I am not prepared to do so, but I think the honourable senator who has just spoken may take a little comfort from the report with regard to one point he has raised. If he will look at the heading "Cumulative Deduction Account" on page 20 of the typewritten report, and then at the concluding sentence on that subject, he will read:

> The Committee reiterates its recommendation that the payment of taxable dividends continue to reduce the cumulative deduction account of Canadian-controlled private corporations.

That, at least, deals with a small part of the point raised by the honourable senator.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for that comment because he is quite right. I did, along with others, I dare say, succeed in convincing the committee that it would be wise to deal with the point in the manner indicated by my honourable friend. The only trouble with that is that it is just a recommendation. Everyone knows what happens to recommendations from Senate committees. If we are very lucky, they may get looked at by those in authority in the other place, but the odds are that this will be nothing more than a recommendation.

My point is that I want to see the bill amended to put some teeth in it. I think we are well within our constitutional prerogative in moving for a reduction in taxation in any bill we get in this house. I would have been much happier if the Senate committee had been able to go that far. I understand perfectly well why they have not, but I will not get into that discussion right now. However, I do want to make it clear that I will not be satisfied until the bill is actually amended.

Senator Flynn: The problem is the time we will have to do that.

Senator Roblin: We will have all three days to argue about it next week.

Senator Flynn: It is a long time.

NEWFOUNDLAND

SEAL HUNT PROTEST ACTIVITIES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with the fact that a protester has his ship, Sea Shepherd, outside the three-mile limit of St. John's, Newfoundland. Yesterday in the other place, the honourable member for St.

John's East, Mr. James A. McGrath, questioned the Minister of Justice as to the jurisdiction of the federal government to apprehend that pest, Paul Watson, and his ship. I wonder whether the Minister of Justice has seen the light since yesterday and will take the action necessary to apprehend the vessel?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had intended to answer the question raised by Senator Marshall on March 15 concerning possible action to be taken against the anti-sealing ship Sea Shepherd, off the coast of Newfoundland when we got to delayed answers, but since the honourable senator has raised the matter, I shall give him the reply now. I can tell him that yesterday the Minister of Justice stated in the other place that if charges were to be laid in this case they would be laid by the Attorney General of Newfoundland, as prescribed by section 433 of the Criminal Code. If some of those involved are not Canadian citizens, he will also require the consent of the Attorney General of Canada. So far, the Attorney General of Newfoundland has not sought that consent. In the meantime, the federal government is clearly and closely monitoring the situation through the Department of Transport and the RCMP.

Senator Marshall: Does the section of the Criminal Code which the Leader of the Government quoted pertain to apprehension within the three-mile limit or outside the three-mile limit?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have that detail in the answer, except to say that the Department of Justice has looked into the matter. I repeat what it says in the delayed answer, that if charges were to be laid in this case—whether it is inside or outside the three-mile limit, it does not say—they would be laid by the Attorney General of Newfoundland as is prescribed in section 433 of the Criminal Code.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Did the Minister of Justice suggest how the Attorney General of Newfoundland shall lay these charges? Is he suggesting that the province send somebody out to arrest the ship or to enforce the law? Exactly how is this procedure to be accomplished? Is the "Royal Newfoundland Navy" supposed to go out and do battle on behalf of the sealers?

Senator Olson: I am not saying that at all. I appreciate that the honourable senator is being a bit facetious but I think he should listen very carefully to what I said, which is, "If there are charges to be laid in this case, they should be laid by the Attorney General of Newfoundland as prescribed by the Criminal Code." I believe my friends have the view that there is a violation under the Criminal Code. If those charges are to be laid, then the law enforcement agencies of this country that have the capacity—and the honourable senator knows who they are—will lay them.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government said, "If charges need to be laid." Certainly, charges need to be laid if an individual publicly utters that he intends to commit certain acts which are detrimental to good order. In other words, the minister's answer is a ridiculous one when this man, Paul Watson, has committed a crime by uttering publicly that he will ram a ship. If nothing is done, it will be like other such situations when, after the damage is done, everybody is sorry. If the Leader of the Government is as concerned about the public of Canada, as he has said, he should take the necessary action to impress on the Minister of Justice that he get on with the job and stop distinguishing apples and oranges.

• (2100)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I find it almost incredible that my honourable friends opposite cannot understand the reply to the question. There is no point in arguing with me as to whether or not I believe charges should be laid. That is not the point. The point is that, under the law of Canada—namely, the Criminal Code, and, to be more specific, section 433 of the Criminal Code—it is clearly stated that, if charges are to be laid, they are to be laid by the Attorney General of Newfoundland. I am not arguing with that one way or another. As far as I know, that is a matter of fact; it is a provision in the statute.

Therefore, it is really not important if I am persuaded whether charges ought or ought not to be laid, because I am not the person who makes that decision. The Attorney General of Newfoundland makes that decision.

Senator Doody: Perhaps, honourable senators, I can try this from another approach. If this were a matter which took place on land—if somebody made a threat against some property on land—I assume that the RCMP would be asked to patrol the area or to look at that particular situation. At least, that would be the case in Newfoundland, if this had happened on land. As it happens, it is occuring just off the mouth of the Narrows of the Port of St. John's, just a mile or so offshore.

My question is: Is there somebody from the Canadian forces—coast guard, navy, air force or whatever—doing any surveillance or patrol to see that Paul Watson does not endanger the lives of those aboard the sealing ships that leave the port of St. John's, or are we going to wait until after the fact in order to have the Attorney General of Newfoundland place charges under the Criminal Code? What exactly is the Government of Canada doing to prevent this monstrous deed from happening?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I suppose there is something wrong with the way I am talking.

Senator Doody: There is no question about that.

Senator Olson: What I have said is absolutely clear and unequivocal. I do not want to have to repeat what I said about who is responsible, generally, under the Criminal Code for laying charges. I think my honourable friend knows that. I then said, slowly and clearly, that in the meantime the federal government is closely monitoring the situation through the Department of Transport and the RCMP. I do not think that I can make it any more brief or clear.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I cannot believe that the honourable minister is as obtuse as he appears to be on this particular evening. I am not interested in who is going to lay charges; I just hope charges will never be laid. I want to know whether the government is going to provide any protection for the people on these ships who will be sailing from the port of St. John's, or whether it will wait until that idiot Watson creates a disaster by ramming one of these ships? I am telling the honourable minister right now that if Watson attempts to ram the ship of one of these sealing captains—if he attempts to ram Morissey Johnson's ship, for instance—there will be blood all over the waterfront, and it won't be Morissey Johnson's.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend can make all the comments that he wishes to make, but this is a serious situation indeed. That has been conveyed, although it did not need to be conveyed. The RCMP, the Department of Transport and the other people who are involved have known that all along.

The point, however, still gets back to answers that I have given two or three times. I do not think that I can add anything to those replies except to repeat them. I presume that my honourable friend's memory is accurate.

Senator Doody: Is the honourable minister now telling us that he will indeed have protection forces on board the sealing ships if they leave the harbour of St. John's? Will there be RCMP people on board to protect the Canadian citizens who will be manning these ships? Are we given that assurance?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is not a decision for the Government of Canada or for the Minister of Justice to take. That ought to be clear. I am not going to attempt to usurp the authority of the Attorney General of Newfoundland; that is also clear. I have already said three times that the federal government has this entire situation under surveillance by the Department of Transport and the RCMP.

Senator Doody: Can we feel reasonably sure, then, that the Government of Canada is certain that all reasonable steps have been taken to ensure that the lives of the seamen on board these ships are being protected?

Senator Olson: I think that my honourable friend ought to rephrase that question. I am not sure whether he understands yet. He has expressed a great deal of concern. I am sure he has done so sincerely and I accept it sincerely, but it seems to me that his representations should be made to the Attorney General of Newfoundland, who has the authority to take action with the police forces in this case.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the Attorney General of Newfoundland does not have the forces—the naval or seagoing forces—at his disposal, as far as I know, sufficient to look after the offshore area. Perhaps prior to 1949 we could have called in the British navy to do something about it, but that is not the point I am trying to make.

I just want the assurance of the minister that the Government of Canada has taken all of the steps that it feels are sufficient to protect the lives and property of the people involved.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF EVALUATION REPORT

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government. A week or so ago I asked the minister for an update on the search and rescue capability in the province of Newfoundland. At that time he said that certain new forces had been allocated and were being assigned. I asked him to tell me what they were and where they were being posted in the province. The minister undertook to get that information.

It is still winter down there; the weather is still pretty difficult. I wonder whether the minister can tell us exactly what these new steps are or whether he has received the information from the appropriate department?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure whether Senator Doody is asking me a question in addition to the detailed information that I have already given him. I did give him a fairly detailed outline of the equipment, where it is located, how much of it is serviceable on very short notice, and so on. If his question pertains to information additional to that which was given, then I do not have a further supplementary answer. As I recall—and perhaps the honourable senator is not aware of that reply—I gave that information approximately 10 days ago.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

"KICK" BOXING

Question No. 100 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

> With regard to the sport of "kick" boxing (i) have any studies been undertaken by the Federal Government to establish whether or not it is dangerous (ii) is it the intention of the Government to investigate the sport (iii) if yes, what are the details and, if no, why not?

Reply by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport:

> (i) Fitness and Amateur Sport has not undertaken any study to determine whether or not the activity "kick" boxing is dangerous.
>
> (ii) It is not the intention of Fitness and Amateur Sport to investigate the activity of "kick" boxing.
>
> (iii) Fitness and Amateur Sport neither recognizes nor funds the activity of "kick" boxing at the amateur level. Nor has Fitness and Amateur Sport any involvement whatsoever with professional sporting activities. As a result there is no legislative basis for such an investigation.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1982-83

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-145, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill being introduced today is Appropriation Bill No. 4, 1982-83. It provides supply for all of the supplementary estimates (C) 1982-83. These are the final supplementary estimates for this year. They total approximately $1.9 billion, and bring the total tabled estimates for 1982-83 to $81.5 billion.

These estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 3, 1983, and were immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The estimates were discussed by the Subcommittee on Estimates, which is chaired by Senator Doody, with the President of the Treasury Board and his officials on March 8, 1983. The committee, as honourable senators are aware, reported back on March 15, 1983, and its report has been debated in the Senate.

Therefore, we have all of the details by way of background to this bill, but honourable senators might be interested in some of the totals or larger dimensions in it. The total of $1.9 billion consists of a net increase in statutory requirements of some $1.1 billion, or approximately 58 per cent of the supplementary estimates. The balance, which is $800 million, is the amount of new spending authority being recommended to Parliament for approval.

Dealing first with the proposed increase in the statutory requirements, it consists of the following major items: $500 million for public debt charges due to larger than forecast borrowings occasioned by the current economic situation; $182 million for additional contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Account as a result of the increased unemployment rate and to the Fishermen's Benefit Account due to a higher number of fishing claims; $88 million in additional contributions to the provinces and territories for hospital insurance, medical care and extended health care; and $76 million of additional contributions to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan.

• (2110)

The amounts that I have given, honourable senators, total $846 million. That leaves approximately $254 million, which consists of various items that honourable senators can find either in supplementary estimates (C) or in the report of the committee that was presented on March 15 last.

The new spending authority being recommended includes two major items. They are: $378 million of additional funds to encourage the purchase of new homes under the Canada Home Ownership Plan, and $130 million for contributions to railway companies to offset revenue losses resulting from carrying "crow rated" grain. As honourable senators will have noted, those two items amount to $508 million. As I said, there is approximately $800 million under these new spending authority heads, and the balance of these items are diverse and minor in comparison to the two I have mentioned. They too can be found in supplementary estimates (C).

Honourable senators, should you require additional information, I would be pleased to try to provide it. I could review the bill in terms of its clause, but it might be more useful to honourable senators if I asked for leave to add as part of my comments and intervention on this bill two tables. One is headed: "Supply to Date for 1982-83." Three appropriation acts have been approved in respect of the 1982-83 estimates, and this is the fourth. The other is headed: "Estimates Tabled to Date for 1982-83."

I should make a comment about the second table. Honourable senators may have noticed that two one-dollar items were struck out on a ruling by the Speaker of the other place. In this table, "Estimates Tabled to Date for 1982-83", the two one-dollar items have not been deducted, because the heading of the table is "Estimates Tabled to Date", so the amount being asked is $2 less than that amount.

It is because of the fact that the estimates which are the foundation of the bill have been studied by the Subcommittee on Estimates of the National Finance Committee, and that the material has been before the Senate and has been debated, that I respectfully suggest there is no need to send this bill back to that committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The tables follow:)

SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1982-83

Three Appropriation Acts have been approved in respect of Estimates for 1982-83:

Supply Approved to Date

Appropriation Act No. 1, 1982-83 which granted Interim Supply for April, May and June including 41 additional proportions, based on the Main Estimates for 1982-83	$ 8,786,438,129.08

Appropriation Act No. 2, 1982-83 which granted Supply for: – the balance of the Main Estimates for 1982-83; and – the whole of Supplementary Estimates (A) for 1982-83	$21,884,514,671.92 114,096,002.00	$21,998,610,673.92
Appropriation Act No. 3, 1982-83 which granted Supply for the whole of Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1982-83		$ 1,914,712,944.00
Total		$32,699,761,747.00
Awaiting Approval
Supply for the whole of Supplementary Estimates (C) for 1982-83		$ 732,190,764.00
Total		$33,431,952,511.00

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1982-83

	TO BE VOTED	STATUTORY	TOTAL
Main Estimates
Budgetary	$30,231,181,946	$42,703,553,496	$72,934,735,442
Non-Budgetary	439,770,855	778,671,000	1,218,441,855
	$30,670,952,801	$43,482,224,496	$74,153,177,297
Supplementary Estimates (A)
Budgetary	$ 114,096,002	$ ...	$ 114,096,002
Non-Budgetary	...	...	...
	$ 114,096,002	$ ...	$ 114,096,002
Supplementary Estimates (B)
Budgetary	$ 1,877,267,790	$ 3,327,792,416	$ 5,205,060,206
Non-Budgetary	37,445,154	83,804,000	121,249,154
	$ 1,914,712,944	$ 3,411,596,416	$ 5,326,309,360
Supplementary Estimates (C)
Budgetary	$ 723,207,765	$ 1,058,931,229	$ 1,782,138,994
Non-Budgetary	8,983,001	82,370,000	91,353,001
	*$ 732,190,766	$ 1,141,301,229	$ 1,873,491,995
TOTAL ESTIMATES TABLED
Budgetary	$32,945,753,503	$47,090,277,141	$80,036,030,644
Non-Budgetary	486,199,010	944,845,000	1,431,044,010
	$33,431,952,513	$48,035,122,141	$81,467,074,654

* Two votes (Fisheries and Oceans Vote L11c and Industry, Trade and Commerce Vote 10c) were deleted by the Speaker of the House of Commons on March 21, 1983.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the sponsor of the bill? When the supplementary estimates were before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, the President of the Treasury Board and the officials assured the committee that the items were all in order. What is the difference between the interpretation made by the Speaker of the other place and the explanation given by the President of the Treasury Board to the committee?

Senator Frith: There was a debate in the other place on a point of order raised regarding these two one-dollar items. The position taken by Mr. Harvie Andre, the member raising the point of order, in each case, both on the fishermen item and on the Treasury Board item, was that in effect legislation was being amended. The position taken by the President of the Treasury Board before the committee was consistent with the position that he took with the Speaker, namely, that that was not the case, but the Speaker ruled in favour of Mr. Andre and for that reason, these two one-dollar items were struck out.

In the case of the fishermen item, what will happen is that the government will have to introduce amending legislation. With reference to the other item, legislation has been before the house for some time, and has not yet been dealt with.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, on this particular set of supplementary estimates, you will recall that the subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance reported on Wednesday last, and at that time I had some comments to make on the estimates. They were not particularly complimentary comments, nevertheless, they were reasonably accurate. One of the comments I made was that 64 per cent of the items of the supplementary estimates to be voted are statutory. I notice that the sponsor of the bill tells us that approximately 50 per cent are statutory. One of us is wrong, and I mention that because anybody reading Hansard is going to notice the discrepancy. I will try to find out where and what the difference is, and make the necessary correction.

It is interesting to note that the one-dollar votes ran into trouble in the other place. We discussed them at some length in committee. They were defended by the Treasury Board officials as really housekeeping and a convenient way of moving money from vote to vote; nevertheless many of the members voiced their disapproval in committee. I repeated it here in the chamber on Wednesday last, saying that this is not the proper way to deal with the public funds of the country. Money should be spent only on that for which it is voted and, in the event that it is not spent in that way, it should be allowed to lapse and authority should be sought from Parliament for new funding for new areas and items. I know it is convenient for the bookkeepers in the treasury board to move money around from vote to vote and from place to place, but that is not the intent of the Parliament of Canada, which is the keeper of the purse. I am indeed pleased to see the Speaker support the opposition's concerns on that matter.

I see no point, honourable senators, in going through the amounts item by item. Let me say that this is another $1.9 billion added to the excessive amounts of money required for the operation of this government. It is of concern to many of us that so much of this money is tied in to pre-committed spending which allows very little leeway for government to operate new programs or even, indeed, to change existing programs. It is just a built-in invitation for deficit financing, and some way must be found to try and control the prior commitments before the money is voted. We are now at close to 70 per cent on pre-commitment spending, and that is a most unhealthy situation.

Once again, as we have pointed out, the largest single amount included in these supplementary estimates is the $500 million additional cost of servicing the public debt. I question what percentage of the spending of the country can be devoted to servicing the debt. Obviously, if it is the wish of government so to do, it can all be devoted to servicing debt. One has to recognize the fact that the more money that is committed for servicing debt, the less money there is for those social programs that are so desperately needed and for the housekeeping affairs of government such as defence, transfer payments and so on.

As I said on Wednesday, we will have a great deal more to say about this when the main estimates come before us later.

• (2120)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have nothing to add to what I said in my introductory remarks. Therefore, I ask for your support of the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1983-84

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-146, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

He said: Honourable senators, Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84 is properly described as interim supply because what is being asked here is the supply of money to follow through and give effect to government programs while Parliament is studying the estimates for the year 1983-84.

It is important to understand that the voting of interim supply—and that is "interim" in the right sense of the word—is the supply of a kind of cash advance while the study that is being asked for is taking place. It is important also to note that a vote in favour of this bill does not in any way inhibit criticism of the estimates that are the subject matter of the bill. Furthermore, the bill asks for a proportion of the total estimates, although not always the same proportion of each item.

Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84 provides interim supply for the first three months of the new fiscal year. The 1983-84 estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 1, 1983, and immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The Subcommittee on Estimates discussed these estimates with the President of the Treasury Board and his officials on March 15, 1983.

The "amounts to be voted" in the main estimates total about $33 billion.

This appropriation bill contains $9.328 billion of "voted" items which are needed to meet government expenditure requirements to the end of June, while these estimates are being reviewed by the various committees. A second appropriation bill will be introduced prior to June 30, 1983 to secure release of the balance of the estimates.

Honourable senators, the bill contains a general proportion of three-twelfths of all votes plus additional proportions for some 31 votes. The additional proportions are required mainly to meet payments of a seasonal nature of some programs, and to meet the need in other instances to make major payments before the end of June.

I should emphasize that, as usual, in no case is Parliament being asked to pass the entire amount of a vote—that is, twelve-twelfths. The proportions that I have just referred to, honourable senators, are found in the bill in clause 2. If you turn to the top of page 2 you will see items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f). These are the additional amounts over the three-twelfths for all votes. At the back of the bill you will find Schedules A, B, C, D and E, in which details of the votes are set out. In each case they fall into the general category I have mentioned. In other words, they are normally to meet payments of a seasonal nature for some programs and, in other instances, to meet the need to make payments before the end of June.

Honourable senators, if you wish me to provide any further explanation I will do my best to do so. I ask your support for the second reading of this bill.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, although I do not have a copy of the bill in front of me I can tell you that it pretty well follows the standard procedure for an interim supply bill. To say the least, it would be unseemly of the Senate to deny interim supply to the government, and, frankly, I would be the last one to hasten my departure by so suggesting.

The main estimates are now before the subcommittee, and a series of meetings to examine them has been scheduled. For example, on Tuesday next two witnesses will come to try to unravel for us the mystery of full employment budgeting, which has been talked about so much recently. They will no doubt tell us that we really do not have a deficit because, if we had full employment, we would not have a deficit, and, therefore, the deficit we have is really not a real deficit. However, we do have a series of meetings scheduled to examine these estimates and we will report on those estimates in due time.

In the meantime I see no objection, under these circumstances, to agreeing to the interim supply measure as asked for by the government.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I warn honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have but two items to mention. Senator Doody is correct that the form of the bill is the usual form for an interim supply measure. That is true in every respect. I find no difference in form between this measure and previous interim supply bills.

My second point is that I wish to stress, as he implied, that the passing of the bill will not abridge the rights of senators to criticize any item in the estimates when the estimates come up for consideration in committee. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected, and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

I should mention as a final item, honourable senators, that I have two tables which you might find useful in understanding the bill. The first is headed: "Total Supply 1983-84," and the second is headed: "Estimates Tabled to Date for 1983-84." I would ask that those tables be printed in Hansard at this point in my remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The tables follow:)

TOTAL SUPPLY, 1983-84

Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84

This Bill when passed will provide Interim Supply for the Main Estimates for 1983-84.

This Bill (Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84) will provide:
Three-twelfths generally of the Main Estimates for 1983-84 plus 31 additional proportions of special items to provide for expenditures for April to June inclusive	$ 9,328,506,277.74
Balance yet to be voted	23,618,654,033.26
Total to be voted	$32,947,160,311.00

Interim Supply for April to June, 1983

The Proposed Bill will provide:
In respect of the Estimates, 1983-84

(a)	Three-twelfths of all items to be voted in the Estimates.		$8,236,790,077.75
(b)	An additional eight-twelfths of
	Transport	Vote 25
	Treasury Board	Vote 10
		(Schedule A)	$ 121,279,333.33
(c)	An additional five-twelfths of
	Communications	Vote 45
	Transport	Vote 20
	Treasury Board	Vote 5
		(Schedule B)	$ 136,437,500.00
(d)	An additional three-twelfths of
	Public Works	Vote 55
	Transport	Votes 35, L40 and 65
		(Schedule C)	$ 72,285,250.00
(e)	An additional two-twelfths of
	Communications	Vote 55 and 85
	Energy, Mines and Resources	Vote 25
	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	Votes 15 and 35
	Public Works	Vote 50
	Secretary of State	Vote 25
		(Schedule D)	$ 351,525,783.33
(f)	An additional one-twelfth of
	Communications	Vote 20
	Employment and Immigration	Votes 15 and 25
	Energy, Mines and Resources	Vote 1
	Environment	Vote 15
	External Affairs	Vote 30
	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	Vote 40
	Labour	Vote 5
	National Health and Welfare	Vote 45
	Public Works	Votes 10 and 45
	Supply and Services	Vote 1
	Transport	Votes 45 and 80
	Veterans Affairs	Vote 25
		(Schedule E)	$ 410,188,333.33
			$9,328,506,277.74

Estimates Division
March, 1983

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1983-84

Main Estimates	TO BE VOTED	STATUTORY	TOTAL
Budgetary	$32,548,669,511	$53,069,529,722	$85,618,199,233
Non-Budgetary	398,490,800	1,444,163,000	1,842,653,800
	$32,947,160,311	$54,513,692,722	$87,460,853,033

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

• (2130)

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, March 24, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5461)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

SECOND REPORT ON THE ADVANCE STUDY OF BUDGET RESOLUTIONS RESPECTING INCOME TAX AND OTHER MATTERS RELATING THERETO

MARCH 22, 1983

On November 12, 1981, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, Minister of Finance, delivered in the House of Commons, the budget which forms the basis of the matters before the Committee.

By Order of Reference of March 24, 1982, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and consider the following:

(i) Budget tax changes tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on November 12, 1981, and the impact thereof on taxpayers;

(ii) documents tabled December 18, 1981, by the said Minister of Finance in the House of Commons relating to some enumerated Budget tax measures announced on November 12, 1981, and describing the tax treatment proposed to be accorded thereto;

(iii) the proposals made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on December 18, 1981, for adjustments in some measures contained in the Budget resolutions;

(iv) the further proposals made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on December 18, 1981, for referral of some tax measures contained in the Budget resolutions to a parliamentary committee as follows:

Rules relating to corporate re-organization, taxation of whole life insurance, charitable foundations, retirement allowances and work in progress; and

(v) any bills based on the Budget tax changes in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate and any other matters relating thereto.

By a further Order of Reference of November 30, 1982, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and consider the following:

(i) Budget tax changes proposed by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on June 28, 1982, and the impact thereof on taxpayers;

(ii) the Statement of the Minister of Finance to the House of Commons on October 27, 1982, on the Economic Outlook and Financial Position of the Government of Canada; and

(iii) any bills and other matters relating to the Budget tax changes in advance of their coming before the Senate.

In accordance with the Orders of Reference, your Committee has considered the Budget tax changes tabled on November 12, 1981, and the documents tabled December 18, 1981, by the former Minister of Finance. The Committee has also considered press releases issued by the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue announcing amendments to income tax legislation and assessing practice, the Ways and Means Motion tabled on February 1, 1982 respecting aviation fuel used on international flights, the Budget tax changes announced June 28, 1982, the detailed Notice of Ways and Means Motions tabled the same date and the Statement on the Economic Outlook and the Financial Position of the Government of Canada presented by the Honourable Marc Lalonde, Minister of Finance, on October 27, 1982, the Notice of Ways and Means Motion tabled by the Minister of State (Finance) on December 1, 1982, and Bill C-139 which received first reading on December 7, 1982. In connection with such consideration, the Committee has engaged the services of Mr. Charles Albert Poissant and Mr. Helmut Birk of Thorne Riddell, Chartered Accountants, Montreal and has retained as its counsel, Mr. Thomas S. Gillespie of Ogilvy, Renault, Montreal. Since tabling its first report dated December 1, 1982, the Committee has heard evidence from the Air Transport Association of Canada, the International Air Transport Association and Shell Canada Limited, has received representations from the Air Transportation Association of America on behalf of U.S. airlines serving Canada and from the law firm of Doheny Mackenzie, Montreal, on behalf of 15 foreign air carriers and has heard evidence from Mr. R. A. Short, General Director, Tax Policy and Legislation Branch and other officials from the Department of Finance.

The budget proposals announced on November 12, 1981, were important and extensive and many of such proposals were made effective as of that date. Substantial changes have been made to many of the Budget measures originally introduced with effect, in most cases, as of the date of the announced changes. Several of the November 12, 1981 Budget proposals have been amended more than once. As a result, taxpayers have had great difficulty in keeping abreast of the changes and arranging their affairs accordingly. More than 16 months have passed since the original Budget resolutions were introduced. It is regrettable that the Budget measures have taken so long to be enacted, particularly when such measures have retroactive effect to the date of their introduction. It is hoped that future budget measures can be implemented more expeditiously. The long period of time between the delivery of the November 12, 1981 Budget and its final enactment into legislation has caused unnecessary delay and confusion with adverse consequences to Canadian taxpayers and the economy.

AVIATION TURBINE FUEL

Since the presentation to the Senate of its first report, the Committee has heard considerable evidence on the subject of aviation turbine fuel pricing. The price of fuel consumed in Canada until recently has been substantially lower than world prices because of national energy pricing policies. As a result, international airlines flying into Canada were able to take advantage of lower prices for Canadian fuel.

The Federal Government introduced its National Energy Program on October 28, 1980. The then Minister of Finance, The Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, announced the introduction of the Transportation Fuel Compensation Recovery Charge (TFCRC) on aviation turbine and marine fuels used in international transportation. The purpose of the introduction of TFCRC was to ensure that aviation and marine fuel bunkers for international use were sold at world prices and that the Federal Government would be able to recover the difference between prices of domestic and imported crude oil.

The TFCRC was introduced by Notice of Ways and Means Motion by the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, The Honourable Marc Lalonde, dated April 23, 1981, which provided that, effective May 1, 1981, the TFCRC was to be imposed on all aviation and marine fuels consumed by carriers with international destinations and the legislation enacting it was part of the Energy Administration Act.

Strong representations were made to the Federal Government that the TFCRC should not be imposed because, inter alia, it was in violation of resolutions of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and Canada's bilateral air transport agreements, which generally provide that no tax or similar charge shall be levied on fuel used in international transportation. The TFCRC was withdrawn effective February 1, 1982, after the United States of America requested arbitration of its claim that the TFCRC was in violation of the Canada-United States Air Services Agreement and the Department of External Affairs, on February 9, 1982, advised foreign embassies that their airlines would be reimbursed the TFCRC paid to January 31, 1982. In order to provide for the same treatment to Canadian carriers a Remission Order was made on January 20, 1983 pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act which provided for the refunding to Canadian airlines of TFCRC paid for the period ending January 31, 1982.

The TFCRC was replaced, effective February 1, 1982, by the application of provisions of the National Energy Board Act and announced amendments to the Income Tax Act (subclauses 2, 3 and 5 of Clause 38, subclause 123(2) and Clause 125 of Bill C-139). This was effected by the tabling in the House of Commons of a Ways and Means Motion by the then Minister of State for Finance, the Honourable Pierre Bussières. Pursuant to this measure, the National Energy Board established a "mimimum, just and reasonable price" for aviation fuel sold to air carriers for consumption on international flights. Amendments made to the National Energy Board Act, which came into force on July 23, 1982, provided that the Governor in Council could prescribe by regulation the price at which such fuel should be sold for international flights.

The amendments to the Income Tax Act are intended to allow the Government to recover the difference between the prescribed price and the domestic price through an additional income tax imposed on fuel suppliers who sell fuel for international flights from February 1, 1982. Subclause 38(2) of the Bill will require fuel suppliers to include in their income for tax purposes a deemed amount in respect of aviation fuel sold for international transportation. This amount will be prescribed from time to time by regulation and will not be received by the suppliers.

By requiring fuel suppliers to charge a minimum, just and reasonable price in excess of contract prices and also requiring them to include "phantom" amounts in income for tax purposes, the Government expects to receive additional income tax from the fuel suppliers equal to the difference between contract prices and the minimum, just and reasonable price. The additional income tax would be, in effect, in substitution for the TFCRC. Furthermore, it is also intended that by this method the after-tax income of fuel suppliers from sales of fuels used in international transportation will be approximately the same as from sales of fuel for use in domestic transportation.

The Air Transport Association of Canada, representing Canadian carriers in the international markets, has submitted that the sections in question of Bill C-139 be deleted, inter alia, for the following reasons:

(1) The financial health of the Canadian airline industry is critical and the cost of these measures from February 1, 1982 to date is estimated to be approximately $50 million. This is a substantial amount when compared with the consolidated financial loss of all Canadian airlines last year which amounted to approximately $150 million.

They allege further:

(2) that there is serious doubt as to the legality of the legislation, alleging that the aviation fuel has not been "exported".

(3) That these pricing measures will not result in an equivalent amount of tax revenue to the Government. Rather, the tax on the additional income of a fuel supplier may be deferred, depending on its effective tax rate and taxable position.

(4) That these measures impose a tax or charge on aviation fuel used in international air service and constitute a breach of bilateral air transport agreements between Canada and other nations whose aircraft operate into this country (of which there are approximately 34). Such agreements contain clauses similar to that of the Canada-United States Air Services Agreement which reads as follows:

"Each Contracting Party shall exempt the designated airlines of the other Contracting Party to the fullest extent possible under its national law for import restrictions, customs duties, excise taxes, inspection fees and other national duties and charges on fuel, lubricating oils, consumable technical supplies, spare parts including engines, regular equipment, ground equipment, stores and other items intended for use solely in connection with the operation of servicing of aircraft of the airlines of such other Contracting Party in international air service."

They anticipate that further protests similar to protests against the TFCRC will follow the enactment of the amendments proposed in Bill C-139 and, furthermore, that Canadian airlines can expect retaliatory action by other countries.

(5) That, furthermore, if the legislation is not a scheme of taxation, but is a mandatory fixing of prices to be charged by fuel suppliers to airlines, it is unconstitutional as it invades the provincial jurisdiction of property and civil rights.

The International Air Transport Association ("IATA") took the same position that these measures represent a tax on international aviation fuel and, as such, are in violation of Canada's obligations under its bilateral air service agreements. They argued furthermore that these provisions are in direct contradiction to the resolutions and recommendations of ICAO, of which Canada is the host state and a member. Furthermore, 15 foreign air carriers have indicated, through counsel, that they support the arguments submitted by IATA.

Shell Canada Limited, in turn, has argued that the measures have had the effect of distorting the marketplace and have caused Canadian fuel suppliers to lose substantial business to the foreign suppliers. They have argued that the minimum, just and reasonable price for aviation turbine fuel used on international flights has in many instances been in excess of average U.S. major airport contract prices. As a result, Canadian petroleum suppliers are losing volume to suppliers at U.S. airports. The estimated loss in the last year aggregates approximately 100 million litres.

In addition, it is understood that the United States authorities have argued that the provisions are discriminatory. Foreign carriers engaged in international flights are required to pay the minimum, just and reasonable price when purchasing fuel. On the other hand, it is impossible to determine, at the time of purchase, whether a Canadian carrier will be using the fuel for international or domestic flights. Clause 125 of the Bill would require Canadian air carriers to complete certificates in prescribed form specifying the amount of aviation turbine fuel which was used on international flights. The Canadian air carriers have argued that they need not comply with this regulation until passage of Bill C-139, as the regulations cannot be in effect until the Act authorizing them has been enacted. Consequently, as of the date of this report, Canadian air carriers have not yet complied with this request for information based on proposed regulations not yet in effect.

With respect to the foregoing objections, the Committee notes as follows:

The Department of Finance officials have argued that the price discrepancies noted by Shell Canada may have been selective and could not be interpreted as a general condition. They pointed out that the National Energy Board in arriving at a minimum, just and reasonable price examines world prices on a monthly basis. The officials agree, however, that a minimum, just and reasonable price in excess of the U.S. price would result in a loss of sales for Canadian suppliers.

With respect to the breach of Canada's obligations under its bilateral air services agreements, officials from the Department of Finance have argued that the substance of the measures is a pricing of fuel and not the levying of a tax or other charge.

Serious and complex legal issues are raised with the arguments relating to breach of Canada's international obligations.

It is significant to note the following provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, to which Canada is a party:

"Article 31, General Rule of Interpretation

1. A treaty shall be interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of the treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose.

. . .

3. There shall be taken into account, together with the context:

. . .

(b) any subsequent practice in the application of the treaty which establishes the agreement of the parties regarding its interpretation: . . . ."

That is to say, Canada cannot do indirectly what it has agreed, by treaty, not to do directly. In the present context, Canada cannot impose by a price-fixing mechanism or otherwise "import restrictions, custom duties, excise taxes, inspection fees and other national duties and charges" on aviation fuel used on international flights.

According to Duff J. In Lawson v. Interior Tree Fruit & Vegetable Committee, [1931] S.C.R. 357, a levy is a tax if it is (1) enforceable by law; (2) imposed under the authority of the legislature; (3) imposed by a public body; and (4) made for a public purpose. The word "charge" is of broader application than the word "tax".

Thus, it appears to the Committee that serious arguments can be raised in support of the position that the measures under consideration are contrary to Canada's bilateral air service agreements.

The Committee is prepared to recommend the deletion of provisions that are clearly unconstitutional or otherwise illegal. Officials of the Department of Finance have testified that their counsel was of the opinion that the measures were not contrary to Canada's bilateral air service agreements. The Committee has not had full opportunity to review all the legal issues in this regard and, therefore, is not prepared to go so far as to recommend deletion of the relevant provisions from Bill C-139.

The allegation that these measures may create a windfall for fuel suppliers is not accurate according to the submission by Shell Canada. They pointed out that in many cases Canadian fuel suppliers experience a lower after-tax return on fuel sales for international flights than for domestic flights. This will occur where the price charged for fuel on domestic flights exceeds the minimum, just and reasonable price charged for fuel on international flights. Also a lower return will result if the deemed income under the proposed provisions in the Income Tax Act exceeds the price differential between the contract price and the minimum, just and reasonable price. It is accurate to say that the legislation will not enable Canada to recover the full amount of the price differential between contract price and the minimum, just and reasonable price in respect of aviation fuel used on international flights. For these measures to have full impact, oil suppliers must be in a fully taxable position. However, oil suppliers are in a position to defer or reduce taxes through the use of a number of provisions in the Income Tax Act. For example, Petro-Canada is currently not in a taxable position, and therefore, these measures are of no immediate impact in raising tax revenues. In addition to the aforementioned deferment of tax, officials from the Department of Finance have admitted that these provisions are not fully effective as they anticipate recovering only between 60% and 70% of what they would have recovered if the TFCRC had remained in place. This is due to the participation of the Provinces in the additional tax and partly due to the effective tax rate of fuel suppliers of less than 50%.

In conclusion, the Committee supports measures to eliminate subsidization by the Canadian Government of fuel used in international flights. However, the proposed measures concerning aviation fuel are harmful and cause great concern to your Committee. The additional revenue from fuel for international flights will not be fully recovered by the Federal and Provincial Governments of Canada; Canadian sales may be lost to U.S. suppliers of fuel; and the legislation in question may also invite retaliation by other countries and is being challenged as being unconstitutional or contrary to Canada's bilateral air service agreements.

Furthermore, there is no criteria for the establishment of the "minimum, just and reasonable" price and the "phantom" amount to be included in income of suppliers nor is there any appeal with respect thereto.

At the present moment, the price of Canadian fuel may be moving toward world prices and therefore the impact of the minimum, just and reasonable price and the effect of proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act may be minimal or of no impact at all. Should Canadian prices remain approximately equal to world prices, the proposed legislation would not be required.

The Committee has many grave concerns regarding the aviation turbine fuel proposals in Bill C-139. The Committee urges the Government to give immediate and intensive consideration to these proposals and the objections that have been raised by the airline industry and discussed in this report.

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS

The Committee made a number of recommendations in its first report dated December 1, 1982 and tabled in the Senate on December 9, 1982.

With respect to its recommendations relating to after-tax financing, the Committee is pleased to note that Bill C-139 contains amendments which eliminate the concerns expressed by the Committee in its first report.

The Committee has heard evidence from officials of the Department of Finance and has discussed its recommendations with them and has the following comments to make:

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE

The Committee recommended in its first report as follows:

> "... that the measure to reduce CCA to ½ the normal rate in the year of acquisition be given further consideration and be modified.
>
> Amendments to the proposed rules might provide:
>
> —that the restrictive rules apply only to classes of assets with a CCA rate of 50% or more (24, 27, 29); or
>
> —that the CCA rate for all passenger automobiles be increased to 40%, and not only for the daily car rental business as announced on May 31, 1982; or
>
> —that taxpayers are provided with the option of following the restricted CCA rule in the year of acquisition or a system which allows for full CCA on assets acquired during the first 6 months of the year; or
>
> —any combination of one or more of the foregoing."

The measure to reduce CCA to ½ the normal rate in the year of acquisition is estimated in the November 12, 1981 Budget Papers to have the largest positive impact for the federal revenue of all budget measures introduced (in excess of $1.1 billion for 1982/83) and will help in large measure to offset loss of revenue anticipated from the reduction in marginal tax rates for individuals.

The Committee has received representations from the Canadian Automotive Leasing Association urging that the CCA rate for all leased automobiles be increased to 40% (only daily leased vehicles and taxis are entitled to a CCA rate of 40%). They have prepared a study relating to increasing deficiency between CCA and actual market depreciation with respect to passenger cars and light duty trucks. Assuming a first-year purchase base of 4,000 motor vehicles costing $10,000 each, their study shows that CCA has been insufficient to offset actual depreciation by $2,730,570 after the end of 10 years. Thus, after 10 years, approximately $1,365,285 would have been paid in corporate income taxes due to insufficient CCA. The Canadian Automotive Leasing Association has argued that the reduced CCA will produce an important detrimental effect on cash flow.

In view of the foregoing and previous submissions made to the Committee by the Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations of Canada and commented on in its first report, the Committee recommends that immediate attention be given to increasing the CCA rate for all passenger automobiles.

12.5% DISTRIBUTION TAX

Clause 109 of the Bill introduces a new tax of 12.5% on corporate dividends paid out of income which has benefitted from the small business tax rate. This tax ensures that the total tax paid by a corporation and its shareholders is substantially the same as if its income were earned directly by the shareholders. Thus, integration is achieved for earnings flowing through a corporation which qualifies for the small business tax rate.

Proposed subsection 181(4) of the Act would deal with the case where a corporation's potential liability for Part II tax is reduced by virtue of an amalgamation or winding-up. This subsection would provide a tax equal to the amount of the reduction of the potential tax liability which would arise, for example, in a case where a corporation with a surplus amalgamated with a corporation with a deficit. Under the proposed provision, there would be tax liability even though no distribution were made to the shareholders. Subsection 181(4) is an anti-avoidance measure. Officials of the Department have indicated that in the absence of this subsection, there could be circumstances in which small businessmen might avoid paying the 12.5% tax by means of amalgamations or winding-up. However, it has been pointed out that, the proposed measures would unduly restrict legitimate corporate amalgamations or liquidations. The Department of Finance officials have recognized the difficulty and have undertaken to reconsider this matter further and bring forth appropriate amendments.

CUMULATIVE DEDUCTION ACCOUNT

It is proposed that the small business deduction be denied to any corporation that has earned an aggregate of $1 million of income. Such corporations would no longer be entitled to maintain the small business deduction by the payment of dividends.

The taxation of small business is based on tax neutrality; i.e. an individual receiving income through a corporation in the form of dividends will pay the same amount of tax as if he received it directly in the form of business income.

The Committee considered that the proposed amendment would conflict with the principle of neutrality. That is to say, individuals receiving income by way of a dividend through corporations which had earned an aggregate of more than $1 million of income would pay more tax than if they received it directly in the form of business income. The payment of higher taxes, it was argued in the Committee's first report, would mean a substantial reduction in annual cash flow and earnings and increase the element of risk for Canadian-controlled-private corporations. This measure was considered to be detrimental to small business at a time when government policy sought to strengthen the small business sector which accounts for a significant portion of employment in Canada.

Officials from the Department of Finance have argued that corporations which have aggregated $1 million in income are no longer small businesses and it was never intended that there be integration for larger corporations.

It is the Committee's view that small and medium-sized businesses should be given every encouragement to grow. The November 12, 1981 Budget Papers indicate that the revenue effect of this measure is negligible. With the introduction of the 12.5% distribution tax, the small business deduction represents a deferment of tax rather than a permanent tax saving as heretofore. Therefore, the Committee considers that the reasons set forth in its first report respecting the payment of taxable dividends and the reduction of the cumulative deduction account of Canadian-controlled-private corporations still apply. The benefit to small and medium-sized corporations engaged in active business will more than offset the temporary deferment of federal revenue. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that the payment of taxable dividends continue to reduce the cumulative deduction account of Canadian-controlled-private corporations.

AUTOMOBILE STANDBY CHARGE

It is proposed to increase the minimum standby charge subject to tax in an employee's hands where personal use is made of a company car. For company-owned automobiles, the standby charge will be increased from 1% per month to 2% per month; in the case of leased cars, the standby charge will be increased from one-third of the leasing cost to two-thirds of the leasing cost.

The Committee noted in its report that the benefit taxed bore no relation to the value of the automobile; it related to the automobile's original cost. It was suggested that it would be more realistic to compute the benefit by relating the benefit to the automobile's value each year.

Officials from the Department of Finance have argued that while the standby charge is arbitrary, it understates the real value of the benefit. They argue that there would be significant problems of administration and compliance if the benefit were measured by the value of the automobile. They argue that a formula must be devised that produces a fair result and is certain in its application.

INVESTMENT TAX CREDITS AND LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS

Limited partnerships have become an important vehicle for financing major industrial projects, particularly those projects which qualify for investment tax credits. Investment tax credits must be claimed within five years of qualifying expenditures being incurred. It is often difficult for such ventures to claim the investment tax credits because they are not profitable within that period. However, individuals participating in limited partnerships can participate in such ventures while, at the same time, making use of the investment tax credits and accelerated capital cost allowances.

Investment tax credit claimed reduces the capital cost of property (Section 13(7.1) of the Act). Subsection 127(12) of the Act ensures that the investment tax credit allocated to a partner reduces the capital cost to the partnership of the depreciable asset under subsection 13(7.1).

Subclause 22(8) of the Bill proposes to amend paragraph 53(2)(c) of the Act to reduce the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest by an amount equal to the investment tax credit claimed by the partner. Thus, the investment tax credit will reduce the cost to the partnership of the property acquired and also reduce the adjusted cost base of the partner's interest in the partnership. Subclause 22(8) is applicable with respect to investment tax credits deducted for 1982 and subsequent taxation years. It is, therefore applicable not only to assets acquired in 1982 but to assets acquired prior to 1982 and therefore is a measure of retrospective application.

The evidence in support of the measure by officials from the Department of Finance is that, prior to the introduction of this amendment, there was no reduction in the adjusted cost base of a partnership interest in respect of investment tax credits being claimed. As a result, the Department of National Revenue proposed to take the position that investment tax credits claimed by individual partners be deemed to be income in their hands and be taxed at appropriate rates. This result was deemed to be inappropriate by the Department of Finance and, accordingly, amendments were introduced to paragraph 12(1)(t) (subclause 4(5) of the Bill) which provides that if the investment tax credit were to reduce the adjusted cost base of a partner's interest in a partnership, no amount would be included in the partner's income pursuant to 12(1)(t). The Department argues that the amendment to paragraph 53(2)(c) was a necessary consequence to the amendment to paragraph 12(1)(t). They argue that therefore the amendments, while retrospective, are of a relieving nature. They agreed, however, that it was never the intent to treat investment tax credits deemed as income and Revenue Canada have not assessed such amounts. They also agreed that the amount of the investment tax credit did not heretofore reduce the adjusted cost base of a partnership interest.

The Committee agrees that the investment tax credit should reduce the adjusted cost base of a partnership interest. However, the proposed amendments in subclauses 4(5) and 22(8) of Bill C-139 would appear to have the effect of correcting a minor technical deficiency in paragraph 12(1)(t) of the Act and at the same time providing for a taxing provision by an amendment to paragraph 53(2)(c) of the Act. Furthermore, these amendments have implications in the computation of income of the limited partner.

These proposed amendments in Bill C-139 were not included in the Budget of November 12, 1981, in the proposed Budget changes of June 28, 1982 nor in the Statement of the Minister of Finance to the House of Commons on October 22, 1982.

Inasmuch as these measures have a retrospective tax effect with regard to investments completed or projects significantly advanced at the time of the introduction of the Bill, the Committee recommends that provisions be implemented eliminating the retrospective application of these measures.

CONCLUSION

The Committee has reviewed the matters set forth in the Orders of Reference in accordance with its terms of reference and, except as noted above, has no comment to make at this time.

The Committee wishes to express its thanks to Mr. Gillespie and to Mr. Birk for their assistance in this matter.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE J. McILRAITH,
Acting Chairman.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 24, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE BUDGET TABLED

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled a report approving the supplementary budget of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the representative of the committee just what he has done? He has tabled a report approving certain expenditures. Will the Senate be asked to approve that report and have an opportunity to discuss its contents?

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, I do not know the procedure, but I understood that it was merely a matter of tabling the report.

Senator Roblin: I am concerned by the wording of my honourable friend's statement. Tabling the report is one thing, but he then described the report as having approved certain expenditure estimates, and that is another thing altogether. As far as I am aware, tabling does not in and of itself constitute approval of the report by the Senate. If Senate approval is required, a motion to accept the report would be in order. That is the normal course of events. I put it to the house that it is probably the course of events that ought to apply to this tabling as well, but I invite comments on the subject before I raise it as a point of order.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe the report approves a budget rather than an expenditure. The provision that seems to deal with this question is rule 83A. Rule 83A(2) reads, in part:

> A committee that has been empowered by the Senate to incur special expenses in respect of any matter referred to it by the Senate—

And it goes on to refer to supplementary budgets.

Rule 83A(3) reads:

> The Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration or a senator acting for him, shall, as soon as that committee has reached a decision concerning any budget or supplementary budget presented to it pursuant to this rule—

Which is the case here.

> —report to the Senate giving the substance of the budget concerned and indicating the nature of its decision thereon.
>
> (4) Each report of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration relating to a budget presented to that committee pursuant to this rule shall be printed—and so on. I think the expenditures then have to take place in accordance with the budget. It is from rule 83A(3) and (4) that this procedure gets its authority. But that is not a total answer to my honourable friend's question, as to where we get the eventual authority from the Senate to make the actual expenditures pursuant to the approved budget.

• (1410)

Senator Roblin: That is precisely the point. Honourable senators, as I read rule 83A, it provides that the Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee can table the decision of the committee concerning any budget, but then the capacity to spend the money thereafter, which is obviously not included in the tabling of his report, is subject to the approval of the Senate.

Some of us on this side have a desire to talk about this report, and I am anxious to preserve its status so that we have a chance to debate it. I would appreciate an indication from the government that it is their intention to move approval of the report at an early stage so that we may have a chance to discuss it before it becomes part of the law of the land.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I certainly undertake to take whatever steps are necessary for the Senate to debate the question of the budget, the authority and the spending. I am not clear as to what form that will take, but I understand the substance of what Senator Roblin is asking, and that is what we will undertake to do in accordance with the rules.

Senator Roblin: I would appreciate it if there were some indication in the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate that this matter was, in fact, in suspense awaiting some indication of how it should be handled, rather than have the tabling proceeded with without any further comment; otherwise, we might lose track of it.

Senator Frith: It is certainly agreed that the tabling is not intended to foreclose the type of discussion Senator Roblin is asking for.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, do I take it that the expenditures authorized in this report will also be held in abeyance until the Senate has discussed the matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is a problem here with respect to how many times this authority is given. If we want to change the practice of the Senate so that the reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration are not just tabled, as happened today, but, in fact, are moved for adoption, then we should take a day or two, at least, to consider what is involved in that.

The Senate certainly has before it, from time to time, the estimates of all branches of government including its own expenses. Once that is done, it is not the practice to bring back each detail of authority under those spending estimates because the authority has been transferred to the Internal Economy Committee.

This is, I think, an attempt to set up a different procedure, and I am not prepared to argue that now. The undertakings given by the deputy leader will certainly be respected. If it is the wish of honourable senators to debate this particular report, I have no problem with that, but authority has already been given to the committee to handle these financial matters. If we now want to have those reports brought to this chamber in such a way that they have to be adopted, then that is, in fact, a change from the practice of the past. That is why I think we should think about that for a day or two, but, as I say, I have no objection to debating this one.

Senator Roblin: I see the point my honourable friend is making. It is quite true that, as a general rule, we have no problem with this kind of action on the part of a committee. However, I do submit to him that there is a certain looseness in the wording which would justify the consideration which I understand he is going to give this question. In describing the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, rule 67(1)(f) states that the committee is > —empowered on its own initiative to consider—

"Consider" is the word that is used.

> —any matter relating to the internal economy of the Senate—

That is what the committee has done; it has made a report to the Senate. However, there seems to be a missing link here—I do not know whether we ignored it in the past because we did not think it was important, or for some other reason—between the report and the Senate's formally adopting that report and thus clarifying its financial implication. I am quite content with my honourable friend's statement that he will look into the matter, particularly as he knows that some of us are anxious on this occasion to debate it. It might well be that, after looking through all of the rules and regulations—which I appreciate it is difficult to do on the spur of the moment—we will find that there is a missing link that could be considered for rectification.

● (1415)

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I do not propose to deal with this matter now except to say that the confusion arises because of the use of the words "budget" and "estimates." The estimates for supplying the supporting services to the committees are contained in the estimates of Parliament which have come forward and have long since been approved.

Rule 83A, which was an addition to the rules, provides:

> (1) A committee that has been empowered by the Senate to incur special expenses in respect of any matter referred to it by the Senate—

It is under complete senatorial control up to this point.

> —shall not incur any such special expenses until the chairman of that committee, or a senator acting for him, has presented to the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration a budget setting forth in reasonable detail estimates of its proposed expenditures for a specific period of time, and until the said budget has been approved in whole or in part by the latter committee.

This provision really has to do with granting the authority to hire the necessary staff.

A subsequent part of the rule reads as follows:

> (3) The Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration or a senator acting for him, shall, as soon as that committee has reached a decision concerning any budget or supplementary budget presented to it pursuant to this rule, report to the Senate giving the substance of the budget concerned and indicating the nature of its decision thereon.

That, however, is dealing with money that has already been voted by Parliament. The words "budget" and "estimates" are used in two different contexts throughout the rules.

In any event, honourable senators, I will not develop my point further. That is where the confusion arises, namely, in the use of the same words "budget" and "estimates" in describing the committee's proposed expenditure for hiring staff, for example, and again using those words "budget" and "estimates" in reference to estimates that have been voted for the operation of Parliament. This is a point that will have to be discussed or examined.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for that contribution because I think there is a good deal of merit in it. What bothers me, however, is going to be the wording of this report when I have a chance to read it. Rule 83A, which has been referred to, states:

> A committee that has been empowered by the Senate to incur special expenses in respect of any matter referred to it by the Senate—

The expenditures I am talking about do not come under that category. They do not arise from the expenditures that a committee may make in response to a responsibility entrusted to it by the Senate. These expenditures involve something else altogether.

I would like my honourable friend on the opposite side of the house to take that into account when considering this matter.

Senator Olson: We know what you are talking about.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, a number of interesting points have been raised. I think we clearly understand their substance. I'm sure we can profit from a study of the rules and some opinions about the possible missing link.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until next Monday, March 28, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

[English]

He said: Honourable senators, I have some information as to the legislative program between now and March 30, the date at which the House of Commons, according to its new rules, adjourns until April 11.

• (1420)

On Thursday—that is, today—it is expected that the House of Commons will give third reading to Bill C-139, the income tax bill. Third reading is expected to be given to the following bills on Friday: Bill C-130, dealing with assistance to international financial institutions; Bill C-136, the small business investment grants bill; Bill C-141, the human rights bill; and Bill C-144, the small businesses loans bill. So, it is expected that four bills will be passed tomorrow and one bill today.

With respect to Bill C-143, the borrowing authority bill, it is expected that it will receive third reading on Tuesday. A vote is to take place at 5.45 p.m. on Tuesday.

Because of that schedule, we are proposing—and we have had discussions with the opposition on this subject—to sit on Monday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and at 8 o'clock in the evening. I expect that we will have adequate business on Tuesday afternoon and evening because, by that time, the Senate will have before it Bill C-139, the income tax bill, which, as honourable senators are aware, contains some 135 clauses. The subject matter of that bill has been studied by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for some months. That committee has already tabled two reports. We then hope to proceed with the other four bills expected to be passed by the House of Commons.

We should like honourable senators to put in long hours, if necessary, on Monday afternoon and evening in order to give adequate opportunity to debate on second reading the four bills that will be passed tomorrow.

If possible, we should like motions for the acceptance in principle of those four bills and Bill C-139 on Monday so that the Senate will be in a position to decide how it wishes to dispose of its time on Tuesday. For example, we may want to hold some committee meetings on Tuesday afternoon with respect to some of the bills I have mentioned and, therefore, we may not wish to sit until Tuesday evening. There will also be an opportunity to hold committee meetings on Tuesday morning.

The Senate may want to go into Committee of the Whole on one or more of the bills I have mentioned. That, of course, would have an effect on how we will dispose of our time on Tuesday.

The Senate will not receive Bill C-143 until Tuesday evening, because the vote will not take place in the other place until 5.45 p.m. If we follow the program I have mentioned, we should have all of Tuesday evening to debate approval in principle of Bill C-143. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance would then be in a position to consider that bill some time on Wednesday and report to the Senate on Wednesday afternoon.

Therefore, honourable senators, next week we would have Monday afternoon and Monday evening, devoting most of that time to the five pieces of legislation; Tuesday morning and afternoon for committee meetings, including the possibility of Committee of the Whole, and then Tuesday evening to consider Bill C-143, so that we will be in a position to deal with as many of the bills as possible at the third reading stage on Wednesday afternoon in the hope of having Royal Assent for those bills that receive third reading.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government gave me a preview of what he has just said as we were coming into the chamber, so it is not altogether new to me.

I would note that Bill C-139 will be given first reading on Monday afternoon, and that leave of the Senate will be requested to proceed at once to second reading. I suspect that it might take some time to dispose of that, because it is a very difficult bill and one or two of us intend to make detailed speeches on the subject. Therefore, I think it is probably unrealistic to expect that we shall have concluded our discussions before Monday night on that bill. That makes it a little uncertain as to how far we will get by using the same procedure with regard to first reading of the four bills C-130, C-136, C-141 and C-144, plus second reading by leave on Monday, because the substance of those bills is not as yet known to me, for one, and I dare say to other members of the house who have not yet studied them. I do not think it would be practical, therefore, to try to be too precise as to the program. I think, however, that we would all agree that we could proceed to second reading, by leave, on Monday and see how far we could get with respect to those bills.

• (1425)

I am anxious to know what the government has in mind with respect to the committee stage on the four smaller bills, C-130, C-136, C-141 and C-144. I am not certain whether the committee stage is going to be a complicated procedure, or, indeed, whether there is anyone who wishes to speak to the Senate committees on these matters, or whether it is the intention of the government to put them right into Committee of the Whole. I think the committee-of-the-whole process could be looked at. I would like to have a look at the bills before offering any opinion of mine as to whether they should be referred to Committee of the Whole or to standing committees. However, I will undertake to look at these bills, consult with my colleagues, and offer an opinion on them first thing on Monday, so that you will know where we stand on them.

I also hope that Bill C-139 can be referred to the committee. At the present time it is my intention to so move in order that it may be amended; but I shall have to leave that open until we get a little further along in the debate on that subject.

What does bother me is the very short rein given us on the borrowing bill, C-143. We are to get it for first reading, and presumably second reading, on Tuesday night. That bill, in my opinion, ought to go to a committee, where the minister or his representative can be heard, because a number of us have some questions to ask about it, and it is going to be a close thing to get it out of committee and back here for final approval. We are disposed, however, to do our best with these matters. While reserving the right to comment further on the process when we see more of what is in them and the obstacles we may run into on Monday night, we are certainly going to do our best to handle them expeditiously.

With regard to the big tax bill, C-139, I am conscious that Senator McIlraith and his colleagues have been struggling manfully with its subject matter for a long time, as the house knows. We have looked at three possible tax bills before this one, the last of the succession. The detail of this bill has been pretty well digested, and the only thing that remains to be done in committee is to have some knock-'em-down, drag-'em-out arguments about one or two points that are all unsettled, in my mind at any rate.

Regarding the borrowing bill, I think that our aim in the committee would be to have the minister give us much more information than has been given so far as to what this is all about, because we are being asked to commit funds with respect to a financial year the budget for which is still in limbo and whose total requirement for money is quite unknown to this house or to anyone else, as far as I know, in the public arena. I think the minister should be expected to give us some explanations about that. I do think that a committee hearing, with the minister present, is an essential element in our program.

The program is not pleasant, and I do not accept it with any great satisfaction, but I certainly do not intend to be obstructive.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think the position taken by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition with regard, first, to the four bills, C-130, C-136, C-141 and C-144 is entirely reasonable—that is, that the exact program for Monday should await an opportunity to study the bills, so that we may have some idea as to what is in them. They have been around for some time, or some of them have, and I do not think they have been amended. In any event, it is clear that to work out our program we should have a look at what is contained in those bills for Monday.

• (1430)

As far as Bill C-139 is concerned, if we decide to deal with it in Committee of the Whole, that could be the time for the "knock-'em-down, drag-'em-out" argument described by my honourable friend. Of course, it could take place in the standing committee itself rather than in Committee of the Whole.

With reference to Bill C-143, I cannot say that I like the metaphor of the short rein, but I understand what Senator Roblin means when he says that.

Senator Roblin: Is it not true? Do you dispute its accuracy?

Senator Frith: I do not dispute the poetic appropriateness of the metaphor, but I do not like the thought of being in the role of pulling a tight rein on the opposition, as the opposition would know.

It has always been our intention to have Bill C-143 studied by the committee before third reading and to have the minister attend before the committee to give evidence of the type requested by Senator Roblin.

With regard to committee activity, which could include Committee of the Whole, I ask honourable senators who are chairmen of committees to suspend all activity that might in any way conflict with the legislative program. In other words, I ask them, as is our custom and tradition, to give priority to legislation. Bill C-139 could be dealt with either in Committee of the Whole or by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Bills C-130, C-136 and C-144 could be dealt with by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I suggest that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs could deal with the human rights bill, while the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance could deal with Bill C-143. With that in mind, I ask the committees concerned to take into account the possibility that they may be called upon to help the Senate with consideration of those bills. It may turn out that some of them do not need to be referred to committee, but that has to await the weekend study referred to by Senator Roblin.

I believe that the Leader of the Government has something to add.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that we should look at the legislative program on Monday morning, when we could have consultations with the Leader of the Opposition and the house leader after we examine the bills. I do not believe any of these bills will be new to members of the opposition, with the possible exception of Bill C-144, provided that no amendments have been made.

It might be useful before our sitting at 2 o'clock on Monday to review these bills because Senator Roblin has indicated that the debate on Bill C-139 may be longer than on some of the other bills. If so, it may be that we could reach agreement on passing the other three financial bills through so that they can be referred to committee, if that is the desire.

While we are considering that, I think we should also give some consideration to whether or not we would want Bill C-139 and perhaps some of the other bills considered in Committee of the Whole. That is why I do not want to suggest now what the scenario might be, but we could discuss that before noon on Monday or whenever it is convenient. Perhaps by that time all the bills will be in the hands of honourable senators or we will have them available to pass around—with the exception of Bill C-143, but I believe the contents of that bill are already known.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have to add one footnote by way of erratum—fortunately not errata. I have received a message that the information we had on Bill C-136 was in error. That bill, according to my notes, provides for the extension of low interest loans for small businesses. I have just been told that we shall not be getting that bill. If that information is correct, we are now looking at Bills C-139, C-130, C-141, C-144 and C-143—a total of five rather than six bills.

• (1435)

Senator Roblin: The suggestion of the house leader is a good one. We could meet shortly after noon on Monday with Senator Flynn and others to finalize the position.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SPORT

PROPOSED DOME FOR EXHIBITION STADIUM, TORONTO

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question either for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport or the Leader of the Government. I read a lead story in the Toronto Sunday Star indicating that Ottawa's support for a domed stadium in Toronto is growing. In essence, the story indicated that most members of the government party in the other place are highly supportive of a dome for Exhibition Stadium in Toronto, the cost being somewhere in the neighbourhood of $140 million, with support being requested for roughly one-third of the cost.

Having regard for the fact that that figure represents almost the entire budget of the minister's department, perhaps he would comment on whether the federal government is prepared to participate to the tune of $40 million or $50 million for the construction of a domed stadium in the city of Toronto.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, understandably there is substantial interest in Toronto in the possibility of constructing a new covered facility in that city. However, as yet I have not received any direct submission or proposal from Toronto which would involve government funds made available to me in my portfolio.

Honourable senators may be aware that we do not fund major capital projects in Fitness and Amateur Sport. We do have programs to assist the various sports governing bodies and to help finance the operation of designated training centres, through grants to coaches and officials, and that kind of activity.

[Senator Olson.]

However, the government traditionally has shared in the cost of helping to construct major facilities which are necessary when Canada hosts certain major multi-sport international events such as the Olympics and the Commonwealth Games. But, with regard to these projects, there are no funds from my department. We have no budget for those purposes.

Senator Nurgitz: I have a brief supplementary—and I do not mind whether it is the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport or the Leader of the Government who responds. Has a request been made of the government, possibly apart from the Ministry of Fitness and Amateur Sport, for such financial support?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have not seen any specific proposal or request for federal assistance for that project. Together with the honourable senator, I too have read a number of speculative stories.

GRAIN

REDUCTION OF U.S. STOCKS

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. There has been an announcement in the last couple of days of a new United States government initiative on the reduction of grain stocks in that country. Can the minister inform this chamber of his knowledge of this matter, and how it may affect foreign markets for Canadian grains? Also, can he tell us whether the Canadian government is in any way co-operating with the U.S. authorities to assist in the marketing of grains and in the reduction of the surplus that appears to exist in the world today?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the United States Department of Agriculture has just announced the sign-up in its various programs for a reduction of grain acreage for the coming year. There has been a major sign-up in the various programs. The main program is the payment in kind whereby a producer signs up to reduce his grain acreage, and he receives about 80 per cent of the normal yield of that acreage from the inventory of stocks currently held by the United States government. This is an income assurance program, and the United States producers have signed up in a major way.

• (1440)

The information I have is from our own Canadian sources. It is preliminary and may not be totally accurate, but it does give an indication of what is involved. The information I have is that there will be an enrolment in wheat acreage of some 78 million out of an acreage base of 90 million, and the projected harvested area is between 62 million and 64 million acres. According to these figures, this represents a reduction of close to 30 per cent.

The sign-up for corn and sorghum indicates an enrolled acreage of 78 million from an acreage base of 101 million, with a final harvested acreage projected of 65 million to 66 million. This represents a reduction of some 35 per cent.

Barley and oats—a smaller crop in the United States—have an enrolled acreage of 11 million out of an acreage base of 19 million, to a final, harvested area of between 17 million and 18 million acres. By quick calculation, this would be approximately a 10 per cent reduction.

This is a very major initiative on the part of the United States government to bring about a reduction in the very large stocks of wheat and coarse grains held in the United States. This has already had an influence on the market, and the market in the last few days has been strengthening on the basis of the prospective announcement. I believe that the long-term outlook for the export of wheat in particular is still bullish; that the long-term trend is up, but within that long-term trend there may be some periods of reduced demand and reduced prices.

The additional question asked by Senator Sparrow is: What is the response of the Canadian authorities to this initiative in the United States? I would point out that in the last two years we have had bumper crops. Last year we had the largest crop of grain in the history of western Canada. In the normal course of weather and events, we are not likely to see the same size crop again this year. Costs are up for Canadian farmers as well as they are for other producers in the world. We are not on any program of subsidizing production in this country. There are those who think we should be, but we are not on such a program. I would think that, with the cost factor and the weather prospects which suggest it might be time for a smaller crop, there is likely to be some reduction in acreage seeded to barley, in particular, and perhaps even to wheat. All factors considered, there is likely to be some reduction in the overall production in Canada.

What flows from the announcement by the United States and the willingness of Canada to cooperate in trying to bring about a more general management of grain stocks in the world is the need for other exporting countries, particularly the European Economic Community, to try to bring their stocks in line. If this is done, all of these programs will result in a very positive and, in my view, necessary strengthening of international prices for wheat and coarse grains.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On the same subject, could I ask the minister about the initial delivery price announcements that are usually made in March with respect to wheat, oats and barley on the part of the Canadian Wheat Board? Can my honourable friend tell us whether the announcements will be made this month? If not, when does he expect they will be made? I ask the question because it has a considerable bearing on farmers' plans for the year, and the sooner that information is in their hands, the better.

Senator Argue: I have found out that in government we are not always able to keep on target. Our objective is to have this information in place so that an announcement can be made by the end of March or, if we have to go into April, very early in April—in other words, well in advance of seeding—because that announcement is considered by western producers as an important one in preparing their seeding plans. So I can say to Senator Roblin that we hope to make this announcement soon.

Senator Roblin: I was hoping for something a little more definite than that, because the minister has been flying a few kites as to the price that would be announced, perhaps with good reason. He has left a good deal of uncertainty about that price in the minds of those interested, because he has specified a rather wide range of possible variations on the down side. While I appreciate the problem that he has, it would be helpful if we had a more specific statement from him as to when that announcement will be made.

Senator Argue: The end of this month is about a week away, so I am really saying we are trying to make the announcement rather quickly. If it gets into April, that too is not very far away. The reason I don't want to say it is going to be made on a certain date is that sometimes things can be delayed in the planning process. However, I am hopeful and optimistic that it can be made shortly.

Senator Roblin: I take it that probably means before we reassemble here in April.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators will recall that on two or three occasions I have asked the government for a clear and simple statement of government policy with respect to the outrageous procedure being used by the National Parole Board in gating inmates. I have not received a reply from the minister responsible; my reply has come from Saskatchewan Penitentiary in Prince Albert where, this morning, an inmate was summarily gated under the authority of the National Parole Board. I can only assume that the government, which is binding itself in human rights legislation and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, now, in fact, is supporting an act by one of its boards which deprives a Canadian citizen of the most valuable basic right of all, the right to freedom.

That act this morning brings to 11 the total number of inmates who have been subjected to this bizarre procedure. In my opinion, it constitutes cruel, unusual and brutal treatment of these men. This procedure is based on a decision by the National Parole Board that the inmate in question may pose a problem to society; that he is potentially dangerous, and that decision is reached not by a court of justice but by an administrative board here in Ottawa. It is contrary to the instructions of the board itself. I am now going to quote from "A Guide to Conditional Release for Penitentiary Inmates", issued by the Government of Canada and the National Parole Board, wherein it states:

> By law, most inmates may have their time in prison shortened by as much as one-third. This "good time" is called remission and is served on the street under what is called mandatory supervision. Release on mandatory supervision is by law, and not, as in parole, the result of a discretionary decision of the National Parole Board.

• (1450)

The document goes on to say that upon admission to penitentiary the sentence administrator will inform an inmate of his mandatory supervision release date and that this date is calculated. So an inmate enrolled in a penitentiary is advised of his release under mandatory supervision and, subject to his good behaviour, is released on that date under mandatory supervision under the Canadian Correctional Service. Now we have the National Parole Board assuming authority that was never granted to it by the Parliament of Canada in making a decision as to the dangerousness of an individual and, in effect, of some future event that may or may not take place.

What about the record of the National Parole Board? Under a five-year study with respect to the release of inmates on parole and inmates under mandatory supervision—the two classes—by the Solicitor General's Department, 27.5 per cent of inmates who were returned for violating their parole were guilty of some form of violence or robbery. What about mandatory supervision or release by law? The study showed that 27.7 per cent of the individuals under such supervision were returned to the prison for violence or robbery. The two figures are almost exactly the same. So much for the predicted capability of this board.

There are two dates that are important to an inmate in custody. One is his parole eligibility date, and the other is his mandatory supervision release date. If the inmate misses parole eligibility, everything is put forward to his mandatory release date; all his thoughts and plans are on that and he lives for the day of release under mandatory supervision. This inmate will have been in the prison all that time and no one will have said anything about the possibility that he might not be granted that release under mandatory supervision because he has been judged to be a dangerous offender. The inmate is given no such indication whatsoever and when it comes to his date of release under mandatory supervision he goes nowhere. I ask, does anyone care, does anyone understand the psychological and mental damage such a procedure does to these individuals? Does anyone understand the danger we are putting the staff of our penitentiaries in as a result of this procedure? Finally, the most important question of all, does anyone care that the rights of Canadian citizens are being abrogated by a government board?

If there is not adequate protection for society, there is a way of increasing the protection by asking the Parliament of Canada to do so, not by decisions of boards or commissions. If the National Parole Board wanted its powers extended, why did it not make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada as it is doing now? In the meantime, these 11 men are being held until a decision is made by the Supreme Court of Canada.

My question to the government is: If the Supreme Court of Canada finds the action of the National Parole Board to be illegal, will the Chairman of the National Parole Board resign, will the Solicitor General assume his ministerial responsibility in that regard, and will the Government of Canada not instruct this board to cease and desist, in the matter of this brutal, nefarious procedure it is using, until the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is handed down?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Answer yes or no.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I share with Senator Hastings his concern for civil rights and social justice in Canada. He always impresses me when he is addressing these questions which, today, are particularly inclusive of individual rights. However, the honourable senator begs the question of the legal authority of the National Parole Board with respect to gating. I have made inquiries of the Solicitor General of Canada and he has advised me that there now exist two contradictory rulings by provincial courts of appeal on the practice of gating. One decision is from the Ontario Court of Appeal, which says there is no legal basis for gating, and the other is from the Alberta Court of Appeal, which upheld the gating of Donald Oag and found gating to be within the legal authority of the National Parole Board. I am advised that the appeal of the Ontario case will be heard by the Supreme Court of Canada on May 17.

Pending the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Solicitor General has instructed the National Parole Board to continue the practice of gating in provinces where it has not been ruled illegal. I am sure that this was a difficult decision to take, but it does respect the authority of the senior court in each province with respect to this question on which there is so much division of opinion in legal terms at the moment. There is also enormous division of opinion as to the appropriate policy which should be followed. If the Supreme Court of Canada is able to render its judgment by the end of its spring term, the matter will be settled fairly soon.

I must say that I agree with Senator Hastings that inmates are Canadian citizens and are entitled to a clear understanding of the laws that apply to the terms of their incarceration. It is regrettable that there is a legal dichotomy at the moment. However, the law has always had the difficult and paradoxical problem of balancing the rights of the individual against the rights of the community. The Solicitor General has, in his opinion, a legitimate concern with respect to the rights of the community as it pertains to certain inmates. Again, one will have to await the Supreme Court decision before knowing what the legal authority on the matter will be.

With regard to Senator Hastings' question about the Chairman of the National Parole Board, I can see no basis, on the facts as I understand them, why the chairman's tenure should be in question. I see no basis for assuming that the Solicitor General has not acted fully within his responsibility. I assure Senator Hastings that I am personally concerned with the matter. I will follow it closely and am prepared to respond to him again. I am sure that the honourable senator will want to know the policy of the government when the Supreme Court of Canada renders its judgment.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Did I understand the minister to say that the Solicitor General has instructed the National Parole Board to contiue gating in those provinces which do not have a decision from the court within that province?

Senator Austin: I said that the position of the Solicitor General is that gating should continue in those provinces where it has not been held by a court of that province to be illegal. As the Court of Appeal of Ontario has held gating to be illegal, it is not currently practised in the province of Ontario.

Senator Hastings: The minister indicated that it was a difficult decision to reach. I would suggest that it was also a stupid decision. I cannot understand how a minister can practise one law for the citizens of Ontario and another for citizens in other parts of Canada. I am wondering what the citizens of Ontario will think, in the knowledge that these people are being released into the community within the province of Ontario, while within the other provinces they are being illegally held in custody.

• (1500)

It was always my assumption that a Canadian was a Canadian and it mattered not whether he lived in Ontario, Saskatchewan or Alberta. However, according to the instructions of the Solicitor General, Canadians living in Ontario will be treated differently from Canadians outside of Ontario.

It would seem to me the simple decision to have made would have been to cease and desist from the practice of gating until the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is handed down, having regard to the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Senator Austin: I can understand the points which Senator Hastings makes, but the Solicitor General would necessarily have to take into account the decision of the Court of Appeal of Alberta. He does not have the option or luxury of choosing his preference where there are conflicting judicial decisions.

I agree with the honourable senator that a Canadian is a Canadian and is entitled to equal rights wherever he or she may be in Canada, but we have a federal judicial system, and, in the nature of that judicial system, the courts of one province, if not often, certainly have occasionally disagreed with the courts of another province. That is the conundrum in this case. We have two judicial systems opposed to one another. There is nothing in our legal system that requires the court of appeal in one province to agree with the court of appeal in another. The uniting part of the process is the Supreme Court of Canada which will hear these conflicting arguments and, we hope, resolve them so that we will have a law that applies to all Canadians.

Senator Hastings: I submit to the honourable minister that, when you do have these conflicting judgments and when there is the very basic right to freedom of the individual, the matter could be held in abeyance until the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. When it comes to the freedom of the individual, any court—and I think it has been stated—will fall on that side.

ENERGY

SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question which I had hoped to ask of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. However, I note that he beat a hasty retreat while his colleague from Alberta was speaking. Perhaps the acting leader would advise him of the question, and he can answer on Monday.

Earlier this day the Leader of the Government tabled certain documents concerning Synfuels. I wonder if that has prompted his political amnesia, or can he announce if he is in a position to advise us when he, in his former position as Minister of State for Economic Development, was advised of the situation regarding Synfuels.

In addition, honourable senators, I would also appreciate being advised if the Leader of the Government had Synfuels on his long list of mega-projects or on his short list of mega-projects.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will see that the question comes to the attention of the Leader of the Government. He will have tomorrow and the weekend to edit out the rhetorical part of the question and determine what precise information is being asked for so that he can have it for the honourable senator next week.

Senator Phillips: Stimulate his memory.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND GENERAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

RURAL DEVELOPMENT—STATUS OF SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I also ask the acting leader to relay a question to the Leader of the Government regarding the Canada-Newfoundland General Development Agreement.

One of the subsidiary agreements under that broad area of general development has to do with rural development. The agreement, which came into effect in 1974, is due to expire before the end of the month.

In view of the fact that this agreement is very important to many of the small communities of rural Newfoundland, in terms of trying to provide employment opportunities in some 508 communities, would the deputy leader impress on the minister responsible the urgency with regard to the renewal of that agreement? That part of our society can then allay their fears regarding the very drastic employment situation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if the agreement expires at the end of this month, there is obviously some urgency in having information as to the status of the matter. I will try to have that for the beginning of next week.

COMMUNICATIONS

BROADCASTING TO NORTHERN COMMUNITIES

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I want to answer more fully the question put to me by Senator Nurgitz regarding northern broadcasting and the Anik D satellite. The question related to whether the Anik D satellite would be used in any way for northern broadcasting.

Honourable senators, there will be a use of that satellite in connection with the World Communications Year to which the federal government will make a contribution exceeding $1 million.

One of the projects funded by the Department of Communications is the Inuit Circumpolar Conference which will take place in Frobisher Bay in July, using Telidon and satellite technology—Anik D in particular. The conference organizers will link the Inuit in Alaska, Canada and northern communities in Europe.

With respect to the answer I provided, I confirm that the Minister of Communications announced on March 10 last that the government would be making available $40 million to various native communications societies across the country for purposes of native broadcasting.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—CONFERENCE ON RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT—CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Buckwold on March 16, 1983, concerning Canada-Zimbabwe relations. The answer is approximately two-and-a-half pages long and since Senator Buckwold is present in the chamber I will read it.

After a protracted guerilla war, Zimbabwe became independent in April 1980. Prime Minister Mugabe's party, the Zimbabwe African National Union, won a decisive majority in the national elections observed by a Commonwealth team. A distinguished Canadian, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, served on this team. Upon independence, the new government of Zimbabwe committed itself to a policy of national reconciliation—black and white, Shona and Matabele. Prime Minister Mugabe invited Joshua Nkomo, leader of the Zimbabwe African People's Union and members of Zimbabwe's white minority, to join the Cabinet.

As friends and supporters of an independent Zimbabwe we shared the high hopes for the country and its people. Recognizing the challenges posed in resettling and reintegrating many of its people, Canada pledged $50 million in assistance over five years at the Zimcord Conference in 1981. All these funds are currently committed to joint projects with the Zimbabwe government. We intend to honour these commitments. We have no knowledge of any donors curtailing any form of assistance to Zimbabwe as a result of recent conflict within that country, although one donor has postponed decisions on future commitments pending a review of the situation.

Honourable senators will be aware there have been acts of violence in the southwest region of Zimbabwe over the past year. They may recall in particular a number of deaths and kidnappings over the past Christmas holiday. We understand the government subsequently sent police and military units to that region in order to counter such dissident activity. It appears that in the course of these operations a considerable number of people in the area suffered injuries or lost their lives.

We were naturally concerned about these reports and we have drawn our concerns to the attention of the Zimbabwe authorities at senior levels. We conveyed the hope that peace and reconciliation will replace conflict. We have been assured by the Zimbabwe authorities that national reconciliation remains a primary objective. The Government of Zimbabwe has also informed us that a three-man team has been designated to carry out an inquiry and to receive briefs from the general public and non-governmental and church organizations. Although this is not a formal commission of inquiry, it has been established at the direction of Prime Minister Mugabe and is empowered to recommend remedial action.

We shall, of course, follow the situation closely in view of our close ties with Zimbabwe.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I thank the deputy leader for the courtesy of reading the reply, as I was most anxious to hear it. I am somewhat disappointed that Canada is not playing a more active role in trying to influence a country with which it has very close ties.

• (1510)

It seems to me, having listened to the news dispatches from Zimbabwe, that the situation is continuing to deteriorate and that the newest threat is to the white farmers who, apparently, in some cases have been faced with extremely difficult conditions. I understand that one murder has been committed. In the final result, it would be as serious a deterioration of the situation as that posed by some of the problems of Mr. Mugabe, because the whole economy of that country really depends on the high productivity of a very skilled white farmer class.

I would ask the Government of Canada, therefore, to watch this situation carefully. We have unspent, although committed, millions of dollars available for Zimbabwe and in my opinion that could be used as a counterbalance to the undersirable activities that have been going on in that country.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question arising from that reply. It is a rather gloomy statement. The only constructive element that I noted was the commission of inquiry. Unfortunately, the statement did not tell us anything about the commission of inquiry, except the fact that it has been set up.

Is it possible for the Deputy Leader of the Government to give us some more information as to the nature of this commission so that we can form an appreciation of just how impartial its investigations might be?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on that subject the statement states, in particular:

> The Government of Zimbabwe has also informed us that a three-man team has been designated to carry out an inquiry and to receive briefs from the general public and non-governmental and church organizations. Although this is not a formal commission of inquiry, it has been established at the direction of Prime Minister Mugabe and is empowered to recommend remedial action.

I am not sure, but I think we may infer that this information came as a result of an inquiry made following the question asked by Senator Buckwold. It may be that there is available more detailed information than this. I will try to find out.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. It would be particularly useful if we knew who the members of the commission are. Oftentimes you can form an impression as to the nature of the transaction if you know the people who are conducting it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I will get whatever additional information is available to us.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: I have a supplementary. If I understood correctly, a specific amount was decided on. Could you please repeat the figure?

Senator Frith: Yes, it was $50 million.

Senator Deschatelets: In view of the present situation in that country, has this assistance been withdrawn for the time being or is the government spending part of those funds? What I would like to know, and I think it would clarify the statement somewhat, is the nature of these grants and the kind of assistance for which these funds have been earmarked.

Senator Frith: I pointed out that according to the statement, this assistance involves $50 million, to be distributed over a period of five years. The commitment was made in 1981. As far as details are concerned, the figure is qualified only by the words "in assistance". The statement also says that the funds are currently committed to joint projects with the Zimbabwe government. If I understood Senator Deschatelet's question correctly, he would like further details on this assistance.

Senator Deschatelets: I am interested in the nature of the assistance given.

Senator Frith: You are aware that it is a joint program?

Senator Deschatelets: Yes, I realize that.

Senator Frith: So you are interested only in the details or the nature of the programs involved?

Senator Deschatelets: Yes, but I want to make sure that it is not just a matter of money being spent.

[English]

PARLIAMENT

SENATORS AND MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS—ATTENDANCE

Question No. 92 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

> What has been the average attendance in the House of Commons and the Senate over the past ten years?

Reply by the Leader of the Government in the Senate:

> Although the names of honourable senators convened for sittings of the Senate are recorded, the names of honourable members at sittings of the House of Commons are not. The government therefore does not possess the information needed to answer this question.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1982-83

THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that Bill C-145, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983, be read the third time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1983-84

THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that Bill C-146, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1984, be read the third time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 28, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 28, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS) CONTINUING ASSISTANCE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-130, to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

THE SENATE

AMPLIFICATION SYSTEM MALFUNCTION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order to advise all senators that the amplification system is not working. The technicians are on their way; in the meantime we shall have to speak a little louder.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Does it make a real difference?

[Later:]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am told by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod that he has received a message from the technician to the effect that if we now adjourn for half an hour the system can be fixed. Are honourable senators prepared to do so?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unless anyone feels the need for the system this afternoon, I suggest we continue without it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Under the circumstances, I do not think we can afford to delay the proceedings. After all, we have not advanced very far in our conversation with the Leader of the Government as to where we stand or where we are going.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 4)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-144, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

• (1410)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that we have received from the House of Commons three bills, Bills C-139, C-130, and C-144—and it is rumoured that we will receive two others, if I am not mistaken—namely, Bills C-143 and C-141—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Bills C-141 and C-143?

Senator Flynn: Bill C-141 is a question mark, but Bill C-143 is the borrowing authority bill. In any event, I should like the Leader of the Government to tell us what is expected of the Senate in the next few days, given that the House is going to adjourn on Wednesday to April 11, under the new rules.

As far as the Senate is concerned, and perhaps even more so for the opposition, the perspective is quite different if we adjourn on Wednesday, come back on the eleventh and continue the present session, as opposed to adjourning with the prospect of prorogation when Parliament re-assembles in April, after the Easter recess.

I should therefore like to ask the Leader of the Government, in the interests of every senator: Are we to consider that Wednesday is the last day of this session; that we will come back only to prorogue and have a new session in April; or should we consider that Wednesday will be a day like any other, on which we will adjourn to April 11 or 12, with a view to continuing the session thereafter? Some of the bills that may come to us may not need to be passed by the Senate right away. We could probably deal with them when we return in April, if the objective of the government is to continue the present session. If it means a few months more, after three years, what difference does it make? In my opinion, it would be useful for honourable senators to know what the government has in mind and, for once, what the Leader of the Government has in mind.

• (1415)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to be as precise in my reply as the manner in which the question was put, but unfortunately—

Senator Flynn: What is wrong with the manner?

Senator Olson: There is nothing wrong with it at all. There was a request for some precision as to the date of prorogation, as to whether that is possible after Wednesday of this week, and so on. I am sorry that I cannot be as precise as I should like to be in responding to a very reasonable question. I have to say that things generally have changed somewhat in the last few days. For example, we have some essential bills—namely, Bills C-139 and C-143—that will be coming to us tomorrow. The other two bills—Bills C-130 and C-144, I believe—are also extremely important.

The unfortunate part about trying to give a precise and definite answer now as to whether or not there will be prorogation is that I believe the house leader in the other place, and the government generally, is considering that question. If, for example, Bills C-85 and C-95 had also come to us so that we could deal with them up to and including Royal Assent this week, then I think there would have been the possibility of prorogation. However, I believe that both of those bills are in the final stage of passage through the other place; indeed, one of them has a time allocation order on it of two more days.

Senator Flynn: After three months.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend knows that if there is prorogation, the government has to take into account the fact of the legislative procedure, that we would go back to square one. That may not be a problem for the opposition, but it is a problem that the government has to face.

As honourable senators know, Bills C-139 and C-143 have the highest priority of those bills that are required to be passed soon. I could say that they could have been dealt with some time ago, that they might by now be behind us, but the fact is that they have not already been dealt with and we now have them before us.

I believe there is some possibility that the government will be considering prorogation, even with the number of bills we now have and will have. We already have the three that have been mentioned, and we anticipate that Bill C-143 will be passed in the other place by 6 p.m. tomorrow. There is also a house order in connection with that bill. I believe there will be some profound consideration of whether or not there will be prorogation before Parliament meets on April 11 and thereafter. However, I cannot give an undertaking one way or the other, and that is where I encounter difficulty in being absolutely confident and precise in my answer. I can tell the honourable gentleman that it is our hope that the bills with the highest priority—namely, Bill C-143 and Bill C-139—will receive Royal Assent by March 30. It is also our hope that the other two bills will receive Royal Assent as well. These matters do somewhat change the requirement for carrying on the session because we are dealing with two extremely important bills which need to be passed before we prorogue.

• (1420)

Senator Flynn: With regard to Bill C-139, we on this side realize that we should dispose of this bill before Wednesday because it is important that the public at large should know where it stands with regard to income tax for the year 1982 and, I suspect, 1981, as this bill applies in general to three budgets.

With regard to Bill C-143, it seems to me that since it is coming to us tomorrow at the end of the day there will be no prejudice to the government if it is passed in the middle of April because the government can manage until then, unless it is at the bottom of its pool of available finances. The same can be said of Bill C-141. So it seems to me that if we knew whether or not there would be prorogation it would help us very much.

Perhaps by way of a supplementary question I should ask the Leader of the Government on what date he proposes that the Senate reconvene after Easter.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to discuss that topic with the Leader of the Opposition and with some of my colleagues in cabinet. I am sure that everyone realizes that there are some discussions—or perhaps you could call them negotiations—going on now between the government house leader and the house leaders of the other parties in the other place which have to take into account the number of days there are between April 11 and June 30, when, as you know, there is a house order to adjourn. After taking these matters into account, they have to come up with a legislative program that is in the public interest to be dealt with by Parliament. However, I give the Leader of the Oppposition the undertaking that I shall try to obtain the information or, at least, some kind of resumé of the considerations before Wednesday, because they are rather long and complex.

I appreciate what the opposition leader has said about Bill C-139, that it is important that this bill be approved in all its stages by Parliament. With respect to Bill C-143, I can advise him that he is correct, that there are some emergency measures that can be invoked by government from time to time for a few days with respect to the use of treasury bills and other matters.

● (1425)

I want him to know also that we are already past the time when Bill C-143 should have been passed and authorization given so that the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada and other people involved could indeed make the necessary borrowing arrangements with the financial community. Although that community can expect, from time to time, a borrowing request from the federal government, it likes to know several weeks in advance just when the request will be made. Therefore, it is important for orderly management that Bill C-143 be passed before we leave here on Wednesday. I would encourage the opposition to assist us in that process so that we can have orderly, predictable demands made on the financial market for the requirements for which authority is being sought.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government has mentioned that after Bill C-85, the Canagrex Bill, and Bill C-95, the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Bill, have been passed by the House of Commons and also by the Senate, we might have prorogation. It seems to me that these two bills will probably require a further day or two. If, when the House of Commons returns on April 11, the government were to make it clear that, if these bills are passed, a new session could begin with a Throne Speech, perhaps a deal could be struck in the other place and we would have to come back for only a few days.

The Leader of the Government has referred to the days available for government business between now and June 30. Well, rather than waste days on a Throne Speech and a budget debate and postpone these matters until the fall, would it not be worth while and save a lot of time if we dealt with them now? The Leader of the Government has insinuated that, because there are only 20 days available to the government until the end of June, it would not be worth while beginning a new session. That is really not a very strong argument. It is merely a good excuse to be able to say, "We cannot bring in a new Throne Speech because of the opposition and because of the other parties in the house." It seems to me that the government is not too anxious to proceed. They would like to wait and see if things are going to improve, especially with regard to oil prices and matters of that nature, which seem to worry the Minister of Finance.

Would it be possible for the Leader of the Government to come clean and tell us exactly what he has in mind.

Senator Olson: There is nothing that the government would rather do than, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, come clean.

● (1430)

The Leader of the Opposition knows that the government does not have the power of disposition of a legislative program put before Parliament; that rests very heavily on the attitude of the opposition. If we had the kind of predictability the Leader of the Opposition is asking for now, no one would be happier than the government. That, of course, has not been the case for the past three months or so.

In any event, to reply partially to the leader's question, we have had discussions on that. After taking into consideration the number of opposition days and those days set aside to deal with the estimates and those days set aside to debate private member's bills, which is one full day a week, we are left with approximately 18 days for government business.

The Minister of Finance has said that he is going to announce the date on which he will bring down a budget before Wednesday of this week, so there will be a number of days required to debate the budget between April 11 and June 30.

The real question is whether we can more profitably use those eight days, because they represent approximately 30 or 35 per cent of the total time left to the government for the passage of essential legislation, including bills that may emanate from the new budget, and so forth.

Furthermore, there are a number of other bills that have been waiting for months to be passed, and indeed, some have been waiting for years. I really do not think it would be useful for me to give any undertaking with respect to them, because we have always had a high level of co-operation from the opposition in the Senate. The problem arises not after legislation comes before the Senate but before legislation comes before the Senate, and negotiations in that regard are held between the government house leader and the two house leaders in the other place.

The Leader of the Opposition wants me to lay out an ideal solution—a solution which would be agreed to by the members of the other place and honourable senators—and I am sure there is nothing the government would like better.

INDUSTRY

PHARMACEUTICAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—EFFECT OF PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS—ANSWER TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Thompson on December 1, 1982. The question concerned the pharmaceutical industry and the Patent Act. I do not see Senator Thompson in the chamber today and, since this is rather a long answer which runs to six pages and five charts, I am reluctant to even ask that it be printed as an appendix to today's proceedings. I think it would be better if I were to table the answer and ensure that Senator Thompson receives as many copies as he wishes. If it is agreed, honourable senators, I shall table the answer.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Yes, on behalf of Senator Thompson.

Senator Olson tabled:

Document concerning the pharmaceutical industry and the Patent Act, being a reply to Senator Thompson's question of December 1, 1982 (English text).

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow moved the second reading of Bill C-139, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2).

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-139, with which we are concerned today, is one of the most important packages of tax legislation to come before this house in some time. It contains income tax measures first proposed in the budgets of November 1981 and June 1982, with modifications resulting from representations and consultations that followed those budgets. It also covers revisions announced by the Minister of Finance in his economic statement of October 1982; therefore, this bill goes back more than 16 months.

Since that time there have been very extensive consultations carried out with affected areas of the private sector, and specific studies by committees of both the Senate and the House of Commons.

• (1435)

Last June, the Minister of Finance issued detailed draft legislation—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Due to the fact that we do not have an amplification system, perhaps it would be better if Senator Barrow addressed the Senate from the seat next to the deputy leader because the Hansard reporters are having some difficulty in hearing him.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Barrow: Last June, the Minister of Finance issued detailed draft legislation for public comment which formed the basis of the parliamentary studies.

In December, he also issued a 225-page document of explanatory notes setting out the intent of the bill in clear terms.

Some of the major provisions in the bill include enactment of the lower personal income tax rates first proposed in 1981, a restructuring of the federal tax reduction credit, increased payments under the child tax credit provisions and significant changes to the original proposals for the taxation of life insurance policies.

One of the key principles of this legislation is that the Canadian tax system is greatly improved and lower tax rates can be applied to a broader income base. Such an approach is less likely to discourage individuals from saving, working and investing. It also means a more equitable sharing of the tax burden.

The government's six-and-five restraint program is reflected in the section which caps the indexing of personal income tax deductions and rates at 6 per cent and 5 per cent over two years. In this regard it should be noted that the year-over-year rate of inflation, as measured by the consumer price index, was 7.4 per cent last month, the lowest in six years, and clear evidence that the restraint program is meeting its objective.

The bill will bring about a general reduction in personal income tax of $1 billion a year, starting with the 1982 taxation year. As an example of how this will apply, a married worker with two dependent children earning the average industrial wage of $22,000 will save more than $220 in 1982 tax liability. The $50 a year increase in the child tax credit will mean a $100 saving for a low or middle-income family with two dependent children.

To benefit one-earner families in the low and middle income tax brackets, the federal tax reduction has been changed to a flat $200 per taxpayer plus $200 for a dependent spouse. The reduction used to be 9 per cent of the basic federal tax with a minimum of $200 and a maximum of $500.

For taxpayers with dependent spouses and incomes of up to $20,000 this means an additional tax savings of $200.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Did you say an additional tax savings of $200?

Senator Barrow: Yes, for taxpayers with dependents and an income of up to $20,000. This means an additional tax savings to that family of $200.

Senator Flynn: An additonal saving?

Senator Barrow: Yes, an additional tax saving.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Are you saying, for the government?

Senator Barrow: For the individual. He is not only able to claim $200 himself, but if his wife is not working he can claim that extra $200.

• (1440)

Senator Flynn: What is the government saving by not increasing the exemption according to the cost of living?

Senator Barrow: It used to be a flat $200 per taxpayer; now it is $200 plus $200 for the spouse.

Senator Flynn: No doubt we will hear that in committee.

Senator Barrow: The $50 increase in the refundable child tax credit will raise the level of this credit to $343 a year, effective in the 1982 tax year. As estimated, 2.5 million families will benefit from this measure.

The budget of 1981 contained a proposal to tax the benefits received by employees whose employers contribute to health and dental plans. This has been dropped, even though it means a reduction in tax of an estimated $100 million a year. The proposal to restrict the deductibility of interest expense on money borrowed for investment purposes has also been dropped.

Other measures in the personal income tax field include the introduction of a taxable benefit provision for an employee who has a company car for personal use. The rate will be 2 per cent of the cost of the car per month or two-thirds of the leasing cost. This is modified from the original 1981 proposal which was 2½ per cent of the cost of five-sixths of the leasing charge. The taxable benefit will be reduced when personal use is less than 12,000 kilometres a year.

A new forward-averaging system will allow taxpayers with large income increases in any year to average those over future years when they expect to be in lower tax brackets. The system is more flexible than the plan originally announced in 1981 and will cover income from all sources.

Another personal tax measure would limit the exemption for capital gains on a principal residence to one residence per family.

There are significant benefits for small business. The amount of income eligible for the low small business tax rate is increased from $150,000 to $200,000 a year and total eligible earnings rise from $750,000 to $1 million. This will provide substantial assistance to small business corporations. I would remind honourable senators that the tax rate for small business manufacturing profits is 10 per cent, 20 points lower than the rate for large corporations, and that other types of small business income are taxed at 15 per cent rather than 36 per cent.

A one-year extension of the Small Business Bond Program is being enacted. This program, which provides special assistance to small firms in financial difficulty, will now continue until the end of 1983. Its main provision reduces interest rates through a tax exemption to lenders.

The tax of 12½ per cent on dividends paid out by small business corporations will apply only to income generated in years after December 31, 1982, and small businesses are being exempted from the corporation surtax which was 5 per cent last year and drops to 2½ per cent for 1983.

The budget of 1981 proposed measures to tax income realized through investments in life insurance policies. Following the budget, several problem areas were identified in this regard and a long series of discussions took place with representative groups in the life insurance industry. Important modifications were made to meet the concerns of the companies, their agents and their policyholders. Let me touch on some of those.

First, policies purchased before December 2, 1982, are not affected by the bill.

[Senator Barrow.]

Second, the new rules will exempt from periodic taxation on accumulating income the vast majority of policies purchased on or after December 2, 1982. Regular policies paid for over 20 years or more will be exempt from the periodic tax. Other permanent policies can also be exempt, including those with single premium paid-up additions providing additional insurance on these policies. Universal life policies in which the savings and insurance protection parts are separated may also be exempted under this rule. There is no dollar limit on the amount of exempt life insurance coverage a policyholder can have. This change was made following discussions with the life insurance industry and reflects the objective of encouraging Canadians to provide protection for their families and dependants.

Third, the pre-budget rule for the taxation of loans taken out against insurance policies, for example, in a time of financial need, has been retained. This rule assumes that loans are drawn from the savings accumulated by premiums before being drawn from income earned on these savings. If the amount of the loan does not exceed the accumulated capital, no tax will be charged. It had been proposed to tax part of every loan as income. This change responds directly to concerns expressed by life insurance agents.

Fourth, administrative and selling expenses related to a policy will be deductible from the income earned. This is an important concession. As you know, premiums are comprised of several components. One covers the actual risk to the company; another generates savings on which income is earned; and the third portion defrays the administrative and selling expense, part of which really belongs to the cost of the risk portion of the policy. This rule will benefit individuals borrowing against their policies and those surrendering their policies.

Finally, there is a change benefiting small businesses that responds to concerns expressed about the proposed rules for corporate-owned life insurance. On June 28 it was announced that corporations could hold exempt life insurance policies but that benefits received by them could no longer be paid out as tax-free dividends to shareholders. This will now continue to be possible. The issue of extended capital gains tax deferral on a shareholder's death, which the original proposal was designed to address, will now be solved by a more narrowly-focussed measure. Surviving shareholders will continue to be able to receive the proceeds of corporate-owned life insurance tax free and use these funds to purchase the shares of the deceased from his or her estate or heirs.

Another provision which affects business income has also been modified. The taxation of work-in-progress of professionals will exempt doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, veterinarians and chiropractors.

Honourable senators, this bill is necessarily long and complex. It affects some 135 sections of the Income Tax Act. However, I would remind honourable senators that most of its contents have been public for more than a year and have been subject to a long period of parliamentary debate and study in both houses. There have also been many months of consultation with the taxpaying community which led to major improvements.

The time has come to end the uncertainty about our tax laws by enacting this bill. Prompt passage is also needed to provide the legal basis for payments of refunds on 1982 taxes now owing to millions of taxpayers. An estimated $6 billion in refund payments is involved and many of the claimants are unemployed and in need of the money. Indeed, because of the delay, many have found it necessary to go to tax refund discounters with the resultant cost to those who can least afford it.

I appeal for co-operation from both sides of this chamber to meet these urgent needs.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think that the mover of this bill has correctly described it as being a very difficult and complicated piece of legislation. I would point out that, in spite of his efforts to clarify the difficult portions of the bill for us this afternoon, senators who may not have read the bill or who, in spite of the fact that some of this detail has been in the public domain for some time, are not familiar with the bill, will probably have some difficulty in grasping its import and its impact upon ordinary people and upon the economy of the country.

Guided by that obvious difficulty, this afternoon I shall not deal in any great precision with the contents of this bill. They are so many and varied and so hard to understand that even those of us who have been studying the proposals contained in it for some time in committee find our ingenuity taxed in trying to understand the import of what we are dealing with, even though in that committee we have had the assistance of competent, expert advice as to the meaning of tax law and its implication on the accounting system.

• (1450)

I have to join with those who feel that it is unlikely that, at this stage of the game, we in the Senate debating second reading can do justice to the many factors that are involved in the legislation.

I intend, however, to deal with one or two points of a more general character, because I think that they might provide some food for thought, let us say, in connection with the general problems of taxation in the country today.

Certainly the history of this bill is extraordinary. I do not know of any tax bill in my lifetime that has taken the amount of time to come to birth that has been required for this piece of legislation. As the proposer of the bill quite rightly said, it took its origin from the abortive budget of November 12, 1981, delivered by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, and that is quite a long time ago. Since that time we have had the second failed effort of June 28, 1982 by the same minister, which again came to nothing in terms of legislation at that time. That was followed by what was probably a third budget, although it was not called a budget. I think it was called a financial statement, or something of that sort, but that deceived nobody. That was given to us by the present Minister of Finance in October 1982. Then on December 7 this bill had its first reading in the House of Commons.

This bill, therefore, is not come by lightly. It is come by with great travail on the part of those responsible for it. When they realized the horrible mess they made on the first effort in producing a tax bill for the country, it was obvious from their actions after that—in the second budget of Mr. MacEachen and the third budget of Mr. Lalonde—they realized they had a poor piece of work in their hands. I am afraid that it has not been entirely purged of its defects even now, on the third go round. I suspect that, when the new budget comes down in a month or so, we will find a whole stream of new proposals, some of which I am certain will go to nullifying what is in this bill today.

It seems to me that it is an unhappy state of affairs when the finances of the country are so badly run and so poorly managed that we cannot put before our people a tax bill in sufficient time for them to make out their tax returns. This bill is almost two years late. Surely no one in this house can regard that situation with any degree of satisfaction. Certainly, I do not. It is a poor show, and one can only hope that new management in the Department of Finance will be able to produce better results—although if the national energy policy is anything to go by, I cannot be too optimistic about that possibility, either.

This is, then, a most unsatisfactory performance. I feel that I am stating the opinion of a good many people in this country if I make that crystal clear. Certainly it is my opinion that this is a very unsatisfactory document that we have before us. It is a big one; it is 294 pages long. I do not know how much it weighs, but if I threw it at the Leader of the Opposition he would know somebody had hit him with something.

Senator Flynn: Throw it at the other side! You said, "Leader of the Opposition."

Senator Roblin: I suppose, honourable senators, that I have a fixation on that, because coming events cast their shadows before them. If ever there was a shadow cast by a coming event, it has to do with the status of that honourable gentleman. I may be a little ahead of myself, but perhaps history will indicate that I was not too far out. I will not throw it at you, Senator Flynn—in fact, I will not throw it at anybody, because I am not in the throwing mood. I am, however, in the critical mood; I will say that.

There are 133 changes embodied in this bill. If anyone wanted any evidence to the effect that the Canada income tax situation has reached a critical stage, this bill is a pretty good piece of evidence to throw on the table. Income Tax in Canada is supposed to be self-assessing. The taxpayer of this country is supposed to be able to read the law and know enough about it after he has read it, with all of the information bulletins that the government puts out, so that he can fairly assess himself and render a tax to the government which is in accordance with the law. He had better be able to do that, too, because in most instances, if the government does not think he is right, it does not have to prove that he is wrong; it simply reassesses him, and he must prove that the government is wrong. It is a pretty good thing, therefore, for the ordinary taxpayer of this country to understand something about the tax law and to be able to make out his own tax form properly.

I want to say to honourable senators that it will be the man with a very simple and modest income these days who, without some considerable effort, will be able to make out his own tax form and do it correctly. The fact that we have a plethora of different people wanting to do it for him, in terms of tax accountants and income tax form fillers-out and so on, I think is some evidence that that is indeed the case. It is a monstrous tax law that we have and it is written in such convoluted, turgid, incomprehensible English—well, do I say "English"? Surely it must be another language. English is almost as limpid and pure in its character as is French, Senator Flynn, is it not?

Senator Flynn: Yes, it is.

Senator Roblin: Ordinary people can understand the English language, but ordinary people cannot understand the English language when it is translated into the tax law. It is the most convoluted, incomprehensible and turgid piece of prose one could hope to find, and something has to be done about that. It is obscure and it is hard to understand.

This is not a rhetorical complaint, honourable senators. It is a complaint that I think will be echoed by every citizen of the country who has to make out his tax form. When honourable senators are thinking about that situation, do not be persuaded by the comforting thought that many of the intricate provisions of the tax bill have to do with convoluted corporate organizations or matters which only concern business or people involved in such activities. That is not the case. It concerns ordinary people.

If we look at this very tax bill and examine one clause in it that has to do with the taxation of the benefits that accrue from the use by an employee of a car supplied by an employer, we will get some idea of the difficulties I am talking about.

I was interested in a speech that was made the other day by the President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, a gentleman by the name of J. Lyman MacInnis. He actually quoted to his luncheon audience some of the language of the tax law that had to do with this one item—namely, the taxable benefits that accrue to an employee from the use of a company car.

I am tempted to read it to honourable senators, except that I am afraid that I would lose my audience so fast that it would make my head spin. Perhaps I will read it anyway, because my audience may be a captive one. The clause reads as follows:

> For the purposes of paragraph (1)(e) an amount that is a reasonable standby charge for the automobile for the aggregate number of days in a taxation year during which it was made available by an employer, or by a person related to the employer, shall be deemed to be the amount equal to the product obtained when (a) where the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile at any time in the year, an amount in respect of its cost to the employer equal to the percentage thereof obtained when 2 per cent is multiplied by the quotient obtained when such of the aggregate number of days hereinbefore referred to as were days during which the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile is divided by 30 (except that if the quotient so obtained is not a full number and exceeds one it shall be taken to the nearest full number or, if there is no nearest full number, then to the full number next below it), or—

Honourable senators, this goes on for 49 more lines. I will not read it all.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It seems clear so far.

Senator Flynn: As mud!

Senator Roblin: I thought I was reading it with great expression, so if my honourable friend understands it I am flattered. I am sure, however, that he must be the only one within the range of my voice who does understand it, because it is an extremely difficult piece of prose.

What it simply says is that if you are using a car that your employer provides you are going to have to pay a higher tax on it. Surely to goodness there must be some more simple way of expressing the law than is found in the portion that I have just read to honourable senators. It is quite out of all conscience that that should be imposed upon an innocent citizenry that only seeks to find out what its proper tax is and to pay it. How they can do so with legislation couched in language like that, I really do not know. That is particularly important because, if they get it wrong, they are subject to all kinds of penalties, and it will not be very hard to get that one wrong. That is a particularly difficult one to get right.

● (1500)

The Income Tax Act is a mess. It is incomprehensible. It is uncertain, heaven knows. Look at all the lawyers making a living out of the uncertainty. If there is anything in the principles respecting tax legislation that we were taught when we were young—perhaps these are all out of date now—it was that taxes should be certain, they should be clear, they should be comprehensible, and, of course, they should be reasonable and within the capacity of the taxpayer to pay. Our tax legislation today seems to offend all rules of good policy.

Mr. MacInnis, whose speech on this subject I read with such interest, goes on to tell what the law is with respect to home insulation subsidies. It is really quite remarkable how that has been worked out now. Paragraph 56(1)(s) is the overriding paragraph, and it is part of subsection 56(1), which is part of section 56, and that is just a paragraph in the general law. This is also quoted in full here, though I am not going to read it to you now. What it says, in fact, is that if you receive home insulation or heating system conversion grants, you should include them in your income, unless your spouse has a higher income, in which case he or she should report it. That is what the law says, in essence, but it takes pages of this convoluted English to express it in a way that satisfies those that draft these statutes.

Take the part of the taxing act that deals with capital gains. Have you looked into that recently? If you do so you will find yourselves in a mare's nest of unprecedented proportions. There has never been anything like it. In the capital gains paragraph, which is section 39, there are 774 words, 28 commas, and two semi-colons. Mr. MacInnis kindly gives the information that the Gettysburg Address had 267 words, and I leave it to you which one leaves the deeper mark on mankind. But there are nine subsections in reference to capital gains, and these subsections refer to 10 other sections, which refer in turn to 40 other sections which refer to an entirely different statute. So if you want to get your capital gains taxation right, you have five subsections and a reference to 40 other sections and a separate statute to go through altogether. This is an example of the kind of complexity which we find ourselves facing with respect to tax law in this country. Nobody can understand it without a chartered accountant and a lawyer at his side.

Since the great reforms of 1972 there have been 30 major amending statutes. The last time we had a tax bill here, for the 1980-1981 period, there were 350 changes; now we have this bill with 133 clauses in it, and no end in sight. If one could ever think that one of these days we could get this tax law into decent order, and be able to render it into language people could understand, I think we would indeed work towards that goal; but there is no end in sight.

The result of this complexity is that no one can really know the effects of these tax changes until long after they have become law. I put it to you that Mr. MacEachen did not know the real effects of the tax changes he recommended in November 1981. That is clear enough. And I suggest that he did not know, again, when he brought in the second of his budgets in the spring of 1982. He did not know what the effects of these tax changes were, and his people in his department did not know either. They thought they knew, but when we got them before us in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to discuss these things we found out that their apprehension of reality gave them a very strange grasp indeed of the situation that exists in the real world. It seems to me that with this multitude of tax changes, and the way in which they are written, certainty has departed, and even the tax branch of the Department of Finance really does not know what the implications of all of these statutes are in any complete and conclusive way.

The present Minister of Finance made a statement the other day which I was glad to hear, because he said, talking about tax simplification—and I guess that is what I am talking about now, tax simplification—that is an objective "that I can recognize and approve". That is good news, and I hope he will be able to do something about it. But he spoiled things for me by going on and alleging that the complexity is in response to legitimate goals. That may be, and I do not argue with that; what I do argue is that whether complexity is in response to legitimate goals or not, simplification of the tax law is becoming a pressing necessity. We want tax laws and tax changes that people can understand, and we want them written in simplified form.

In the United Kingdom, I think it is, they have set up a special department to simplify the bureaucracy and to translate bureaucratic language into the English language. A special officer has been appointed, with the job of translating bureaucratese into language which ordinary people can understand. That, I suggest, would be a good idea for us to adopt here. We could start with our tax law. As a matter of fact, I think the Senate banking committee would be willing to help in this endeavour as far as they could, so that we can bring simplicity and fairness and predictability to a tax system which we say must be self-assessing.

How can we ask for a self-assessing tax system, and how can we ask citizens to submit their tax returns honestly, when it is impossible for them to understand many of the rules they are expected to obey? What we need is some plain speaking, and we need it in the tax law as much as any place else. Therefore, I think the Senate could give itself a task here. I think that the next time the banking committee meets with the ministers concerned—though perhaps there might be better ways of doing it than that—we could put in a very sincere request that the tax laws be simplified, so that people can understand what on earth they are being asked to do.

There is one other aspect of this general subject that I intend to mention briefly today. This has to do not so much with the effect of tax law on individuals, but the effect of this law on the provinces of Canada. What the federal government seems to have overlooked is that when they are writing the personal income tax law—I am going to stick to that for the purposes of my argument this afternoon—for the federal government, they are also writing the personal income tax law of every province in the country, except the province of Quebec.

What does that mean? It means the provinces have got to track the federal changes. It means that in order to have the collection system we have now, provinces have to agree willy-nilly with what is being done by way of amendment to the federal income tax. I do not know whether I should confess this, Senator Flynn, or not, but you and I—hardly you, but certainly I—are old enough to remember what it was like when each province had its own income tax. Senator McIlraith will remember that as well, as will others in this chamber. The system was referred to as, not a dog's breakfast, but a tax jungle. Every province had its own personal income tax system, and they varied one from the other not only on minor points, but on major points, and it was a grave disadvantage to the economic unity of the country—which is one of our goals these days, and properly so—that we had this serious differentiation between the provinces of the country with respect to personal income tax law.

As a result of the necessities of war, the federal government took over the collection of personal income taxes from the provinces, and in that process was able to produce reason and uniformity and a degree of comparability with respect to personal income tax across the country. That had to be a good thing on any grounds. It was a good thing on pure grounds of efficiency alone, because if one body can do the collecting for ten, it probably saves a good deal of money.

Therefore, we now have this situation in which personal income taxes are collected by the federal government for every province except Quebec, and, as a result, when the federal government legislates on personal income tax, they are legislating for the provinces. The provinces, as a consequence, have to follow that law. In the beginning, if the provinces wanted some variation, they could not get it. As of today there is some possibility of making some changes to tax collected for a particular province. But it does not go far enough, and the decision as to whether or not it will be allowed rests entirely with the federal government. It seems to me that that is another point that should receive some attention here in the Senate.

● (1510)

What about this system where the federal government can decide on personal income tax for all of the provinces? This has become quite a vexatious matter. It has become all the more vexatious after the abortive budget of November 1981 which had so many unfortunate new clauses in it. That did not attract the support of many of the provinces, and the Province of Ontario asked the Ontario Economic Council to make a study of the situation. I happened to receive a copy of the study today. Thomas J. Courchene is chairman of the Council. It studied the question of whether or not Ontario should go for its own personal income tax, but did not think that it should. It came up with some very sensible recommendations to meet the present situation, which I would like to record for honourable senators. I believe it would be of interest to honourable senators if they were to obtain a copy of this statement on a separate personal income tax for Ontario by the Ontario Economic Council. It is a position paper and it comments that more attention should be paid to the legitimate interests of the provinces when the federal government devises amendments to personal income tax, so that consideration of provincial views may be put in hand.

I recall that in the 1960s there was a body called the Federal-Provincial Tax Structure Committee, and I am quite sure that some members of the Senate will recall it also. As a matter of fact, I had something to do with it. I think I may say that I had something to do with starting it. As its name implied, the committee dealt with the question, reporting to ministers of the provinces and the federal government, on a review of outstanding differences, difficulties or problems in connection with the federal-provincial tax structure. It had, I believe, a useful career of several years. It produced an agreed statement of fact and that was something that had not been done before. We ironed that out. It had some impact on the federal government's policy-making proclivities.

I believe it would be a good thing to consider reinstituting that committee today. We should have a federal-provincial tax structure committee which would enable the provinces to talk to the federal government about things in the personal income tax sector which are a source of friction between the provincial and federal government. It could head off any confrontation, which might happen if provinces decide to raise their own personal income tax themselves. We do not need to reach that stage, and in time we could deal with outstanding problems and arrive at reasonable statements—because politicians can be reasonable when they put their minds to it and are able to deal with such problems.

It seems to me that not only could that be done, but that we could also follow another suggestion in this report of the Ontario Economic Council, which is to establish a code of economic conduct for provinces and the federal government. When we consider some of the difficulties that we have in connection with the non-tariff barriers to trade between the provinces, this study of a code of economic conduct—which is somewhat similar to that which exists in the European Economic Community and in other places, where there are different interests—would be useful today.

Honourable senators, I have not dealt with any precision with the details of this bill, but I have laid before this chamber two suggestions of a general character: first, that we should set our minds to a simplification of the tax structure, which at present is abominable, is difficult to control and needs to be brought under control; and, secondly, that we could recommend to those who have authority to decide these things that there should be a renewal of the federal-provincial tax structure committee, particularly with respect to personal income tax, so that where there are differing views and interests at stake, the federal government would at least know what the provincial problems are, and the provinces would have an opportunity to present their problems to the federal government, in the expectation that we would get some amelioration of the points of friction and dispute. Also, there is the idea of a joint study by the two levels of government on a code of economic conduct with respect to the problems of economic matters within the several jurisdictions in order that we might make a more harmonious and better directed attack on the economic problems of this country.

Honourable senators, that is all that I wish to say at this time. At another stage in these proceedings I will deal with the specific aspects of this bill that I do not like. I may even ask honourable senators to vote for some amendments.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it appears that no one on the government side is going to speak in favour of this bill.

[Translation]

In those circumstances, I do have a few comments to make. I am surprised that a Bill as important as this one should, as far as the Government is concerned, deserve such a short speech by its sponsor. It is true that when we are in a tight spot, the less said the better.

Senator Frith: The opposite is also true.

Senator Flynn: I am not blaming Senator Barrow, who did his best. He was well aware that if he said too much, he might get into deep water and make the present Government's fiscal flop even more obvious. Remember the famous 1971 tax reform, when everything had to be simplified. The result was our present income tax legislation. This legislation was passed in wartime and adapted to changing times. Today, what we have is undescribable chaos.

Regarding this Bill, Senator Roblin pointed out that it represented the results of three budget speeches. It took a lot of time. It took enough time to bring forth a bastard white elephant, the result of the budgets of two Finance Ministers. In the case of Mr. MacEachen, his second budget was an attempt to correct the first. In his first budget, Mr. MacEachen tried to close all tax loopholes in order to collect taxes more discreetly—that was the real reason. In his second budget, he tried to correct all the mistakes and poor judgment contained in the first.

Mr. Lalonde tried as well. He corrected a number of defects in Mr. MacEachen's two budgets.

The Senate is now faced with an intolerable situation. First of all, we shall have to pass this Bill within two or three days.

We cannot claim to work usefully and effectively in the circumstances. Obviously, a Bill like this one which is the consequence of one budget speech brought down in 1981, another in 1982 and a third one, will have to be passed as soon as possible so the taxpayers will know where they are. Tax experts are supposed to advise the taxpayer, but even the experts do not know what to do, since they cannot have prior knowledge of the advice they must give their clients. Once the Bill is passed, it will not be easy to find one's way around, because of a multitude of all kinds of directives aimed at clarifying some truly amazing legislation.

With Senator Roblin, I would like to point that Senator Barrow did not dare read us the entire text. Imagine the predicament of the taxpayer and the experts and lawyers who are supposed to advise their clients on the subject. It was interesting to hear Senator Barrow try, to some extent, to praise the Government for its 5-and-6 measures, when he said that there had been many positive results. That was not the point, however. In fact, what really made inflation go down was the Government's policy to do away with jobs and create an economic recession. There is no doubt that with the million and a half unemployed workers we have today in Canada, if inflation does not go down the situation is hopeless. The recession was planned. When we consider the 5-and-6 issue, it is all very well to say that tax exemptions will be capped at 5 per cent, whatever the inflation rate. Yet, we are not decreasing the tax burden proportionately. With this whole scheme, the government is the winner, for it taxes the difference between the 5 per cent it allows for inflation and the actual rate of inflation. As far as last year's income tax is concerned, the government, through this measure, has imposed a new hidden tax. It is as simple as that.

There is a last technical point I should like to raise. I understand that Mr. Cosgrove, the Minister, has indicated to the House of Commons that he had a number of amendments to propose. The opposition there has been unable to obtain information concerning these amendments. We know only about one of them, which will make it possible for Quebec notaries to enjoy the same treatment as lawyers in connection with work in progress. This particular amendment was not adopted by the House for technical reasons, due to the fact that the government used the so-called "closure". It did while the clause concerning the work in progress of some professionals was being considered in committee of the whole. The Minister forgot to propose this amendment which would have placed notaries on the same footing as lawyers. It was already too late. Closure was imposed and this amendment was turned down since it had been late in coming. There are also other amendments of which we are not aware and which of course were not adopted.

When this Bill is considered by the Committee tomorrow, I hope that the Minister will be open enough to tell us which amendments he plans to propose. We shall ask him whether he does not wish the Senate to correct any weaknesses in the legislation the House of Commons sent us, especially regarding this specific amendment related to Quebec notaries, as well as the other amendments which the Minister has kept to himself.

Technically, if the Minister really wanted to correct this Bill as he intended, we could agree to certain amendments and refer them to the House of Commons tomorrow afternoon. It would then be up to the House of Commons to approve or reject these amendments. I imagine that, once more, we shall be told that it is impossible to refer amendments to the House of Commons. We shall once again be told that the role of the Senate is simply to complain. If we complain loudly enough, we shall have done our duty and that is all that is expected of us.

The Liberal majority which has always obeyed the Government so meekly will do so once again tomorrow by adopting this Bill. As usual, our performance will have been pitiful because we shall have done only half of our job. What can we do? There are not enough of us to change the rules of the game. Even if we had a whole week to consider this Bill, the result would be the same. Since we are realists, we must simply comply with the wishes of the meek majority, much good may it do it!

● (1520)

[English]

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Barrow speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for their remarks on this bill. I had to rely on my good friend, Senator Frith, for an interpretation of Senator Flynn's remarks.

Senator Flynn: I am sure he was faithful.

Senator Frith: Not like a woman—if elegant, not faithful; and if faithful, not elegant.

Senator Barrow: The deputy leader spent some time discussing the complexities of the Income Tax Act, of the system, and the fact that they should be simplified. I could not agree with him more.

Senator Roblin: But—!

Senator Barrow: However, as soon as you try to simplify something there are those who try to find ways around it, and I am afraid this is what has happened with the Income Tax Act. Originally it was supposed to be simple. Over the years it has become very complex and, as we have seen before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, it is even difficult for some of our highly-paid advisers to know exactly what some of the sections mean.

I agree with the honourable senator that there should be a renewal of meetings with premiers to discuss changes made to the taxation system by the federal government as far as they concern the provinces.

The Leader of the Opposition said that when you do not have a good case you usually have a lot of discussion about it. However, it is equally true that when you have a good case there need not be a lot of discussion. The Leader of the Opposition also said that the Senate is expected to pass this bill within a few days. I would point out that the two previous budgets and this bill have been given a great deal of study by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. Though it made a few recommendations in its last report, for the most part it did not recommend any changes.

• (1530)

Honourable senators, I do not have any further comments to make on the bill. I therefore commend it for second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barrow moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS) CONTINUING ASSISTANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-130, to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-130 is a bill authorizing financial assistance to certain international financial institutions. In general and in broad perspective, in a time of great concern over the world economy, these institutions represent a significant vehicle for strengthening the economic and social circumstances of developing countries and thereby indirectly improving the economic conditions of our country.

Honourable senators, I should like to describe briefly which institutions we are talking about, and perhaps one way of doing that is to tell you which institutions we are not talking about and to acknowledge the important role that they all play in international development.

Honourable senators will recall that last fall we dealt with a similar bill, Bill C-129, which concerned the World Bank and its concessional fund, the International Development Association. The World Bank group is relatively well known because of its size and world-wide activities. It is known domestically in Canada particularly because we had the privilege of hosting its most recent annual meeting in Toronto last September.

Honourable senators, the regional development banks that are affected by the bill before us, Bill C-130, play an equally vital role, but because they are individually smaller and regional in their orientation, most of us are not as well acquainted with them as we are with the activities of the World Bank group. For the purpose of this bill, honourable senators, the international financial institutions comprise the four regional development banks, that is, Asian, African, Inter-American and Caribbean Development Banks and the concessional funds associated with them. Also included are the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Common Fund for Commodities. These regional development banks have proven to be highly qualified in dealing with the many challenges of development, particularly from the perspective of their particular region. Because they are regional, their specific insight into the values, cultures and attitudes of the people they are trying to serve provides them with a unique capacity and a special expertise.

The International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Common Fund, while global in their scope and part of the U.N. family, also represent specialized ways of advancing world development.

Honourable senators, testament to the acknowledged role of these institutions is to be found in many sources. Here are two: in their report on Canada's relations with the Caribbean and Central America, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and Defence noted that the international financial institutions have a vital role to play in moderating the acute financial crisis and in providing capital for the economic development of the countries of those regions. Both the Caribbean and Inter-American Development Banks are directly implicated by that recommendation. From a broader perspective, this view is shared by the Brandt report which urged greater support for the regional development banks in recognition of their growing expertise in development needs and problems of the various regions of the world. Honourable senators will remember that Willy Brandt and his colleagues brought his development message and its renewed urgency to Ottawa just last December.

Honourable senators, I believe Bill C-130 is relatively straightforward so far as its particular clauses are concerned. Clauses 2, 4 and 5 to 11 and the schedule of this legislation specify the institutions covered by this bill and provide for the procedure to add or delete institutions from the schedule.

I pause here, honourable senators, to tell you that, if you want to study this bill, it is very important to be sure that you have the one that is marked "As passed" and not the first reading version, because the bill as read a first time and presented in the House of Commons was considerably shorter. In the other place, an amendment proposed by the Honourable Douglas Roche, M.P., was accepted and incorporated in this bill. This amendment occupies all of the clauses from 5 through 11. What happened is that in the first reading bill those clauses did not appear and they were inserted after clause 4 to provide for a review procedure.

Honourable senators will remember that Parliament has shown some concern for the power given in a bill to, in effect, amend the bill or make important changes by dealing with, for example, amendments to schedules without reference back to Parliament. In one of the energy bills, Bill C-102, the proposal was made for what is called a negative resolution, and the essence of that resolution is that if, for example, applying it to this case, the government wished to amend the schedule and thereby change the institutions that would be the beneficiaries of this legislation, they would have to advise Parliament and the change would have to be laid before Parliament not later than the fifteenth sitting day of Parliament after that regulation or order is made according to clause 5. The reason it is called a negative resolution is that, if no one takes up the challenge to debate it, it automatically takes effect, but if the challenge to debate it is taken up, then all of these detailed provisions apply to the debate that takes place on that proposal. That is the reason for those clauses.

If you look at clause 4, you will see:

> The Governor in Council may, by order, amend the schedule
>
> (a) by adding thereto—

Et cetera. The original bill then skipped from clause 4 to what is now clause 12. The review procedure has been inserted, so perhaps honourable senators may wish to insert a note to that effect.

● (1540)

Clause 3 authorizes the provision of financial assistance to those institutions by way of direct payments, demand notes and share participation. Going from clause 3 to clause 12, that directs that the funds required for the purpose of the act shall be appropriated by Parliament and shall be limited to the amount appropriated.

Clause 13 provides interim appropriation for the current fiscal year. Clause 13 was inserted because this bill was introduced some time ago and the actual appropriations for this fiscal year—which will end on Wednesday—were not authorized; they did not find their way into the estimates and, therefore, the mechanism for fulfilling our international obligations with these institutions was put in place, although it cannot be given life and operational vigour until the legislation receives Royal Assent. That is the purpose of clause 13.

That was originally put in because the draftsmen thought there would be quite a time lapse between first reading and passage of the bill. It now appears as though the actual difference will be only a day.

In closing, honourable senators, I suggest it is important for the Senate to recognize that some of these appropriations are required to meet immediate obligations with the institutions, so I respectfully urge the Senate to support this bill at second reading.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Senator Frith, may I have a few explanations?

Senator Frith: Of course.

Senator Deschatelets: Clause 5 reads as follows:

> An order of the Governor in Council under section 4 shall be laid before Parliament not later than the fifteenth sitting day of Parliament after it is made.

Are we to understand that the words "laid before Parliament" mean that the order is laid before both Houses?

Senator Frith: When one says "Parliament", one means both Houses.

Senator Deschatelets: Then it is before both Houses?

Senator Frith: That is my interpretation, yes.

Senator Deschatelets: If it is laid before the House of Commons without any motion or debate, if the point is not raised, if I understand correctly, it is accepted. Now, the question remains: Is it laid before the Senate as well? If so, are senators also entitled to raise the issue? That is what I mean, do you see my point?

Senator Frith: In my opinion, it is indeed as stated in the clause:

> An order of the Governor in Council under section 4 shall be laid before Parliament not later than the fifteenth sitting day—

That is, before both Houses, naturally. So, the first proceedings required involved only the House of Commons, but the moment the order is tabled here, the issue can be raised in the Senate as well. We are not bound by the procedural details mentioned in clauses 5 to 11.

Senator Deschatelets: I now want to refer to Clause 8.

> (1) If a motion described in paragraph 5(2)(a) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection 5(3), and is adopted by that House, a message shall be sent from the House of Commons informing the Senate that the motion has been so adopted and requesting that the motion be concurred in by the Senate.

The Senate must therefore consider the motion already adopted by the House of Commons within five days. My interpretation is that the debate must originate in the House of Commons and we act only on a motion adopted by the other place. That is my argument.

Senator Frith: I would say that this is normal. As we are all aware, the Senate may pass a resolution or a bill, for instance, and send a message to the other place asking it for concurrence; the debate can be held simultaneously or consecutively. In this case, it is provided that, on a point raised in the other place, if there is no concurrence from the Senate, the objection raised in the other place will have no effect.

The procedure in this case is to hold consecutive debates beginning with a debate in the House of Commons. The resolution adopted in the other place will have no effect without approval from the Senate. The procedure or the rules of debate in the Senate are prescribed in the legislation now before us.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody: The sound system is working but there is no interpretation.

Senator Frith: I shall repeat the essence of the question raised by Senator Deschatelets.

There were two aspects to his question, the first with respect to the Senate's role. What is provided for here is, in effect, a consecutive debate rather than a concurrent debate, because the House of Commons takes the first step when it picks up the challenge, so to speak. When it decides to debate the matter, the rules for the debate in the other place are established. Once that is done, we look to clause 7, which states:

> If a motion described in paragraph 5(2)(b) is adopted by the House of Commons, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

Clause 8(1) states:

> If a motion described in paragraph 5(2)(a) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection 5(3), and is adopted by that House, a message shall be sent from the House of Commons informing the Senate that the motion has been so adopted and requesting that the motion be concurred in by the Senate.

Senator Deschatelets asked whether the initial step has to be taken by the House of Commons, and my understanding is that the initial step has to be taken by the House of Commons.

I have not looked into what would happen once it is put on here, or whether there is a way the Senate could, through the Rules of the Senate, raise the issue. As far as the steps provided for and the law are concerned, as I read it, the House of Commons must take the initial step.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Then look at clause 9(1). That tells us what the Senate does.

Senator Frith: Yes, but it does not change what I have said.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I am not too sure that the deputy leader has placed the correct interpretation on it. Clause 5(2) states:

> An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless, before that time—

So if nobody moves—either the minister or a member—it seems to me that the order will come into force.

Senator Frith: That is right.

Senator Flynn: Therefore, if the House of Commons does not move such a motion, the Senate has no power to move such a motion even if the Senate considers it should debate and reject the order.

The Senate has no power except when the house moves and, therefore, I suggest that if such is the case, the role of the Senate is greatly diminished and it really has no power. The House of Commons can simply remain silent and the Senate, whether or not it agrees, must accept that.

So I think the deputy leader should consider the effect of clause 5(2).

Senator Deschatelets: To reinforce your argument, Senator Flynn, if you refer to clause 5 again, it talks about an order which must be laid before Parliament, and "before Parliament" should mean before the two houses of Parliament.

Hon. Jack Marshall: That is right.

Senator Flynn: If they do not move, can we move?

• (1550)

Senator Marshall: No.

Senator Flynn: And the order comes into force.

Senator Frith: That is right. I thought I made it quite clear that in order to trigger something stopping it from coming into force under clauses 5 to 11 inclusive, only the House of Commons under those provisions can trigger the slowing mechanism, in other words, to slow down the effect or to stop the automatic effect. I agree with that. What I said is that I have not looked into or studied the possibility of the Senate's trying to find some way of urging the House of Commons to do so by its own resolution, but there is nothing in the legislation—and I thought I had made it clear—that under clauses 5 through 8 the Senate cannot pick up the challenge itself. Its role depends on the House of Commons taking the first step. That is why I said I agree with that interpretation.

Senator Flynn: Do you agree that we should have nothing to say if the House of Commons does not make a move? You said that you agree with the interpretation, but I am asking if you agree that the Senate should be powerless if the house does not move?

Senator Frith: There are various forms of negative and positive resolutions and formulas, and the one that they have chosen here is one that requires the House of Commons to pick up the challenge.

Senator Flynn: It deprives the Senate of the power to act.

Senator Frith: This formula clearly does not give the Senate the chance to take the first step.

Senator Flynn: Do you agree with that?

Senator Frith: Yes, of course. If it is in the legislation, I am supporting it.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: In a sense this is no longer a Parliament.

Senator Frith: I am proposing this legislation, and I support it. Senator Flynn knows that you do not ask a lawyer what he thinks of his client's case.

Senator Flynn: I completely disagree with the last words said by the deputy leader. He is not acting for a client here; he is acting on behalf of the people of Canada.

Senator Marshall: That is right.

Senator Flynn: The government may be wrong, and it is not because he is the deputy leader that he necessarily has to support it. The deputy leader is not a member of the administration. It is not a question of cabinet solidarity. He can say that he regrets that the legislation is out of touch, but to say that he supports it because he is the government's lawyer, that is unfair and unacceptable.

Senator Frith: It is not because I am the government's lawyer. We simply disagree. Let me make my position clear. When I agreed to sponsor this bill, I agreed to put forward the arguments in favour of the bill.

Senator Marshall: Your mind cannot be changed.

Senator Frith: Yes, it can. It is my view that my mind—that is, my own opinion as to whether it could be improved or whether it would be better if the Senate were given that right—is irrelevant.

Senator Flynn: It is relevant.

Senator Frith: I say it is irrelevant. My personal opinion is not relevant.

Senator Roblin: The point at issue is not irrelevant to the Senate. It seems to me that in a sense we are amending the Constitution. As I understand the role of the Senate, it has equal powers with the House of Commons. Here we are being asked to give up some of those rights if we pass this bill. It is quite clear, if you read clause 9(1) of the bill, that we cannot do anything unless the House of Commons triggers it. I think we are all agreed on that. Is that a proper thing for us to agree to? I suggest it is highly doubtful that it is.

I hope that this bill will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs so that these questions can be looked into. I did not have that opinion before I read this passage in the bill, but this is a new factor that has come up. It seems to me that the Senate should be very careful about passing this bill because I do not know what precedents it is based on. It may be based on a million precedents. Certainly, when it is brought to the attention of honourable senators that their rights are circumscribed in this way one has to doubt whether that is a wise course to follow. If you follow this line of logic much further, then you will reduce this body to even more of a cipher than some of us might think it is at the present time. Therefore, I ask my honourable friend to take that into account.

While I am on my feet, there is a question I should like to ask concerning the schedule. There are nine different financing institutions in the schedule and no one has told us anything about them. Who are they? Under whose auspices do they function? Who runs them? Where does the control lie? We put our money into these things and we do not know who is dispensing it and under what general policies they operate. The answers may be obvious, for all I know, but I think we need some explanation as to who these people are that we are giving this money to. Are they organizations of the United Nations or are they independent financial organizations?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there are three points I should like to make. First, there is no question that the issue raised by Senator Deschatelets, Senator Flynn and Senator Roblin is relevant as to the role of the Senate. I was not suggesting that it was not relevant but I was saying that my personal opinion is what I consider not to be relevant to the debate.

The second point is whether there is any justification for the House of Commons being the only body able to trigger this mechanism. One possible explanation—although it may be regarded as unsatisfactory—is that this is a money bill and normally the initiation of money bills and matters in that category are with the House of Commons. That is a possible reason why it is felt that the Senate should not have the initiating role in picking up the designation of the institutions to receive the benefit. As a money bill, it seems to me that you can justify the fact that the House of Commons should take the first step, as it must, in initiating all money bills.

As to the third point, if honourable senators feel that they would like to have more information as to what these institutions are, notice is now given that they are so interested, and we will try to have that information for the committee.

Senator Flynn: I must refute what the deputy leader said about money bills. He said because it is a money bill the Senate should have nothing to do with it.

Senator Frith: I certainly did not.

Senator Flynn: You certainly did. You said one of the reasons why—

Senator Frith: I said "a reason."

Senator Flynn: All right, "a reason," but it is not acceptable.

Senator Frith: I said it might not be satisfactory to you. I did not expect it to be satisfactory to you.

Senator Flynn: I say that constitutionally you are absolutely wrong. We cannot initiate a money bill, but regarding them we have all the powers except that of increasing treasury obligations. This is a case where the order implies spending and, therefore, we are entitled to block that by the device that you find in this bill. If the House of Commons does not move, it would prevent the Senate from having to play its normal role under the Constitution. In other words, the government may decide to order the spending of money, and if the House of Commons does not object, implied approval is given by the Senate. I agree with you that with the present Senate, in which the Liberals are the majority, that may be the case, but constitutionally that is entirely wrong.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I agree completely with my leader and I should like to add a point on this constitutional issue. Bill C-130 did not come to us by way of a message received from His Excellency the Governor General. If my honourable friend's point has any validity, the bill itself ought to have come with a message, but there is no message. Therefore, it is not a money bill and the point does not apply.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am not about to suggest that Senator Flynn is absolutely wrong—

Senator Roblin: Well, that is good.

Senator Frith: —or that Senator Roblin is absolutely wrong. However, in light of the answer I gave, they might not be absolutely right either in their analysis that this bill is constitutionally wrong. I am sure if there is something constitutionally wrong with this bill, it will be challenged in due course.

Senator Roblin: It is up to us to defend the Constitution.

Senator Frith: Absolutely. It is perfectly in order for you to raise that.

Senator Flynn: We are circumstantially wrong.

Senator Frith: The first reading version of Bill C-130 states:

> His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons the appropriation of public revenue under the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out—

Therefore, someone thinks it is a money bill, although Senator Roblin does not. I am not saying that he is absolutely wrong.

Senator Roblin: Where is that? It is not in my version.

Senator Frith: It is in the bill before me.

• (1600)

There is no question in my mind that this is a money bill and was treated as such. If there is some discrepancy between the first printing of the bill and the bill as printed after Mr. Roche's amendment, it does not now contain the message from the Governor General.

As much as honourable senators opposite may think I am absolutely wrong, I would point out that someone disagrees with them and thinks that it is a money bill.

Does it mean, therefore, because it is a money bill there is no role for the Senate? The answer is, no. I agree with Senator Flynn that that does not mean there is no possibility of the Senate's being able to at least negate a matter it raises because we have that power otherwise.

Senator Flynn: That is not the point.

Senator Frith: I understand that; I offer this as a reason for its being this way.

Senator Flynn: A bad reason.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Frith: It may be a bad reason, as far as Senator Flynn is concerned. I am hoping that other senators will think it is a good reason, and if they do, they will vote for it on second reading.

Senator Flynn: You are right to hope.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: I would pose a question to the deputy leader. Let us suppose that it is a money bill. In that case, does the House of Commons have the freedom to act or not to act? If I understand the situation, if they do not act but remain silent, then it is automatically passed. Constitutionally speaking, is a money bill open to those two ways of proceeding or only one, which is that the House of Commons must act?

Senator Frith: In the case of a negative resolution, under this formula, they can act or not act.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I took the time this morning to read the debate concerning this bill which took place in the other place both at the time of its introduction and when the amendments were proposed by Mr. Roche. I am impressed this afternoon by the fact that the debate generated here is far more heated and, if I may say so, far more partisan than the one which took place in the other place.

I suspect that the amendments, which were proposed by Mr. Roche and which were accepted by the government in the other place, did not take into account this chamber.

I understand it to be the case that there is no compelling urgency to pass this bill. I further suspect that, through a process of negotiation, and by relatively straightforward changes to the bill, the defect which has been identified here this afternoon by other senators with respect to cutting the ground out from under the ability of the Senate to take any part in future implementation of the provisions in the intent of this bill could be remedied.

I would urge the Deputy Leader of the Government to give serious consideration to accepting a referral to a committee so that we may have a day to attempt to correct the situation, or to letting the bill stand until after Easter. My understanding is that the legislation is not required for any particular reason before the end of the year.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw attention to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate, on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, my information is that it is not true that there is no urgency. We are behind in our commitments to these institutions for this fiscal year. This bill is designed to enable us to fulfill those commitments.

Senator Balfour: Before December 31.

Senator Frith: Before March 31 and then perhaps before December 31 for the next year. As regards the commitments this year, there is no authority in the estimates or elsewhere respecting our commitments for the fiscal year 1982-83. Therefore, I have been advised that there is some urgency.

Honourable senators, just to put some perspective on this matter, it is also incorrect to say that there is no role for the Senate or that the Senate's role was totally overlooked because, of course, the legislation clearly provides a role for the Senate.

The question is raised as to whether that is adequate. Honourable senators will remember that one of our colleagues, Senator Godfrey, pointed out that, while he too was not perfectly satisfied with this form, he felt, as Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, that this at least has brought us a long way from what is a much more normal situation in terms of frequency, and that is for the Governor in Council, alone, to amend the schedule. There are hundreds of examples of that on the statute books.

What we have here is a mechanism to at least subject the discretion, the order or the activity of the administration to some scrutiny by both the House of Commons and the Senate. This parliamentary review of these executive orders, which has been praised by people on both sides, is at least a step forward. Whether or not the next step is to have the Senate in the position of also initiating the negative resolution is something for us to consider.

I think the clauses must be viewed in the perspective that for years and years there was no review mechanism for Parliament regarding these executive orders. At least now not only the House of Commons but also the Senate has a role to play. Perhaps the role should be a bigger one, but, in the meantime, I ask honourable senators to adopt this bill because, first of all, there is some urgency with reference to our commitments to these institutions which, as I say, play a very important role in international economic development, particularly in underdeveloped countries, and, secondly, because it is still a great step forward from what we have had for many years so far as review of executive orders is concerned.

If the matter is studied in committee, we can ask the minister why the Senate should not have the initiating role.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know whether the deputy leader wishes to put a motion, but if he does not so move, I would move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to consider that very point, and whether we should accept it.

It seems to me that the deputy leader, in his closing remarks, has said that it is not because we have accepted a check on the discretionary powers of the government that we have to be satisfied that the House of Commons has more power than the Senate. Under the Constitution, the Senate has the same powers as the House of Commons. We are putting the Senate in a lower position under this text. Therefore, I would like to have this matter dealt with by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

It seems to me that, if we proceed by way of Committee of the Whole, we will be in a difficult position. We have tomorrow morning, tomorrow afternoon and even Wednesday morning, if necessary, to deal with this matter in committee, if the urgency the deputy leader has mentioned exists and this bill should be passed and assented to on Wednesday.

• (1610)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my difficulty in choosing the committee is that if the basic principle of the bill—namely, the granting of funds to these regional institutions—is not the issue that we are concerned with, then it probably does not require study by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. If the Senate is concerned with whether there is really a constitutional issue involved in the clauses that have been added, then I agree that the bill ought to be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Senator Flynn: In order to deal only with this point.

Senator Frith: The committee could then report the bill back, after considering that point.

Honourable senators, I think that is a reasonable suggestion. I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional affairs in order to consider the constitutionality of sections 5 to 11.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the names of the Honourable Senators Frith, Bosa, Le Moyne and Stollery be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Buckwold, Stanbury, Steuart and Godfrey on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think we deserve a word of explanation as to why these changes are being made. Four is a significant number. Is it because these members will not be here tomorrow, or because you are not happy with their behaviour?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the bill that will be referred to this committee, and of which its work will consist for this week, probably, is a very important one, and since four members of the committee are absent we want to be sure that we have full representation.

Senator Flynn: When you say "full representation," do you mean for the vote or for the debate?

Senator Frith: For the debate, the vote and all proceedings of the committee.

Senator Flynn: If you had said "vote," I would have agreed to let the motion pass; but in view of the last answer it is going to be on division.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I wonder if I could ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if the four members who are now being placed on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce were present and received advice from all the experts who were hired for the committee.

Senator Frith: In many cases, honourable senators, they did. I have checked the membership attendance, which I have here. For example, in some cases, Senator Bosa attended more meetings than certain committee members did, as did Senator Stollery.

Senator Flynn: Senator Bosa is, of course, a very devoted member of the majority.

Senator Frith: The answer to the question is, in large part, yes.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And in large part, no.

Senator Frith: In some part, no.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESS LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 4)—SECOND READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill C-144, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4).

He said: Honourable senators, I was very pleased to have been given the honour of speaking on this bill, Bill C-144, the salient points of which I hope, in the next few minutes, to be able to put before this chamber.

This act became effective in 1961, and its provisions have been extended many times since then. The purpose of this amendment is to extend the life of the act for another period, from April 1, 1983 to March 31, 1985.

The purpose of the act is to encourage lenders in the private sector to make term loans to small business, and for this the government provides a guarantee. The loan limits vary in size, but they started out in 1961, when the measure was originally enacted, in the amount of $25,000. In 1980 they were increased to $100,000. The rate of interest which was charged on the loans prior to 1978 was based on the average yield that some government bonds, usually of terms of five and 10 years, yielded. That sometimes resulted in lenders receiving a lower rate than the current rate. So in 1978 a change in the formula was proposed. It is now the bank prime rate plus 1 per cent.

[Senator Frith.]

That has resulted in a significant increase in the number of loans. In fact, the number of loans rose from 4,894, in 1977, to more than 17,000 in 1981, with a corresponding increase in the dollar volume from $96 million to $500 million.

● (2005)

The lending ceiling is established by Parliament from time to time, and under Bill C-144 it is $1.5 billion. The government liability under the guarantee provision of the act is limited to 10 per cent of the aggregate loan made by any lending institution during the lending period.

As of October 31, 1982, the contingent liability of the government is $213,970,155. The maximum loans that may be outstanding to any one borrower is $100,000. This amount was increased in 1980. In 1961 it was $25,000.

The definition of a small business is such that the gross annual income must not exceed $1.5 million, which businesses are eligible to borrow under the act. The provisions do not apply to finance companies, insurance companies, mining and oil companies, and those engaged in real estate development.

The purposes of borrowing are to purchase fixed and mobile equipment, the improvement or modernization of the plant or premises, and the purchase or construction of premises or the purchase of land.

The borrower's equity must equal 20 per cent of the amount that is borrowed, except for the purchase of premises or land, where the amount is decreased to 10 per cent. Loans are made at the sole discretion of the lender.

The program delivery is predicated on simplicity. The borrower consults with the lender, completes an application form and works out the conditions of the loan. The application form remains with the lender. The department is notified that a loan application has been made, and the event is registered in the minister's register and the lender is notified that the loan is guaranteed.

It is an inexpensive program to administer. I am told that there are only eight persons in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who are involved in its administration.

The number of claims that have been registered in the past has increased considerably, but that is attributable to the fact that it is directly in relation to the greater number of loans that have been made.

Honourable senators, in essence, that is the extent of the purpose of the bill and the reason why this legislation is now before the Senate. I shall be pleased to answer any questions that honourable senators may care to put to me.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, as Senator Bosa has explained, Bill C-144 is simply an amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act, which came into force in 1961 under an administration of a different stripe and one that was far more sympathetic to small business and to business generally than the present regime which seems to have gone on interminably since that time. This particular piece of legislation simply amends and extends that particular act, as has been done many times in the past. As Senator Bosa has said, the essence of the bill is quite simple; it increases the amount of money available to $1.5 billion and the terms are extended to March 31, 1985.

• (2010)

The legislation has the effect of guaranteeing the banks $1.5 billion in guaranteed loans. I was fascinated to hear Senator Bosa say how pleased he was that the interest rate was at prime-plus-one, and the decision as to who would make the loan is entirely at the discretion of the lender. That is not a bad deal. If a bank has an opportunity to pass on $1.5 billion of its money and the return is guaranteed at prime-plus-one with absolutely no risk, I do not think they deserve an awful lot of congratulation for being so discreet as to pass the money out to the small business community in Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thought it was originally a Conservative bill.

Senator Doody: It was, but it has been extended and amended so many times that it has lost its original compassion and has now turned into a banker's bill. I would have thought that the government would have been much more pleased to say that it was prime less a fraction of a point or prime-less-one, or something of that sort, because it really is of benefit to the banking community. It is not fair to refer only to the banking community because it is the financial community. These guarantees are available to insurance companies, mortgage companies, caisses populaires and all the other companies in the money business. I certainly cannot blame them for taking advantage of this opportunity to make one percentage point over prime on a guaranteed effort.

I cannot quarrel with the fact that the government has made this money available to the small business community. I think it is a very positive step, and the more support the small business community in Canada receives the better off the community at large will be. The small business community has been and will continue to be the heart and soul of the economic driving force in Canada. Any growth that we have had or any hope of full employment or more employment will come from that community. I suppose a business with a turnover of $1.5 million or so is really not all that small, but it can go considerably below that. Certainly, these people do need the help and support.

There are other ways in which the government can help the business climate and small business in general. As I say, I do not deny or object to this particular measure. I think it is a good one. The interest rates of the past several years have been a burden which small businesses have had to endure. The number of bankruptcies over the past few years has been devastating. I am surprised that there are enough small businesses left to take advantage of the generosity of the program Senator Bosa mentioned, but it is encouraging to see that there are some.

Another positive measure the government should consider taking for the benefit of the small business community is that of easing the over-regulation and overburden of paperwork. So many of the people in small business spend their time filling in numerous forms for agencies like Statistics Canada—or the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as some of us prefer to call it. Many employees in the small business community spend much of their time and effort satisfying the insatiable appetites of the statistics gatherers. The government's purchasing policies are far too complex for the small business community. It should be split into smaller units to give these people an opportunity to compete with the larger companies in the marketplace.

Honourable senators, by and large I have no quarrel with the thrust of this particular bill. It is a step in the right direction and it will undoubtedly help many people who are employing fellow Canadians and who are trying to stay alive and alert in these difficult times.

• (2015)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I wish to make a brief intervention on this bill.

I note the act was first introduced in 1961. I point out to Senator Bosa that Conservative governments have not lasted very long, unfortunately, but there is a lot of legislation in existence today that was introduced by various Conservative governments, and this is one example. Just in case Senator Bosa did not make that plain enough, I wanted to remind him of that fact.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, in introducing the bill in the other place, referred at length to the Small Business Consultative Committee. This is a committee of 22 members which makes recommendations to the minister, and I wonder if any of its reports are made public. Does the committee itself meet with any group of small businessmen, or does the minister perform this function.

The Clark administration had commenced a study on the problems of the small businessman. Can the honourable senator tell us the present status of that study? Is it completed, or are plans being made to make it public?

The loan ceiling is $100,000. The minister stated that, although he had considered changing and probably increasing the ceiling, he saw no need to do it at this particular time. Honourable senators, I would ask you to compare the ceiling on the small business loan and the ceiling on the farm loan. You will find that the farmer can get three times the amount that the small businessman can get. I presume there is some reason for this, and I would ask the sponsor of the bill, in closing the debate, to explain to us why a small business loan is limited to one-third of a farm loan.

Also, honourable senators, I would point out that $100,000 is equivalent to one job. Various departments such as DREE and so on consider that $100,000 creates one job, and surely for a sector that is responsible for almost 50 per cent of employment, we can do a little better than a $100,000 loan.

The average loan, however, is not $100,000, as the ceiling indicates; the average loan is only $26,000, which perhaps the sponsor of the bill mentioned. Honourable senators, $26,000 will not even buy an inshore fishing boat today, and, on top of that, the fisherman gets a subsidy, so when we compare the assistance given to the small businessman with that given to those in other sectors, we find that he gets a very raw deal indeed.

I was intrigued by the excuse that the minister gave for not raising the ceiling at this time. He said it is because we are liable to bring in red tape, and if we raise the ceiling we are certainly going to disturb that happy relationship that exists between the lender and the borrower. Honourable senators will recall that the ceiling on loans under the National Housing Act was raised a number of times, and that fact did not disturb the happy relationship between the lender and the borrower. The ceiling on farm loans has been raised a number of times, and the Minister of Agriculture has told us that farmers are still happy with the Farm Credit Corporation and are still borrowing when they can get loans.

● (2020)

The program is not very expensive. Last year it cost $8.8 million. The estimates for this year indicate that $13 million will be spent to support small business loans. That increase indicates that not everyone believes the six-and-five program is going to work. Obviously, there are more than the three Senate cabinet ministers complaining about the six-and-five program, because they anticipate that the small business loans program will cost more next year.

The $13 million is really not a large amount when one considers the amount spent on loans to Canadair, de Havilland, Massey-Ferguson—

Hon. Jack Marshall: Maislin.

Senator Phillips: —Maislin and Chrysler, yet we are talking about a section of the economy that provides 50 per cent of employment in Canada. Surely it is entitled to as much consideration as at least one of the major industries.

Maislin had dealings in the United States; Canadair spent half of its production costs in the United States on jet engines, and we keep on pouring money into those companies, yet if a small business gets into trouble, it goes under. I think this is totally unfair and unreasonable, considering what a small industry means to the average Canadian town. I have used the example before in the Senate of Canada Packers closing its plant in Charlottetown. That will mean that 225 people will lose their jobs. Some may say that that is not a large number, but, in comparison, it is equivalent to 3,000 people in Montreal or Toronto losing their jobs. If that were allowed to happen in one major industry, everyone would urge the government to help it out.

If 200 people are laid off in Yarmouth or Saskatoon, we are told to forget it because they were employed by small businesses. Again, I emphasize that that attitude is entirely wrong.

Honourable senators, I urge the government to get on with its study of the problems facing small businesses. The Federal Business Development Bank Act probably requires some changes in conjunction with this bill. Currently, that corporation is the last hope for many people seeking loans. I often tell people to apply to the Federal Business Development Bank, but that they should not expect a loan. I say that because their feasibility work will be reviewed, and reviewed by those who are probably the best at it in Canada. Perhaps the banks should be doing more of this in assisting small businesses.

Money placed in mortgages is insured, so that it is not lost. That principle could be applied to small business loans.

I urge the government to get on with its review and study instead of sitting back and saying, "We have extended a program which was instituted in 1961 for two years." Things have changed considerably in 20-odd years. I urge the government to recognize that fact, and to prepare the necessary improvements to the legislation.

● (2025)

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Bosa which he can respond to when he closes the debate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Wishful thinking!

Senator Marshall: My question relates to what Senator Phillips said. I have difficulty understanding the difference between the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Federal Business Development Bank Act because the criteria are the same. Both fishermen and farmers can be classified as small businesses, so why are three agencies running four different programs when one agency would suffice?

I should also like to know what is the strength in numbers of the people who administer the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Federal Business Development Bank Act. Has any thought been given to combining these in this period of restraint and in our wish to economize?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have a technical question which perhaps should not be asked until the committee stage. I have been trying for a few minutes now to see if the English version squares with the French version of clause 1, but to no avail. I would like some explanation so as to be sure that indeed the two versions mean the same thing. For instance, here is how subclause 1(b) reads in English:

[English]

"(b) during any of the periods referred to in paragraph 6(d) to (i), a total amount in excess of"

[Translation]

Even if the amounts are not specified, the meaning of this subclause can be understood. Now, I go on to the French version and I read subclause b):

b) pendant l'une des périodes visées aux alinéas 6*d*) à i), . . .

So far, it is the same as the English version and it goes on as follows:

. . . jusqu'à concurrence des proportions suivantes du principal global des prêts destinés à l'amélioration d'entreprises consentis par cette banque au cours de cette période.

To me, that seems to be an extremely elaborate translation of the words "a total amount in excess of". I simply cannot understand anything at all in that.

Senator Flynn: There is nothing to understand!

Senator Tremblay: It is the wording of a legislation which gives a meaning to things. I am simply seeking a clarification which might be given in committee if the Bill is referred. If I were to vote for the French version, I cannot understand the wording and therefore I would have no idea of what it is I would be voting for. With respect to the English version, I would at least have the impression of voting for something which makes sense. "In excess of" is not in the French version.

Senator Flynn: The point I am trying to make is that the French text does not make sense. It cannot possibly mean the same as the English version. I would also like the Bill's sponsor to explain why this Bill is the second or third one passed during the same session. If we refer to Sections 1 and 3 in Chapter 6 of the Statutes of 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983, and to Subsection 2(2), there is also a reference to the Statutes of 1981, 1982 and 1983, Chapter 118. I did not know that the Statutes of this session had already been published with numbers, because we have not yet finished the session. In addition to the explanation requested by Senator Tremblay, could Senator Bosa explain this evening or in committee, what changes were introduced through these two Bills which apparently were passed during the same session?

• (2030)

[English]

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw attention to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Bosa speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

[Translation]

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I shall be happy to draw the Minister's attention to the discrepancies pointed out by Senators Tremblay and Flynn. I shall be able to clarify my position before third reading of this Bill.

Senator Flynn: I did not think you would be capable of comparing the two versions.

[English]

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I was very pleased that senators brought to my attention some of the points on which perhaps, I did not elaborate sufficiently in the presentation of the bill.

First, I should like to address the question raised by Senator Doody in which he said I made reference to the rate of interest of prime-plus-one being very attractive to the lending institutions. This bill was not intended to subsidize the interest rate of the loans made to small businesses, but inadvertently it did serve that purpose because small businesses in a loss position or which are borrowing money for start-up operations might not be able to obtain a loan at such a favourable rate as prime-plus-one. Therefore, indirectly this bill also provides some subsidization of the interest rate.

Senator Doody: It is a guaranteed income for the banks.

Senator Bosa: Senator Phillips raised a question about the difference in the ceiling of the amount of money that can be loaned to small businesses as opposed to farmers. I believe he made reference to the fact that it is only one-third of the amount that can be loaned to farmers.

Honourable senators, I believe he answered the question himself because the average rate of loan to a small business is $25,000. That does not require an amount in excess of the present limit that has been established—that is, $100,000.

The committee constituted to advise the minister on how to deal with this particular area of endeavour has not had sufficient time to make an in-depth study of the problems related to small businesses. My understanding is that this committee, which is composed of small business people and which sets its own agenda, will undertake such a study and report at some future time to the minister.

Senator Marshall asked why there were four different acts and why there was a separate act to provide loans to fishermen.

Senator Marshall: And farmers.

Senator Bosa: The definition of small business applies to businesses which have a gross annual income of $1.5 million or under.

Senator Flynn: Taxable income?

Senator Bosa: The definition does not state that fishermen are excluded. It says that financial, mining and oil companies are excluded, but there is no exclusion of fishermen. Therefore, I believe the Small Businesses Loans Act also applies to fishermen. However, if I am wrong, I shall be pleased to correct my position tomorrow.

• (2035)

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Bosa: At the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Will you reply to the questions on third reading? You do not want this bill to be referred to any committee—neither Committee of the Whole nor a standing Senate committee?

Senator Bosa: If it is the desire of honourable senators that the matter be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I would be pleased to so move. My understanding, through informal discussions that took place before this sitting, was that during the last three years similar amending bills have never been referred to committee because they dealt only with the extension of the period; they did not deal with substantive changes to the bill itself.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, there may have been a misunderstanding. I thought that this bill would have at least been referred to Committee of the Whole. Who is the minister responsible?

Senator Frith: The Honourable William Rompkey.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps we can dispense.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in the past a bill which merely dealt with extension of the effective date of the legislation has not been referred to committee. We thought, therefore, that referral to a committee would probably not be necessary in this case. In view of the fact that these questions have arisen, however, I think it is a good idea that we have an undertaking by the sponsor of the bill that he will try to answer those questions between now and the third reading.

Senator Flynn: The problem is this. Suppose that the sponsor of the bill gets the reply that we should amend the French version of clause 1(b). It simply does not make sense the way it is written. I am not quite sure that Senator Denis would agree with me.

Hon. Azellus Denis: For once, I agree with you.

Senator Flynn: If we are to amend a bill for that reason, are we to do so on third reading?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should make it clear that the Leader of the Government did suggest to me, and I concurred, that we need not have committee stage on this bill. I must accept responsibility for that. I should have known better though, because I underestimated the interest of the opposition in this bill and I underestimated the number of valid points they were going to raise on it. That is the trouble in giving undertakings in advance—one never knows what is going to come up in the course of the debate.

I confess my complicity in the matter, but I want to assure my honourable friend that the next time he asks me about matters of this kind I will caution him to wait and see what the debate produces before we get to deciding concretely about the committee stage.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I felt that we could at least take a crack at dealing with the questions between now and third reading, since amendments are appropriate at third reading, in any event. If we did not have this undertaking from the sponsor to try to get those answers for us between now and third reading—as he would be trying to do between now and any committee hearing—we could change the plan.

We have a certain amount of work piled up ahead of us. My inclination is to suggest that we wait to hear the explanation. We could handle at third reading what we would in effect be handling if we were in Committee of the Whole for a bill with so few clauses. The Senate as a whole can deal with the amending procedure.

Senator Flynn: It is not the same thing if the reply comes from the minister rather than from the sponsor of the bill. Should we receive a reply of the minister from the sponsor of the bill, we can hardly discuss it with him. Although I realize that the sponsor of the bill is competent and could very well deal with the matter in a better way than could the minister, at the same time he is caught, as is the deputy leader, with solidarity and he has to say that he accepts the answers, and that is all. It is very difficult for us to accept, with our eyes closed, the replies that are going to be given by the sponsor.

• (2040)

Senator Frith: As I said, I would hope that if honourable senators are not satisfied with the answers given they will act as they would act if they were given unsatisfactory answers in Committee of the Whole, and simply debate the bill on the basis of unsatisfactory answers. Anyway, that is what I suggest as a way of dealing with the matter. If we are dissatisfied with the answers we are given, I suggest we deal with them then.

Senator Flynn: But is it possible that Senator Bosa will be able to tell us tomorrow that the minister has agreed that the French version is inadequate, and is willing to correct it?

Senator Frith: Anything is possible.

Senator Flynn: That will be something new, but perhaps Senator Bosa could say yes.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I do not see how I could possibly make a commitment on behalf of the minister, whom I have not even consulted yet on this particular point. But the Leader of the Opposition can rest assured that this point, as well as the concern he mentioned a moment ago, will be brought to the minister's attention.

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 29, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-141, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. George J. McIlraith, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Tuesday March 29, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-139, intituled: "An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Monday, March 28, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE J. MCILRAITH,
Acting Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science have power to sit at four o'clock today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

• (1410)

[English]

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Molgat and Bonnell be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Steuart and Godfrey on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PARLIAMENT

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING PROROGATION

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government has more to tell the Senate about the intentions of the government with regard to terminating the session, or are these intentions to remain as obscure as they have been for some time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourables senators, I cannot give a definition for the level of obscurity mentioned by my honourable friend. I can tell him that the obvious improvements in the passage of legislation manifested here in the past few days are of sufficient significance to show that some consideration is being given to the question. I do not have a definitive answer at this time. I should also advise the Leader of the Opposition that the Minister of Finance has given an undertaking that he will announce, I believe either later today or no later than tomorrow, the date on which he will bring down a budget. That may be helpful information in making more definite plans with regard to the date on which we ought to resume after the Easter recess.

Senator Flynn: Did the Leader of the Government say that the announcement will be made later today?

Senator Olson: I want to be perfectly clear on that matter. I believe that the Minister of Finance has given an indication in the other place that he will announce before the Easter recess begins the date on which he intends to bring down his budget.

Senator Flynn: Will there be an announcement made in this place as to when we will be resuming after Easter before we adjourn?

• (1415)

Senator Olson: That is something we probably ought to discuss. It would appear to me that we shall have cleared up the government business, if I may refer to it as such, on the Order Paper, with the exception of some bills that originated in the Senate—namely Bills S-31, S-32 and S-33. Therefore, it seems to me that if by the time we adjourn for Easter we have dealt with all of the bills that have been passed to us from the House of Commons, it would be reasonable for us to wait for a few days after April 11, which is when the House of Commons will resume, so that they will have time to pass further legislation to this chamber for our consideration.

GRAIN

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—ANTICIPATED ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PAYMENTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to renew a question I raised with the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board the other day. I asked him at that time when it was his intention to announce the initial payments for grains controlled by the Canadian Wheat Board.

At the conclusion of our exchange, I suggested to him that he had given me the impression that he would make the announcement either before this house rises for Easter or before we resume on April 11. On reading Hansard, I noticed that his nod was not recorded in the official proceedings. I should like him to confirm that he is going to make that announcement within those terms.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Those are my full intentions, honourable senators.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

NEWFOUNDLAND—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF LIFEBOAT BASES ON WEST COAST

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but first I want to congratulate him on taking action so quickly through the RCMP, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Fisheries to apprehend Sea Shepherd and to arrest 21 members of her crew. I never expected my request to get such quick action.

My question has to do with the release today from the Department of Transport regarding the construction of a new search and rescue lifeboat for the Gaspé. This is a good idea as a new lifeboat is badly needed in that area. However, in looking at the area covered by the lifeboat bases, there is a wide gap in the western part of Newfoundland where a lot of incidents occur and where there is no security.

I am wondering if the Leader of the Government could find out if it is still the intention of the Department of Transport to locate lifeboat bases along the west coast of Newfoundland, which was promised about seven or eight years ago.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Yes, I give an undertaking that I will make inquiries of the Minister of Transport and perhaps also of the Minister of National Defence, since search and rescue is often done under the direction of the Department of National Defence.

I want to thank my honourable friend for his attempt to give me credit for helping in the situation which arose in connection with the sealing operation and the threats with respect to it. Unfortunately, I cannot take that credit.

The federal ministers who were directly responsible were the Minister of Transport, the Minister of National Defence and, perhaps, the Solicitor General. There were also others who were watching the situation with great diligence—perhaps the attorneys general of the provinces were also there.

I think what they have done is in compliance with the law of this country, and while there was some understandable impatience, it is important that all of these departments, both federal and provincial, act in a way that is in fact in compliance with the legal requirements.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. CUSTOMS PORTS OF ENTRY—PROPOSED REDUCTION IN HOURS OF SERVICE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The United States Department of the Treasury has given notice of its desire to reduce the hours of service at some ports of entry to the United States—in particular, the ports of Beaudette and Warroad, Minnesota, and Dunseith, North Dakota.

• (1420)

Two of these ports are on the border of Manitoba, and a reduction in hours would have a serious economic effect on the province, particularly at the port of Warroad where there is substantial truck traffic, much of which moves at night. There is also a CN line running through Warroad to the United States and back into Canada, which handles a substantial amount of grain traffic and is an alternative route to the CN main line. So, a reduction of hours could have a serious effect on the movement of goods from our province and, indeed, from the west.

Could the Leader of the Government indicate what action the Government of Canada has taken with regard to this proposal?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a few days ago Senator Molgat was kind enough to give me notice that he was going to ask this question. I have therefore obtained some background information for him. I am not sure I can be as specific as he would like me to be, because my understanding is that we have received a proposal or a suggestion from the United States immigration officials with respect to the reduction of hours of service at the ports Senator Molgat has identified. There are several others too; for example, the ports of Wild Horse and Del Bonita, Alberta. I think there is one, and perhaps more, near Rainy River, Ontario.

At the moment I am advised that it should be noted that this is only a proposal and that no formal notice has been received by the Canadian authorities.

There is another part to Senator Molgat's question which I should like to answer, but I do not have the information with me. He asked what the response of the Government of Canada was to this proposal.

First of all, if the proposal to reduce hours in fact goes forward, then there is no point in keeping the port on the Canadian side open. The concern that has been expressed by Senator Molgat will certainly be conveyed to our departmental officials so that those who will be affected by the reduction will know that our concerns have been expressed to the United States authorities.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF EVALUATION REPORT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Rowe on March 2, 1983, concerning experiments with icebergs funded or conducted by the Government of Canada. This is a fairly long answer and, if honourable senators agree, I shall ask that it be taken as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Department of the Environment (DOE) through the Atmospheric Environment Service (AES) provides the main sea ice reconnaissance and forecast service of the federal government. This is funded mainly to support Arctic, east coast and Great Lakes shipping which can avoid icebergs. DOE is still seeking funds to carry out regular iceberg monitoring and forecasting, so the supporting research has been limited. Other research falls under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans mandate. Tactical or close-in monitoring and forecasting is considered to be an operator's problem, monitored by COGLA (Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration).

Recently, DOE has supported two unsolicited proposals, working with the contractors on projects to develop mathematical models of iceberg drift and deterioration for future use at the Ice Central (Ottawa) of the Atmospheric Environment Service. The total cost of this work was $23,000 during the last year.

DOE (AES) has also shared in a cooperative program with the U.S. Navy, at less than $6,000 cost to DOE, to determine the capability of an airborne scanning microwave radiometer for detecting icebergs, both in open water and in sea ice. Also, studies have been carried out in former years to determine the detectability of icebergs using side-looking airborne radar (SLAR); to date, the results have not been conclusive. A further cooperative study has been proposed to take place during the Spring of 1983, provided an aircraft can be released.

The AES is also undertaking the preparation of an ice atlas which will include iceberg data to summarize available information from many sources on ice as well as on the frequency of occurrence and sizes of icebergs in northern and eastern waters from Davis Strait to Newfoundland. This will be completed in about a year.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, on March 2 Senator Doody asked why the government has seen fit to dismantle the tracking station at Shoe Cove. I took the question as notice. Again, this is a fairly long answer, and I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

A decision was taken to close the Shoe Cove satellite receiving station after the U.S. National Oceanographic Administration (NOAA) increased the annual fees from $US 50,000 to $US 600,000 for reception of data from their LANDSAT satellite bringing operating costs to approximately $1.2 million per annum.

Faced with this increase, EMR could not justify keeping two receiving stations—Shoe Cove and Prince Albert, Saskatchewan—operating and the government decided to move towards one centrally located receiving station at Churchill, Manitoba which provides optimum coverage for Canada as a whole.

The dismantling of the Shoe Cove station was postponed until January 1983 in order to give Newfoundland and other east coast users some time to raise funds necessary to continue operation of the station. However, no group or agency has come forward with any significant financing proposal.

Concerns have been expressed regarding the coverage obtainable for the east coast areas for various satellites. All data is available from alternative sources. The U.S. National Oceanographic Administration satellite data will be available from the Department of the Environment stations in Toronto and Greenland for all areas of concern, including the Scotian Shelf, the Grand Banks, the Labrador Sea and the Davis Strait.

ENERGY

COST OF OIL IMPORTED FROM MEXICO

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on March 15 Senator Manning asked if the announced reduction in the price of Mexican oil would be applicable to volumes under the existing Mexico-Petro-Canada contract.

On March 14, in a telex to Petro-Canada, Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, announced that retroactive to February 1 its new crude oil export prices would be as follows: $US 29 a barrel for Isthmus, formerly $US 32.50; and $US 23 a barrel for Maya, formerly $US 25.

● (1425)

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—THIRD READING

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow moved the third reading of Bill C-139, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if the mover of this motion does not intend to say anything about this bill, I should like the opportunity of taking his place in that respect because I have something to say about it.

I have noted the fact that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has reported this bill without amendment. I observe, as members of that committee are well aware, that the committee carefully studied not only this bill but also the proposals that accompanied the original budget of November 12, 1981, the second budget of June 28, 1982 and, of course, the third budget of October 27, 1982. In the course of time, many of the items about which the committee had some reservations, if not active complaints, were, in fact, dealt with, because the government found it necessary and desirable, if for no other reason than to save its own skin, to make some pretty drastic changes in the original proposals that were placed before Parliament and the people of Canada. I think it is appropriate to record the fact that, whatever the motives, they did make a great many changes and most of those changes were for the better. I wanted to make that point before I dealt with other matters that are contained in the present bill.

The bill is reported by the committee without amendment, but that is not to say that all members of the committee were satisfied with that judgment. Some of us wanted to have the bill amended and, in fact, three separate amendments were proposed in committee to change it in quite a constructive fashion. But, as can be judged from the committee's report, none of those amendments were accepted by the majority in that committee. As the mover of two of the amendments, naturally I regret that.

My purpose in speaking to the bill now is to present to the Senate some reasons why the two amendments proposed in committee ought to have been accepted and why the Senate should accept these amendments now as it proceeds to third reading. At the close of my remarks, I shall submit some amendments for consideration by honourable senators.

What I am about to talk about has mainly to do with the small business sector of the Canadian economy. In the course of my remarks, I want to explain why I think it is necessary that it receive our attention. It must receive our attention because it has received the attention of the government in this bill. The effect of those proposals are deleterious in the extreme to the interests of small businesses in this country. I shall attempt to sketch for honourable senators the past policies of the administration with respect to small business. I shall try to express to this chamber why small business should receive the advantages that are accorded it before this bill comes into force, and I shall try to show the chamber why it is in the interests of the nation that special consideration be given.

● (1430)

All sorts of people ask for special tax concessions—that is nothing new. It has been going on for a long time, and it will go on for a long time into the future. It is necessary to bring a certain degree of judgment or discretion to bear on these requests because all of them, ipso facto, are self-interested, but not all of them are in the interests of the Canadian people.

I submit to you that while the special advantages of corporation tax legislation, which have been made available to the small business sector, may be in the interests of small businesses, they are also very much in the interests of the people as a whole, because, over the past decade or so, they have been deemed by this administration to be in the national public interest. It has been an accepted feature of our corporate tax system that we should accord special consideration to the small business sector of our economy.

This is not a policy which is unique in the world. They have been doing the same kind of thing elsewhere, as those of you who have studied tax legislation in the United Kingdom and in the United States will be able to vouch.

The special corporate tax considerations in Canada have taken, among other things, the form of a corporate tax rate for small businesses which is significantly lower than the general corporate tax rate which is paid by other businesses outside the small category, which I, for the sake of convenience, will call "big businesses."

Small business has been defined for us in a publication of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism dated 1981 in which he describes certain categories which, in the opinion of his department, should be considered to be in the small business sector. He describes those businesses whose gross sales are under a quarter of a million dollars as being small. I think there would be no dispute about that. He also includes a second category, that is, those businesses whose total gross receipts are between a quarter of a million and two million dollars. While $2 million sounds like a considerable sum, as indeed it is, when one considers the course of inflation over the past few years, I think that ceiling comes within the proper perspective.

Other businesses are described by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism as not coming within the small business category; and I call them "big businesses."

What has been the effect of the present tax law before the introduction of Bill C-139, and before the measures to which I am objecting? What is the tax effect of the advantages that are being given to small business today? The same document to which I referred earlier gives the figures, and it shows, for the two categories of small business which I have described, that the tax payable as a percentage of the pre-tax profit is, in round figures, 23 per cent. That is the tax these small businesses pay on their pre-tax profits.

With respect to big businesses, the same calculation, on the same basis of consideration, shows that they pay a tax which ranges between 32 per cent for businesses between $2 million and $20 million and 38 per cent for businesses over $20 million.

Therefore, I think it can be said, in round figures, in order to simplify our approach to this problem, that small businesses pay less corporate tax than big businesses. They pay roughly two-thirds of the tax paid by big businesses.

That is very nice for small business, but I think it is important to this discussion that some reason be given as to why they have been singled out for this special consideration. The reasons why small business should be given special consideration are spread on the record of Parliament in the speeches made by successive Ministers of Finance. I go back as far as the Honourable Edgar Benson in 1971 or 1972 when some of these measures were introduced. I could refer you to speeches by other Ministers of Finance since that time but, in order to abbreviate the length of what I have to say today, I will give you the substance of what their policy statements were.

They stated to the Parliament of Canada that the basic reason we should give small businesses this special tax concession is to enable them to generate and to retain the cash flow they need in their activities to finance the equity to be invested in the corporations. The aim of the exercise was to allow small businesses to retain a larger portion of their cash flow by means of a lower tax; to encourage them to secure, from their own efforts, the equity contribution needed; and to encourage other people outside to make an equity investment in them so that they have sufficient equity capital to make them viable.

As I have stated, the government accomplished this goal by means of one measure, that is, by keeping the lower rate of corporation tax to enable the small business sector to retain more money. As a corollary of that policy, the small business corporation would be enabled to retain its small business status by replenishing what is called the cumulative dividend account.

Those are the two measures: first, a lower tax rate, and secondly, the possibility of retaining the lower tax rate even though dividends are paid out, so that the right of the small business to pay a lower tax is not jeopardized by that activity. As a result, after taxes a small business was able to keep 77 per cent of what it made on a pre-tax basis, and a big business was able to keep 65 per cent of what it made on a pre-tax basis. Therefore, a small business had the advantage of retaining for its use in the accumulation of its equity fund 77 per cent of what it made, which is 12 per cent better than the right that was accorded to large business in retaining part of its earnings after taxes had been paid.

These two systems of tax rebate and a cumulative dividend account were explained to Parliament by successive Ministers of Finance, starting with Mr. Benson. Up until very recently, they have been part of the settled policy of the Government of Canada with respect to small business.

The objective, as I have stated, is to attract equity investment to small business to provide them with the funds which they need to continue their operation and to grow. The question then arises: Why does this have to be done? What is so difficult about the equity situation of small business that makes it necessary, by means of the tax system, to try to give them this 12½ per cent advantage over big business? Well, it is because of the very well known problems—problems that have been substantiated time out of mind by different studies in respect of the matter—related to the difficulties in raising equity capital outside their own operations that are encountered by small businesses of the size we are talking about here—that is, those from a quarter of a million dollars in gross to $2 million in gross.

The equity capital market for the big companies is the stock market. It is a source of equity for the big companies that is almost completely closed to small business. Small business can neither afford to make use of the stock market equity funds nor, indeed, can it attract equity investments from the stock market at anything like reasonable rates that could be supported by small business. The equity capital market open to big business is closed, to all intents and purposes, to small business. That is one reason why small business has trouble raising equity capital.

One might ask: What about the capital venture fund, which one might think had the specific task of providing equity for small business? I must agree that that is not to be dismissed out of hand. Usually, however, with a venture fund approach to matters, they want a very large share of the equity, sometimes control, in order to put up the money. Generally speaking, the terms are not always attractive to the small business sector.

What about the banks? Well, they are not interested in providing equity money. Their business is to lend money at interest. Their business is to lend money on the basis of bonds or of debentures or of special security of one kind or another, on which they require an interest payment to be made.

It is perfectly clear that, with small business, the question of having a pre-tax obligation like interest is a very different proposition from that of having an after-tax responsibility with respect to equity capital and to dividends. The banks prefer to have no risk, if they can, when lending money to small businesses, and small businesses are a risky portion of the economic sector.

● (1440)

There have been other measures, and I do not overlook them. We passed one the other day to supply capital to small business; but remember that it was contained in the small business measure, it was loan money, and that has to be paid back with interest, so that does not deal directly with the equity factor as some of us might desire.

Well, suppose everything I have said is true. Supposing we say, "Yes, we have had a long-settled policy of doing something for small business, and, yes, the reason for the policy is to help small business obtain and retain the equity they need to keep their outfit going and make growth possible." But why is it in the interests of the nation that small business should receive this consideration? Certainly it is in the interests of small business, and I do not overlook that fact; but why is it in the interests of the nation, and why should we ask the Government of Canada to take the small business sector into account in their tax legislation? Well, it is abundantly clear and terribly simple why we have this attitude of mind towards small business. Small business is where you find the jobs. Small business is the backbone of the Canadian economy. Small business is mostly 100 per cent Canadian-controlled. Small business generates more innovations and new applications of technology than any other sector. Small business generates new tax revenues for the government faster than any other sector of the economy does. Those are pretty substantial reasons why the small business sector should be encouraged and nourished.

Small business is responsible for most of the new jobs. I wonder if that comes as a surprise to the members of this chamber. I think it might come as a surprise to some people to know that it is small business that has been providing the new jobs in this country. Over the past while the record is that about 59 per cent of most new jobs were provided by small businesses with very few workers. In fact, the level on which this figure was calculated was small businesses with 20 or less workers. As for big business, we know what they are doing now: they are sloughing off jobs as if it were fashionable or desirable. Look at any one of the big businesses and you will see that they are certainly not growing as far as job-creation is concerned. But we have found in this country, as they have in the U.K. and in the United States, that the small business sector of the economy is the one that has been providing the new jobs and wider opportunities for so many people.

Take my own province of Manitoba. There we have nearly 30,000 small businesses—29,560 by my count—while there are only 886 big businesses in that province. We know, therefore, that in the province of Manitoba, if you were seeking to generate wealth and activity, there are two great sectors that you would look to. One of these is farming and the other is small business. Any legislation of ours which hinders the economic activity of small business in my province is something which is highly significant and something we would very much prefer to avoid if we possibly could.

Small business is an engine for growth. Indeed, it is the great engine for growth today. It is also the place where most innovations take place. I would suggest to members of this chamber that they take a look at the evidence that was given before one of own committees with respect to innovation on the part of small business—and I refer to the evidence of the Economic Council of Canada. Dr. Slater appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the seventeenth day of this month and discussed this question, among other things. Let me read to you one of the statements he made. You will find this on page 6:19 of the proceedings of the committee of that date. He said:

> When we come strictly to R&D, we have to recognize a couple of things. In this diffusion process and in the process of technological advance, small and medium-sized firms are tremendously important.

So, if you had any doubt about my statement that small business is a source of significant and worthwhile technical progress, I think that piece of evidence would lead you to think that there is something in that point. It is important to note that not only does small business generate the jobs but it is at the leading edge of technical development and technical adaptation in this country. Thus it is a matter of some interest to us.

During the recession small business has been hit by hard times like everybody else, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen presented some figures of the 1982 failures. There were 80,000 failures in 1982 in the small business category. That is a new high. A lot of jobs went up the flue with those failures, mostly in the province of Ontario. The same report also advised us that the owners and managers of small business took a pretty substantial whack at their own salaries and dividends in order to live through this period. Nearly 70 per cent—69.6 per cent—of the owners and managers in the small business sector in Canada took reductions in compensation in the form of lower salaries and lower dividends. We can see, therefore, that they are having their difficulties with the recession, but that they have responded to it in a very significant way. What other sector of the economy has taken such a reduction in dividends and emoluments because of this depression? I except those who are completely unemployed, and I have to submit that they have really taken an awful whack. But what sector of the economy has taken reductions such as those taken by the owners and managers of small businesses in their salaries and dividends?

Senator Bosa: Those who went broke.

Senator Roblin: They are even worse off. I thank my honourable friend for his remark. Those who went broke are in the same category as the unemployed, and that is a pretty poor condition for anyone to be in. Those who survived, however, reduced their take out of their companies in the way either of dividends or of salaries, by a very significant margin, and I do not think you can find other sectors of the economy making a sacrifice as large as this. I am sure there are some instances in which they can be matched, but on the whole I would say no.

All right, then. What do we do? What is the tax policy enshrined in this bill at this critical stage in the history of the economy of our country, and in this difficult situation with respect to small business? What we are doing in this bill is to bring to bear a savage increase in taxation on the small business sector. It is indeed a formidable increase. I am not unaware of the fact that also in this bill there is an increase in some of the levels of the small business tax structure, which are advantageous to some small businesses. In order to make up for the influence of inflation on the value of money, there has been a raising of those ceilings. That is a good thing and I am glad it has taken place.

Along with this, however, the government has done two things. First of all, they have cut off the possibility of using the cumulative deduction account to retain the status of a small business for the small business tax rate. They have therefore put in place a ceiling which was not there before in connection with this matter, even though they say that it doesn't mean anything much in the way of a tax increase. If that is the case—and I take their word for it, though I have my reservations—one wonders why it has been done.

Much more important than this, however, is the fact that the government has decided that when a small business pays a dividend out of money that remains to it after the small business tax is applied, there is going to be a surtax on small business dividends of 12.5 per cent. Just consider that for a moment—12.5 per cent. I have already told you that small business is paying 23 per cent on their after-tax income, and that big business is paying between 31 and 39 per cent, depending on what category you look at, on pre-tax income. Yet we are imposing a tax of 12.5 per cent on small business dividends when they are paid out. That has the effect of practically wiping out any advantage that small business has had from the former tax situation. They are on the same footing as big business. Instead of having 77 per cent of their after-tax income stay in their hands, while big business now gets 65 per cent, they are going to have 77 per cent less 12.5 per cent, which is about 9 per cent. So the net result of that is that in an after-tax position on the dividend basis enshrined in this bill, the small business community is no better off than the big business community.

● (1450)

An Hon. Senator: Only if they take them out.

Senator Roblin: Certainly only if they take them out—that is a perfectly valid remark—but in order to pay the salaries and living expenses of many small businessmen, they do it through the dividend route, and in many cases they take their dividends out, pay the tax, and put it back in the form of shareholders' loans. It is still a substantial source of equity in these businesses after it has been paid out as dividends. That is a point I think my honourable friend should recognize.

Here we have a bad policy. It is a bad policy because it limits the amount of equity capital which can be retained after dividends are paid in the small business; and it also cuts off the possibility of having the small business tax applied at all, because of the elimination of the cumulative dividend account to which I have referred.

So this bill certainly undermines the capacity of small business to raise money via the equity route. Let me emphasize that point again, because in the report of the Economic Council of Canada called "Intervention and Efficiency 1982", it dealt with the question "A Study of Government Credit and Credit Guarantees to the Private Sector". The very first recommendation that the Economic Council of Canada makes is:

> We recommend that the federal and provincial governments modify their policies to facilitate the strengthening of the equity base of Canadian firms, particularly small and medium-sized businesses.

Well, we all agree with that, and that was the policy; but it is not the policy now, if we add a surtax of 12½ per cent to the dividends paid out by those small companies. It seems to me that every disinterested piece of advice that can be found with respect to this problem of small business and equities indicates that the problem is still there.

In committee this morning I asked the question, "What has changed since 1981? What difference have we in our system, if it was good to help small business in their equity situation before this budget came down and it is bad to do it afterwards?" I do not think anything has changed, unless it is the desire of the government to get more money—and that certainly has to be a factor that is taken into account. It seems to me that we did not receive in committee a rationale that convinced me that this was the right thing to do.

Mention was made of tax equity. Well, what is that, for Heaven's sake? The question of supplying the source of equity funds to small business in this way has been the policy of the government for years, but it is not the government's policy today, and in my opinion we have not received any good reason why the change should be made.

So this bill undermines all that we have been basing our tax policy on with respect to small business in the recent past. I put it to honourable senators that the best investment of public funds that can be made, if we are going to give a tax rebate to someone, is to help the small businessman in this respect. The yield per dollar of taxpayers' money spent is going to produce a bigger return, if it helps small business to grow, than anything else we can think of—in terms of employment, of innovation, and ultimately of tax revenues to the government itself.

Encouraging small business up until now has been a high priority, and now it appears to have been given no priority at all because we are now being asked to do exactly the opposite of what we have been doing. This is the irony of the thing. We promote the creation of jobs—if we can use the word "create" with respect to jobs. I object to it, but it is the fashionable word. The Minister of "Unemployment" has all these proposals to create jobs. He has one in my own city, where he and I both live. One of these days I hope to analyze that policy in this chamber. But how is the government creating jobs? By borrowing money in order to pay for those job creation programs. Undoubtedly, that money comes out of borrowed funds—there is no place else for it to come from—and we are going to have to pay the interest on that borrowed money until the end of time, because no one will stand up in this chamber and tell me or anyone else that the government intends to pay that money back, because it does not. It will roll it over into infinity, just as we have always been doing.

Here is an opportunity to invest that kind of money and more in small businesses which will be productive in the community and will create tax revenues. But we say, "Oh no, we gave that up; we are going to have job creation instead." To my mind, it is a policy that is pretty hard to defend.

So I come to this chamber with the suggestion that even at this late stage we should express our opinion on these small business taxation measures by making some amendments to the bill. In committee they had the right point of view, because in discussing one of these measures the committee offered the following opinion—and I quote from page 5478 of Debates of the Senate, in which issue the report of the committee has been printed.

> It is the Committee's view that small and medium-sized businesses should be given every encouragement to grow.

So there is a meeting of minds on that. But then, having made that proper statement, you can imagine my disappointment when the committee was asked to put some teeth into that recommendation by amending the bill, and it refused to do so. I do not know whether or not the house will accept my amendments. If experience teaches, and I suppose it should, the odds are not terribly favourable. However, I will make the attempt. I will propose two amendments. One deals with the cumulative deduction account, and the other deals with the 12½ per cent small business dividend surtax. The first, dealing with the cumulative deduction account, reads as follows:

> That this Bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended by striking out subclause 86(6) and by renumbering the ensuing subclauses accordingly.

That is the one that has to do with the accumulative dividend account. That is the one that will restore the cumulative dividend privilege to small business the way it was before, for the last ten or fifteen years before this act came before us.

The second amendment is as follows:

> That this Bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended by striking out clause 109 and renumbering the ensuing clauses accordingly.

That is the amendment that deals with the 12½ per cent small business dividend surcharge.

I submit both motions in amendment to the Senate. My colleague, Senator Flynn, has kindly agreed to second them. I know that the rules of the Senate suggest that they should be moved one at a time. However, in view of the stage of our proceedings and the approaching deadline of tomorrow night, I had the feeling that the Senate might agree to allow me to present both of them at the same time and have a single vote on both, to avoid the necessity of voting on each one separately, because they are so closely linked together as to perhaps be suitable for that kind of treatment. However, I await the decision of the Senate on that point.

I offer an opportunity for this chamber to put the government straight. I offer this chamber an opportunity to come to the rescue of the small business community in this country. I ask the chamber to offer a helping hand to that sector of our economy which has proved the most productive, the most diligent in producing jobs, and also the most diligent in adopting technical changes, as I believe the evidence that I have summoned to support this point indicates as being correct. This is an opportunity to strike a blow for common sense, and I recommend that the members of this house support it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on the procedural question raised by Senator Roblin, it seems to me that we should agree to his suggestion. I understand that the basic reason for insisting on separate motions in amendment is to give honourable senators an opportunity to support one and not the other. But, as Senator Roblin has said, in this case it is likely, since they are so closely linked, that one would support or not support the two rather than divide one's vote. However, if any honourable senator wishes to divide the vote, we could have it put separately; otherwise I recommend that we support Senator Roblin's suggestion.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, may I put a question to Senator Roblin? I do not think anyone would argue with his view concerning the value of small businesses and the jobs they provide. However, when Senator Roblin says that he has difficulty coming to grips with why there is an imposition of the 12.5 per cent surcharge on a dividend declared by small business, I believe he answered his own question when he said that the reason why small businesses were treated in a different way before this change was in order that they could provide the necessary equity to expand their operations. The imposition of the 12.5 per cent tax on dividends declared was a device to prevent owners of small businesses taking bigger salaries at a lower rate of income tax than other taxpayers. The imposition of the 12.5 per cent tax applies only when the dividends are taken out. It does not nullify the original principle, that the special treatment given to small business is to enable small business to accumulate equity capital.

● (1500)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has not been listening as closely as I would have wished. I pointed out to the members of this house in my probably hasty and pellmell presentation of my case this afternoon, because of the time stricture, that with respect to the cumulative dividend account the government is forcing small businesses out of that category. When the cumulative dividend account remained on the statute books small businesses had the opportunity to retain the earnings in the company indefinitely; and did not sacrifice their right to the small dividend provided in conjunction with that they paid the dividend out. The two things worked together in order to make sure that the small business owner would, in effect, pay taxes at the rate he would otherwise have paid if it had not been channelled to him through the small business dividend.

If my honourable friend wants a more detailed explanation of this matter, I advise him to read the speech of the Honourable Edgar Benson delivered, I believe, in 1972 in his budget address. He explained then all the reasons for the accumulated dividend fund and the reasons for the dividend payout policy. The ultimate thrust of it comes down to an arrangement whereby small businesses can retain more of their own earnings for their equity capital requirements. That is the explanation offered by the government itself. I accepted it then; I accept it now, and I think my honourable friend should do the same.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.:

> That this Bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended by striking out clause 86(6) and by renumbering the ensuing subclauses accordingly.

Honourable senators—

Senator Roblin: Your Honour, I ask that you read both amendments, as I believe it is the disposition of the chamber that they be taken as a whole.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we do that, it is my intention to move another amendment unrelated to the amendments moved by Senator Roblin. I suggest that, in order that the bells ring only once, we postpone the questions on these amendments so that the votes on the amendments moved by Senator Roblin and on the amendment which I intend to move will be taken at the same time.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is a good suggestion. Let us agree now that we defer the vote on these two amendments so that they take place at the same time as the vote on the amendment to be moved by Senator Flynn or on any other amendments.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, it is quite clear that the circumstances under which we are called upon to study this bill—139 clauses, as I recall, half an inch thick and drafted in extremely complicated sentences—are not very favourable. Even though the subject matter of the bill was referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee for preliminary study, we are at the mercy, if you will, of the circumstances in the sense that the bill must be passed or turfed out without any further delay because of the Easter recess. And then, there is the fact that this measure stems from budgetary provisions which date back to 1981, three budget speeches ago.

A good many amendments were made to the bill in the House of Commons at the committee stage and at other times. Before the committee this morning, the minister indicated that he would have liked to introduce additional amendments, but he was unable to have them adopted because of the particular circumstances which I just mentioned, and especially the fact that when the House of Commons was in Committee of the Whole to study the bill, the debate was under a time allocation order. The debate being limited, the minister was unable to introduce all the amendments he advocated.

One amendment concerns a group of professionals of Quebec. The provisions of this bill exempt a group of professionals from having to file a return on work in progress. That group of professionals includes, among others, dentists, lawyers, physicians, veterinarians and so on. By accident, they forgot to include notaries, who are members of the Board of Notaries of Quebec and who act as legal advisers. Not only are they entitled to take sworn statements like notaries public in Ontario, they are also professionals in the same way as lawyers. Unfortunately, they have been left out. The minister was anxious to move an amendment to include that group of professionals with the others, but it was not possible. The minister is telling us: Do not change anything, we will introduce a retroactive amendment to our bill. His suggestion is commendable, but it denies the responsibility or the usefulness of the Senate. Why have a second House if, every time it has an opportunity or the duty to rectify the mistakes or the omissions of the House of Commons, we are told not to do anything because they will come back with another bill? I submit that it is a very bad principle. I asked the Minister this question and he was unable to give me a reply because he has not had that much experience in Parliament. Personally, I have had such experience. In my 20 years in this place or in 25 years if I add the time I spent in the House of Commons, I do not recall that the Government has ever been willing to let the Senate amend such a Bill in the particular circumstances in which we find ourselves, that is a short time before we adjourn for Easter, Christmas or the summer.

In other words, the Government denies the power of the Senate to make amendments and only allows it to make recommendations. In fact, a little later on, the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will report on Bill C-130 and we shall see that this would also apply to that Bill.

I find this attitude quite wrong and I believe that we should force the Senate to say whether or not a necessary amendment should be adopted by the Senate.

For this reason, honourable senators, because of the problem which members of the Chamber of Notaries of the Province of Quebec are facing I move, seconded by Senator Roblin:

> That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended as follows:
>
> (1) by striking out line 10 on page 55 and substituting the following

"accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical" and

(2) by striking out line 20 on page 55 and substituting the following

"an accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical"

I also have the text in English.

The Hon. the Speaker: The Honourable Senator Flynn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, moves:

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended as follows:

(1) by striking out line 10 on page 55 and substituting the following

"accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical" and

(2) by striking out line 20 on page 55 and substituting the following

"an accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical"

Do you wish to proceed in the order the motions were introduced, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the motion has been moved and if no one wishes to speak to oppose or comment on it, the questions can be put successively.

Senator Frith: For the purposes of debate, we could deal with the amendments as we dealt with the comments for the vote. For instance, Senator Barrow might want to speak about Senator Roblin's two amendments and perhaps about Senator Flynn's amendment or about one of the three.

Senator Flynn: Or perhaps he has nothing to say.

Senator Frith: Exactly.

The Hon. the Speaker: We could perhaps begin with Senator Roblin's.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, dealing with the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to point out that this morning the Honourable Paul Cosgrove, Minister of State (Finance), stated that while this had been an omission from the bill when it was first proposed, as Senator Flynn has said, there were four separate attempts by the minister to have this amendment brought forward but, due to circumstances, it was not possible to do so. However, the Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, in a letter of March 16 to the Association of Notaries of Quebec, gave an undertaking that, in bringing in his next budget, he would put forward an amendment to cover this and he would make it retroactive. It seems to me that it should be the prerogative of the Minister of Finance to correct his own mistake, rather than have the Senate do it.

With respect to the proposals by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, it is true that there are two items, the 12½ per cent dividend tax and the capping of the total business limit, but I should point out to the Senate that, rather than the government being the ogres that they are presented to be, if we go back to 1972 we find that the annual business limit on which the low rate of tax was calculated was $50,000. In 1974, it was increased to $100,000; in 1977, it was increased to $150,000 and in 1982, under this proposal, it is increased to $200,000.

At the same time, the total business limit in 1972 was $400,000; in 1974, it was $500,000; in 1977, it was $750,000 and in 1982, under this proposal, it is $1 million, so, in spite of what Senator Roblin might say, it is not all bad. Certainly, everyone would like to see decreases in taxes, but somebody has to pay those taxes and it was felt, in this particular case where some small businesses were rejuvenating their total business limit, that there were abuses being perpetrated and, therefore, the government felt that they had to put a cap on the total amount.

At the same time, I believe that the Minister of State (Finance) this morning said that the whole matter of small businesses was going to be discussed by the Minister of Finance with representatives of the small business sector, although he did not give a commitment that any changes would be made.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I would have a comment on what Senator Barrow has just said with regard to the Minister's commitment. It is a personal commitment and we have seen many cases where such commitments are not fulfilled following the appointment of a new minister.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Barrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator McIlraith, P.C., that this bill be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out subclause 86(6) and by renumbering the ensuing subclauses accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Roblin's motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

• (1520)

Motion in amendment of Senator Roblin resolved in the negative on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Balfour	Macquarrie
Beaubien	Marshall
Bélisle	Nurgitz
Bielish	Phillips
Doody	Roblin
Flynn	Tremblay—13.
Macdonald

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Lafond
Anderson	Langlois
Barrow	Lapointe
Bonnell	Le Moyne
Bosa	Lewis
Cameron	McGrand
Cook	Neiman
Cottreau	Olson
Davey	Riel
Denis	Rousseau
Frith	Sparrow
Graham	Stollery
Guay	Thériault
Hastings	van Roggen—29.
Hicks

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

The Hon. the Speaker: In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended by striking out clause 109 and by renumbering the ensuing clauses accordingly.

Motion in amendment of Senator Roblin resolved in the negative on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Balfour	Macquarrie
Beaubien	Marshall
Bélisle	Nurgitz
Bielish	Phillips
Doody	Roblin
Flynn	Tremblay—13.
Macdonald

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Lafond
Anderson	Langlois
Barrow	Lapointe
Bonnell	Le Moyne
Bosa	Lewis
Cameron	McGrand
Cook	Neiman
Cottreau	Olson
Davey	Riel
Denis	Rousseau
Frith	Sparrow
Graham	Stollery
Guay	Thériault
Hastings	van Roggen—29.
Hicks

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

The Hon. the Speaker: In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended as follows:

(1) by striking out line 10 on page 55 and substituting the following:

"accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical"; and

(2) by striking out line 20 on page 55 and substituting the following:

"an accountant, dentist, lawyer, notary, medical".

• (1530)

Motion in amendment of Senator Flynn resolved in the negative on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Balfour	Macquarrie
Beaubien	Marshall
Bélisle	Nurgitz
Bielish	Phillips
Doody	Roblin
Flynn	Tremblay—13.
Macdonald

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Bonnell
Anderson	Bosa
Barrow	Cameron

Cook
Cottreau
Davey
Denis
Frith
Graham
Guay
Hastings
Hicks
Lafond
Langlois
Lapointe
Le Moyne
Lewis
McGrand
Neiman
Olson
Riel
Rousseau
Sparrow
Stollery
Thériault
van Roggen—29.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I would suggest that the bill be read the third time on the same division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams
Anderson
Barrow
Bonnell
Bosa Cameron
Cook
Cottreau
Davey
Denis
Frith
Graham
Guay
Hastings
Hicks
Lafond
Langlois
Lapointe
Le Moyne
Lewis
McGrand
Neiman
Olson
Riel
Rousseau
Sparrow
Stollery
Thériault
van Roggen—29.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Balfour
Beaubien
Bélisle
Bielish
Doody
Flynn
Macdonald
Macquarrie
Marshall
Nurgitz
Phillips
Roblin
Tremblay—13.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

● (1540)

[Translation]

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 4)—THIRD READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the third reading of Bill C-144, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4).

He said: Honourable senators, when we concluded our debate on second reading of Bill C-144 last night, I promised I would reply today, before third reading of the Bill, to all questions put to me. I will deal first with a question from Senator Tremblay who asked for an explanation as to an apparent discrepancy between the English and French texts of Clause 1 of the aforementioned Bill. Both texts are accurate, and the apparent discrepancy stems from their linguistic structures, and in each of subparagraphs (i) to (iii) the English text repeats the phrase:

[English]

> —that part of the aggregate principal amount of the guaranteed business improvement loans made by it during that period—

[Translation]

The French text expresses the same idea only once at the beginning of the paragraph. In good legislation writing, it is recommended that the smallest part of the clause be amended in cases such as this. The purpose of Clause 1 of the Bill is to substitute in paragraph 5(b) a reference to section 6(i) for a reference to section 6(h). A parallel reading of both texts as amended shows that the provision is clear and well-drafted in each of the official languages.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: I thank Senator Bosa for taking the time to obtain from the Department of Justice experts the answer to the question I asked yesterday. I must state that if we read the answer as prepared by those experts, we have still more difficulty understanding it than if one happens, as I did earlier by a stroke of luck, to sit next to one of them when he wrote the answer we just heard. He showed me the actual context of the English and French wordings of the Bill now proposed to be amended. Indeed, without going any further, with regard to the matter of linguistic compliance as between the two texts I must say that as to substance both texts are accurate. As I said, the accuracy of both texts has to be appreciated within the whole context. In any case, I thank Senator Bosa once more for these explanations and I am happy that in the circumstances it could be completed.

Senator Flynn: It is a good effort.

Senator Bosa: We learned our lesson well.

[English]

Honourable senators, yesterday evening Senator Marshall posed a question to me. It appears at page 5508 of yesterday's Hansard and reads as follows:

> I should also like to know what is the strength in numbers of the people who administer the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Federal Business Development Bank Act. Has any thought been given to combining these in this period of restraint and in our wish to economize?

In the first place, the Small Business Development Bank is a crown corporation and does not come under the other three loans acts.

Secondly, I doubt whether Senator Marshall's colleagues would support the combining of these three acts because each has a specific purpose and addresses the particular needs of the people to whom it is directed. For instance, farmers' needs are different from those of owners of small businesses and those of fishermen. I am sure that farmers would not want to be caught in the same net as the fishermen on the east or west coast.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): "Caught in the same net"!

Senator Bosa: I am sure fishermen would not want to have their needs expressed in terms of land and equipment. Furthermore, if we were to combine the three acts, it would lead to some confusion. The bill would have to be called an "omnibus" bill, and we know what happened recently to an omnibus bill in the other place—it caused the bells to ring for an unprecedented length of time. I do not think it a good idea to combine the three acts.

As far as the economizing aspect of this matter is concerned, the entire administration of the three acts requires only 14 positions in the various departments which administer this program. One thing that these acts have in common is that the reporting forms are designed for use for all three acts.

I hope this answers the question raised by Senator Marshall.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am not sure it is proper procedure to ask a supplementary question, but I would point out that I cannot accept that answer. When one goes to a bank manager and asks for a loan, he does not inquire what you do for a living and then send you to someone else. The criteria are the same here: you are asking for so much money to carry out a particular program in which you are interested.

● (1550)

However, there is not much that we can accomplish here. I simply say that I do not accept the answer and I shall bring up the matter at another time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-141, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: By way of an introduction, honourable senators, I should like to quote part of Paragraph 2(a) of the Canadian Human Rights Act which reads:

> (a) every individual should have an equal opportunity with other individuals to make for himself or herself the life that he or she is able and wishes to have, consistent with his or her duties and obligations as a member of society—

This simple phrase embodies one of the basic tenets of the Canadian society. It is to give effect to this principle that Parliament assented to the Canadian Human Rights Act on July 14, 1977.

It prohibited under this legislation, in matters of employment or in the provision of goods, services, facilities or accommodation, any discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, family status or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted. Discrimination based on a physical handicap in matters related to employment is also prohibited. The sections of the Canadian Human Rights Act dealing with discriminatory practices and the necessary corrective action came into force on March 1, 1978. For over five years now, this legislation has provided Canadians with excellent protection. In spite of the wide protection thus provided, the experience acquired over that period by the Canadian Human Rights Commission has demonstrated a need for some improvement. That is the reason why the government has introduced Bill C-141. The principal, although not the sole, beneficiaries of these amendments will be the disabled and women. In 1979, 11.6 per cent of the population, that is some 2.7 million individuals were suffering from some kind of mental or physical disability. Of those, about 700,000 were seriously or totally disabled. These individuals are often the victims of discrimination.

This deplorable situation was remedied at the federal level when Parliament enacted the Canadian Human Rights Act. However, the protection given under this Act is restricted since it only prohibits discrimination on the ground of physical handicap, and only in matters related to employment. In addition, it also states that where the disadvantage to the handicapped is caused by the premises or the facilities of an employer being inaccessible to him or her, no remedial measures can be ordered. The sufficiency of this protection has properly been questioned.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission in its annual report noted the need to increase the protection afforded to the disabled while at the same time protecting employers and persons providing goods, services, facilities or accommodation against undue hardships.

Being conscious of the needs of the handicapped, the Government in the Speech from the Throne of April 1980, promised the disabled increased protection provided under the Canadian Human Rights Act. In order to ascertain their needs in this and other respects, it set up the special committee on the disabled and the handicapped.

In its October 30, 1980, and February 16, 1981, reports, that committee recommended that discrimination on the basis of mental and physical disability be prohibited under the Canadian Human Rights Act to the same extent as proposed by the Canadian Human Rights Commission. This resulted from recommendations made by both agencies, i.e. the Committee and the Commission.

The government agrees with that recommendation. Both the physically and mentally disabled must be protected against discrimination. Indeed society has certain obligations towards its members. Among other things, it should provide the opportunity to enjoy without discrimination the economic, social and cultural benefits it provides. This obligation extends to people with physical and mental handicaps, meaning that those people should not only be allowed to obtain and keep a job but that they should also take part in worthwhile, productive and recreational activities. It also means that the handicapped should be protected against discrimination.

● (1600)

In support of that statement, I take the liberty of quoting three excerpts from submissions made to the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. Referring to the needs of the handicapped, the Action League for Physically Handicapped of Kitchener-Waterloo, states:

> We do not want charity, favours or special privileges; we are only asking for the same basic freedoms and rights enjoyed by others. We want to be treated as ordinary human beings and be able to work in society to the extent of our capabilities without being restricted by needless constraints. We have the same needs and the same aspirations as anybody else: be independent, live in dignity and self-respect, be active and responsible members of society, and enjoy the same basic freedoms, responsibilities and rights as all other Canadian citizens.

Vancouver's People First group holds similar views:

> We want to live like the others and play a role in society. Why do we always have to prove that we do have a role to play in society, whereas normal people do not even feel the need to ask that question? We are on earth for one reason or another; should we not be treated as equal beings? Are we, now? I do not think so. We are laughed at, people poke fun at us or, worse still, they pity us without really being interested in our lot, and that is not what we want. We want to do our share in society.

Here is what the Canadian Association of the Mentally Retarded has to say:

> In our technological society, it is to be feared that more importance will be given to material progress than to human dignity and potential.

[Senator Frith.]

Bill C-141 would give effect to the recommendations of the special committee and of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. As amended by the bill, the Canadian Human Rights Act would provide for full protection against discrimination in relation to the provision of goods, services, facilities or accommodation. Disability would be defined as a previous or existing mental or physical disability, including disfigurement and previous or existing dependence on alcohol or drugs.

The protection offered to the handicapped under the amendments which the government wants to make to the Canadian Human Rights Act is not absolute. It is subject to certain restrictions whose primary purpose is to guarantee that the act will be applied in all fairness.

As for the employment, the bona fide professional reasons section which is now in the Canadian Human Rights Act will continue to apply with respect to discrimination based on deficiencies in the same manner as it applies to any other form of illegal discrimination.

When it comes to the provision of goods and services, the bill provides protection similar to that which is guaranteed under the bona fide occupational requirements clause: distinctions between individuals will be allowed if it can be shown that a differentiation based on illicit distinction, including deficiencies, is justified.

Human rights tribunals, once a finding of discrimination based on deficiency has been made, would be able to make remedial orders with respect to the disabled as they can now in cases of discrimination based on other illicit distinctions. They will be empowered to award punitive damages, not exceeding $5,000, if the discrimination is deliberate, reckless or causes undue distress to the victim. However, in cases where remedying discrimination would involve changes to premises or facilities of the discriminating party operations, tribunals will only be able to make such orders for such changes if this will not impose undue financial or commercial hardship on the owner of the premises. If the mandatory order for changing premises would involve undue hardship, then the tribunal can make only recommendations.

The provisions concerning protection against discrimination based on disability will come into force once they are proclaimed. However, in order to give employers and purveyors of goods and services the opportunity to take the necessary steps to comply with the provisions of Bill C-141, the powers granted to human rights tribunals to issue enforceable orders, and consequently those of the Commission to reach settlements, will be restricted. Their ability to issue orders concerning the enforcement of the legislation now protecting the physically disabled will not be altered. On the other hand, while they may investigate complaints made in areas to which the jurisdiction of the Commission has been extended, until April 17, 1985, when Clause 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights will come into force, their recommendations will not be compulsory. On that date, the restriction on the order-making power will be removed. Subject to the provision on undue hardship, any individual found guilty of discrimination based on disability will be dealt with as any other individual found guilty of discrimination.

Considering the extent of their obligations under Bill C-141, we believe that exclusive reliance on the complaint system should be avoided. Means should be found to inform owners of premises, facilities and accommodations of the extent of their obligations under the Human Rights Act and to encourage them to take the necessary steps to that effect. Accordingly, provision is made in the bill for adaptation plans and accessibility standards. Employers and purveyors of goods, services, facilities or accommodation will be able to submit voluntarily to the Canadian Human Rights Commission for approval plans governing the adaptation of their premises, facilities, equipment or operations. Such plans will be approved by the Commission only if they meet the needs of the disabled. If they are approved and complied with no complaint can be made in respect to matters dealt with in these plans. However, if such plans are not complied with or if the situation changes, the Commission may revoke its approval. In addition, the Governor in Council, after consultation with interested parties, including the disabled and the Canadian Human Rights Commission, by regulation, could establish standards for the provision of access for the disabled to premises, facilities or accommodation. Compliance with these standards will afford protection against complaints in respect to the matters they cover. Again, this could provide more certainty for employers and purveyors of services as to what is required.

In addition to these amendments, the Government also proposes other substantial modifications to the Canadian Human Rights Act. In particular, the Bill proposes another amendment which forbids discrimination on the basis of pregnancy or because of childbirth. Women have often been the victims of discrimination on the basis of pregnancy. When Parliament prohibited discrimination on the grounds of sex in the Canadian Human Rights Act, it was thought this prohibition included pregnancy and childbirth. In Treasury Board vs. Tellier-Cohen, 1982, a human rights appeal tribunal held this was the case. Nevertheless, the possibility remains the courts might decide otherwise. In Bliss vs. Attorney General of Canada, 1978, the Supreme Court of Canada held that under the Canadian Bill of Rights discrimination on the basis of sex did not preclude discrimination on the ground of pregnancy or childbirth.

In order to remove any doubt, the government is asking Parliament to indicate clearly that the Canadian Human Rights Act does not allow discrimination on the basis of pregnancy and childbirth. This will ensure that women, like men, will be treated simply on the basis of their ability or inability to work. They will not be fired or refused employment merely because they are pregnant or have borne a child.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): There is not really that much difference!

Senator Frith: An employer may wish to provide special benefits to expectant mothers or to new parents. To avoid frivolous complaints, the bill expressly provides that it is not a discriminatory practice for him to grant a female employee special leave or benefits in connection with pregnancy or childbirth, or to grant any employees, whether mothers or fathers, leave or benefits to assist them in the care of their children.

Another amendment concerns harassment, which is a third issue. This type of conduct, be it based on ethnic origin, race, religion, sex or some other prohibited ground of discrimination, is no less an affront to human dignity than the traditional type of discrimination. It is as repressive, and as such, as socially unacceptable. In addition to its negative social connotations, harassment—particularly racial, religious and sexual harassment—has negative impacts on the employment aspirations of affected workers; and as a result, it affects their productivity.

Harassment, and particularly sexual harassment, is unfortunately widespread. The Canadian Human Rights Commission has already used the Canadian Human Rights Act to protect individuals against such conduct. Nevertheless, in this respect, the act has not proven as effective a remedy as it was hoped. Since harassment is not expressly forbidden, too few individuals are aware of the protection they may enjoy under the act. Further, there is always the risk that our courts will decide it does not prohibit harassment.

This Bill would also prohibit harassment on the prohibited ground of discrimination in matters related to employment and in the provision of goods, services, facilities or accommodation. In addition, because of the important role played by women in the labour market, we thought it useful to prohibit sexual harassment expressly.

Senator Flynn: For men also, I imagine?

Senator Frith: I imagine so; it says "sexual harassment".

Senator Flynn: Because there can also be harassment on the part of women.

Senator Frith: Well, that is another reason, for there are other reasons; I suppose men have the same rights. One of the reasons is the need to realize the important parts men and women play on the labour market. By expressly prohibiting harassment, Parliament wants to inform potential victims that a recourse does exist.

Moreover, it wants to encourage employers to take steps to end harassment, especially when the men or women who are the victims are different because of their race, religion, handicap, colour or national or ethnic origin.

Finally, the government is taking steps to ensure uniformity between the English and French versions of the clauses which deal with marital status and family status.

In the current legislation, the English version prohibits discrimination based on "marital status", while the French version prohibits that based on "family status".

In order to make both versions indentical, it has been decided to ask Parliament to prohibit discrimination based on both grounds. In addition to these changes, various other remedial modifications to the Human Rights Act are proposed. The most important is an express recognition of the principle of vicarious liability, which is one of the underlying bases of the Act. When the Act was enacted, this principle was not expressly incorporated. It was believed that the statute gave effect to it by implication. The decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Nelson vs. Byron Price and Associates in 1981 has cast doubts on this interpretation. In that case the court held that an employer could not be liable for the acts of his servants under the Human Rights Code of British Columbia, because that code, neither expressly nor impliedly recognized the principle of vicarious liability. Since the general scheme of the code and of the Canadian Human Rights Act are nearly identical, the Government considers it necessary to resolve any doubt arising from the Nelson decision. Failure to do so might result in a grievous weakening of the act's effectiveness. Other remedial amendments would ensure:

● (1610)

—that employee organizations do not discriminate against non-members to whom they must provide under the terms of a collective agreement certain services;

—that the act applies to employer's organizations; that complaints could be initiated against discriminatory policies or practices of employers, even if a victim has not come forth;

—that the Canadian Human Rights Commission could appoint a chairman of a three-member human rights tribunal; and that the Human Rights Act would not be applicable to territorial government employees so that these governments may develop their own anti-discrimination laws.

Further, certain changes reconciling the French version of the Human Rights Act with its English counterpart are also proposed.

Finally, a series of correlative changes will be made by this Bill to the Public Service Employment Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, in order to ensure that various modifications made to the Human Rights Act by the present bill are reflected in these acts. The most important of these amendments relates to the Public Service Employment Act. As amended here, that act would expressly provide that the Public Service Commission will not be able to adopt selection standards which make discrimination prohibited in the Human Rights Act unless there exists a bona fide occupational requirement for such a distinction.

I should also indicate to this House at this point that the Government is contemplating during the forthcoming session further legislation in respect of national security which will have a bearing on the operation of the Canadian Human Rights Act. Currently, national security could be relevant to the handling of complaints under the Human Rights Act where, for instance, a person has been refused employment or perhaps some advancement in the public service in respect of positions requiring security clearance and he or she feels that the decision was discriminatory, related to one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination such as race, national or ethnic origin, colour, etc. In such cases, the Government department or agency against which the complaint is filed might consider it inappropriate to bring before a human rights tribunal facts dealing with national security. This could weaken the Government's case. Even if the latter made a case with implications for national security, such a tribunal would be put in the position of judging the security risk in the course of determining whether the employment decision had been taken on the basis of the bona fide occupational requirement. At the same time, it is generally recognized that the procedures for security clearance refusals are less than satisfactory. It is therefore the intention of the Solicitor General to introduce national security legislation in the next session which will, among other things, establish new and fairer procedures for the making and independent reviewing of such decisions. This will in effect modify the powers of the Human Rights Commission and human rights tribunals in respect of complaints with the implications for national security. It is our view that by establishing these new procedures the interests both of the individual and of the public will be better protected than under existing arrangements. While Parliament will of course have the opportunity to study and debate that proposal when it is brought forward, I merely wish to indicate now that this Bill is not exhaustive of the Government's present plans in this field. In closing, honourable senators, I invite this House to support the proposed amendments to the Human Rights Act, in order that we may lose no time in making available to the disabled, to women, and to others who will benefit under it the great advance which it represents for social justice in Canada.

● (1620)

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I feel that the applause that followed Senator Frith's speech certainly expressed our immediate reaction to the cordial and persuasive manner in which the Deputy Leader of the Government urged us to support the Bill before the Senate today, and thus to support a very noble cause, that of the handicapped, women and all those who will benefit in some way from this legislation. In other words, he urged us to side with the angels.

Senator Flynn: With motherhood!

Senator Tremblay: We intend to support this Bill. Obviously, after such admirable explanations such as the fact that pregnancy or childbirth shall be deemed to be on the ground of sex, or something like that—I think that is what it says in one of the clauses—we cannot refuse to support this Bill. That being said, it is clear that at this stage, what we must discuss are the principles involved. These principles were carefully explained by the honourable senator. Briefly, there are three main aspects to be considered. Certain provisions of the present Canadian Human Rights act are being extended to other groups, including those suffering from other than physical handicaps. From now on, a handicapped person will no longer be only someone who is physically disabled but also as defined in Clause 1.

In any case, we have all understood what Senator Frith told us, namely, that all kinds of handicaps are now covered by the definition. One could also say that the number of groups concerned by the legislation has also been extended. Women are also included as a group. There has also been a broadening of the nature of the grounds on which discrimination takes place.

Until now, the physically handicapped were protected from any potential discrimination with respect to employment. This principle has now been considerably expanded to include what I would call access to services or the development of new services to minimize inconvenience to the handicapped. Discrimination as an act has been redefined.

Essentially, to discriminate is to make a distinction with the treatment of two individuals or groups of individuals. From now on, this legislation will include a new form of discriminatory practice, namely, harassment. But what is harassment? What makes it harassment? This bill does not say and Senator Frith's explanations were not very clear on that point. I suppose that the courts will define in due course what harassment is.

Which brings me to another point on which Senator Frith did not particularly elaborate, namely, the part the Commission will play in the areas of jurisprudence and interpretation. I noticed for instance a clause which amends Section 14 of the current legislation.

Senator Frith: Which clause do you mean?

Senator Tremblay: Clause 7 on page 4 of this bill, which repeals Section 14 of the current legislation and substitutes thereof a new Section 13.1 and a new Section 14. There are several paragraphs in this clause, including Paragraph (1)(e) which reads:

> (e) an individual is discriminated against on a prohibited ground of discrimination in a manner that is prescribed by guidelines issued by the Canadian Human Rights Commission pursuant to subsection 22(2) to be reasonable;

Under the general heading, this is not a discriminatory practice.

I have not had the time to check whether there is anything similar in the current legislation, but in any case, reading this in a certain way could virtually mean that an apparently discriminatory action would cease to be discriminatory if the Commission deemed such action reasonable. In view of the concrete and practical effects of all the statutes involved, this seems to me, and others will correct me if I am wrong, to give considerable powers to the Commission. While we agree on the principles we are now discussing, it would perhaps be useful on this point and many others if the manner in which the principles behind the Bill are reflected in the wording of its various clauses were to be examined in committee as briefly but as carefully as possible.

I must confess that, for my part, to put my mind at rest, I would like to have an opportunity to hear the Minister or someone else reply to certain questions about the relationship between the theoretical intentions and the way the principles are reflected in the wording of each clause because, when faced with this type of Bill which amends a whole series of sections in an existing statute, we have to look very closely to determine exactly how the amendments reflect the underlying principles. We have no objection to these principles and I personally believe that they are valid, but it seems to me that the committee could more closely examine the relationship between the purpose of the Bill and the way this purpose is reflected in the wording itself.

Senator Flynn: Could Senator Frith tell me what brought about the provisions in paragraph (f) of the new Section 14, to which Senator Tremblay was referring? The Bill states that it is not discriminatory for an employer to grant a female employee special leave or benefits in connection with pregnancy or childbirth or to grant employees special leave or benefits to assist them in the care of their children. Who could make a complaint? Someone who cannot give birth or who does not have any children?

Senator Frith: I see what you mean but the trouble starts when rights are the issue and we are sensitive to the issue—I suppose it could be the fact that the Act is encouraging the employer to grant leave or some special treatment because of pregnancy or childbirth. I might call that discriminatory, because I cannot have that special treatment.

Senator Tremblay: Yes, we should ask for equivalent treatment.

Senator Frith: Yes, I suppose the thought could cross one's mind: Can I be pregnant?

In any case it raises the question whether we can really justify such provisions. They can be justified as a means to eliminate discrimination. This is an example of the point raised by Senator Tremblay. We can start with principles and finally end up a long way from the principles that were initially the basis for the legislation. However, I believe that is exactly what we are trying to do, and we could put the same question to the Minister tomorrow in committee. I therefore move that this Bill be read the second time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1982-83 (NO. 3)
BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved the second reading of Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

He said: Honourable senators, section 37 of the Financial Administration Act stipulates that statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament. Bill C-143 seeks $5 billion of supplementary borrowing authority for 1982-83 and $14 billion interim authority for 1983-84 in order for the government to continue with its regular debt program and to raise new funds to meets its financial requirements.

Honourable senators, I ask you to consider the bill by dealing with three subjects: First, the borrowing authority granted to date; second, the authority now asked for and why—in other words, the provisions of the bill; and, third, the use of the authority and the outstanding debt.

First of all, the authority to date. So far during this fiscal year the government has obtained parliamentary approval for a total of $21.1 billion of borrowing authority. That is made up as follows: $3.5 billion of unused borrowing authority carried forward from earlier years; $6.6 billion for 1982-83, provided by Bill C-11; $7 billion provided by Bill C-125; and a further $4 billion provided by Bill C-128. That totals $21.1 billion.

That $21.1 billion of borrowing authority already granted for 1982-83 is smaller than the $22.2 billion financial requirements forecast in October.

As the Minister of Finance announced in the House on February 17, the financial requirements for 1982-83 are now estimated to be $26.1 billion. Honourable senators should remember that this bill is asking for borrowing authority in two branches, $5.5 billion for 1982-83 and $14 billion interim for 1983-84. The $21.1 billion, plus the $5 billion, totals $26.1 billion, which I just mentioned.

At that time the minister pointed out that the upward revision to the financial requirements since October reflected a downward adjustment of $2.5 billion to the revenue forecast, an upward revision of $1.2 billion to projected total outlays, and a $0.2 billion change to estimated non-budgetary transactions. So there is a projected budgetary deficit for 1982-83 of $27.2 billion, up from $23.6 billion at the time of the October statement.

In view of the increase in the financial requirements for 1982-83, Part I, clause 2(1) of this bill seeks additional borrowing authority for this fiscal year, as I mentioned, of $5 billion. That amount of borrowing authority, in addition to the amounts already available for this fiscal year—to which I referred under the first branch of my intervention—will result in total authorized borrowing authority for 1982-83 equal to the financial requirements for 1982-83.

Clause 2(2) provides for $2 billion of non-lapsing authority to be carried forward for use in the fiscal year 1983-84. The need for non-lapsing authority arises from the indefinite date of passage of the bill at the time it is introduced. Given this uncertainty, some of the present year's financial requirements may have to be met by a rundown in cash balances. Therefore, to rebuild the cash balances, the non-lapsing portion of the authority provided in the bill would allow for some of the borrowing scheduled for this fiscal year to be undertaken after March 31, 1983.

Next is clause 2(3), referring to the ability of the government to borrow and repay loans in foreign currencies. That has been included in the last five borrowing authority acts. I think I have introduced all five of them, and in each case I have had to say that over the years Canada has borrowed and repaid funds in a number of currencies. In recent years, however, this clause has been added to confirm Canada's right to borrow in foreign currencies.

Bill C-96 received first reading in the House of Commons on March 18, 1982, which is more than a year ago. It proposes several amendments to the Financial Administration Act, including an amendment clarifying the government's ability to borrow and repay in foreign currencies. Obviously, once that amendment has been passed there will no longer be a need to include this clause in borrowing authority bills.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Is it not clause 2(4)?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The deputy leader is looking at a different bill from the one I have.

Senator Hicks: The clause to which my honourable friend refers is clause 2(4).

Senator Roblin: That is correct. You have an amendment there that you have not discussed.

Senator Frith: It is Part II and the clause ought to be—

Senator Hicks: It is clause 2(4) for Part I, and clause 4(3) for Part II.

Senator Frith: That is correct.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You stand corrected.

Senator Frith: I stand corrected. Part II, clause 4(1) requests interim borrowing authority. The clause that will no longer be necessary after passage, if it receives passage, of Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act, is clause 2(4), not clause 2(3), as I believe I said.

Senator Roblin: You have it right now, have you?

Senator Frith: I think so. I should ask you to confirm that clause 2(4) refers to the ability of the government to borrow, and the repay provision is in clause 4(3).

Senator Hicks: No.

Senator Frith: It reads:

> For greater certainty, any amount borrowed under this clause may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada and may be repaid in the currency in which it was borrowed.

Senator Hicks: They both say that, but they refer to different borrowings; that is all.

Senator Frith: That is right. The first part deals with—

Senator Roblin: You had better start again.

Senator Frith: I do not think that is necessary. The first part of the bill refers to borrowing authority for 1982-83. Part II refers to the interim borrowing and, in both cases, the currency provision will no longer be necessary when amendments to the Financial Administration Act are passed. The money may be borrowed and it may be repaid. Part I, as I said, deals with the amount borrowed for 1982-83, and Part II deals with interim borrowing, and that is the $14 billion.

Senator Flynn: I do not like the word "interim." Does it mean that you are going to ask for more money again?

Senator Frith: Probably.

Senator Roblin: Undoubtedly.

Senator Frith: Undoubtedly. Pick your adverb.

Senator Flynn: The word "interim" is not in the bill.

● (2010)

Senator Roblin: It scares us all.

Senator Frith: That is something to be raised in the debate. It is interim in the sense that it is not meant to be a final borrowing for 1983-84.

Senator Flynn: Frightening.

Senator Frith: Part II, clause 4(1), requests an interim borrowing authority of $14 billion for fiscal 1983-84. It is a request for interim borrowing authority for 1983-84 at this time in order to permit the government to continue with an orderly debt program.

The interim authority will also allow adequate time for Parliament to consider a new borrowing bill based on the financial requirements for all of 1983-84 which will be set out in the forthcoming budget. Although it is too early at this stage to forecast what the financial requirements for fiscal 1983-84 will be—

Senator Roblin: Take a guess.

Senator Frith: —I note that, on February 22 the President of the Treasury Board provided Parliament with detailed expenditure estimates for 1983-84. In the estimates, the government set out a total spending target of $88.9 billion for fiscal 1983-84. That represents an increase of $9.6 billion relative to total outlays in the current fiscal year.

Hon. Lowell Murray: What is the increase over the main estimates?

Senator Frith: I have some background material, and I can answer the honourable senator's question later during his intervention.

Clause 4(2)—honourable senators will notice that I am verifying the numbers—cancelled any portion of the $14 billion borrowing authority being requested for 1983 that remains outstanding on March 31, 1984.

Clause 4(3) again refers to the ability of the government to borrow and repay loans in foreign currency and has the same effect as clause 2(4).

Senator Flynn: Bravo.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): He was right the other time, too.

Senator Frith: I appreciate the constructive criticism and the helpful monitoring of the numbers that I am receiving both from my colleague, Senator Hicks, and from my encouraging colleagues opposite.

Finally, clause 5 states that the $14 billion of interim borrowing authority granted in Part II will come into force on April 1, 1983.

The third subject is the use of the borrowing authority to date and the outstanding debt. I refer to the government's debt program to date in the current fiscal year and the amount of borrowing authority that has been used to date. As of now, virtually all of the $21.1 billion borrowing authority has been used.

The use of borrowing authority is made up of $0.9 billion as a result of foreign borrowings and $20.2 billion as a result of the domestic debt program.

Senator Hicks: How much was the one you just quoted?

Senator Frith: $20.2 billion as a result of the domestic debt program and $0.9 billion in foreign borrowings. The $0.9 billion of foreign borrowings is made up of $750 million borrowed in the Eurobond market last June, and a partial redemption of a Deutschmark maturity earlier this year.

The domestic debt program comprises approximately $7.3 billion raised through the issue of treasury bills; $4.9 billion through the net issue of marketable bonds; and, after accounting for net redemptions, $8 billion through Canada Savings Bonds.

To repeat those figures, of the $21.1 billion, $0.9 billion was for foreign borrowings and $20.2 billion were for domestic borrowings.

The amount of foreign borrowings is split between $750 million in Eurobonds and $150 million in the deutschmark redemption. The amount of domestic borrowings is made up $7.3 billion in treasury bills, $4.9 billion in the net issue of marketable bonds, and, after accounting for net redemptions, $8 billion in Canada Savings Bonds.

The last subject, honourable senators, is the level of Canada's outstanding debt. On February 23, 1983, the Government of Canada's outstanding net debt in Canadian dollars totalled $108 billion, an increase of $20.2 billion in the fiscal year. That amount is made up as follows: 24.6 per cent in treasury bills, 44.7 per cent in marketable bonds and 30.7 per cent in Canada Savings Bonds.

Honourable senators, those are the details that I promised to furnish. Should honourable senators wish to ask any further questions, I have some additional material at my disposal that may help in answering them. I ask honourable senators to support second reading of the bill.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, about midway through the deputy leader's speech, there was an interesting exchange between him and the Leader of the Opposition concerning just what is meant by the term "interim" when referring to interim borrowing authority for the new fiscal year beginning April 1. The Deputy Leader of the Government indicated that what is meant is that this is not the final borrowing authority to be sought for the new fiscal year.

Indeed, Mr. Lalonde, the Minister of Finance, made the meaning of the word "interim" very clear when he testified before the standing committee of the other place in respect of this bill. Mr. Lalonde said that he would be back by the end of June with another borrowing bill of an undisclosed amount. In other words, we are being asked to grant the authority to borrow $14 billion for the year 1983-84 to tide Mr. Lalonde over the next few months until the end of June, at the very latest. Mr. Lalonde does not know—and if he does know, he will not say—how much more the government will be seeking to borrow in the new fiscal year. The fact that we are being left in the dark on that question is one of our most serious objections to this bill, or at least to Part II of it.

The Deputy Leader of the Government did not dwell on the interim nature of the borrowing authority being sought for 1983-84, nor did he dwell on the fact that this is the largest borrowing bill in Canadian history. It is a new record, honourable senators, set by the Trudeau government.

One can well understand the deputy leader's reluctance to mention this new record. As a spokesman for the government, I suppose that he is becoming rather blasé about the many records that have been set by this government.

Senator Frith: Yes, I never mention the success of the six-and-five program.

Senator Flynn: An accident!

Senator Murray: I dealt with that on a previous occasion. I trust that I will have an opportunity to deal with it again.

Under this government, inflation went to new highs. Unemployment has reached a record high—over 12 per cent.

Senator Flynn: The same applies to bankruptcies.

Senator Murray: There are almost 1.6 million Canadians out of work. Interest rates went to record highs under this government, and the economic decline in Canada in 1982 was worse than that of any other of the 24 countries measured by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. The present government has established all of these records, just as it has established the record borrowing bill before us tonight. The Deputy Leader of the Government, being blasé about the many new records established by this government, does not dwell on those facts.

[Senator Frith.]

• (2020)

The procedure being followed by the government in presenting this borrowing bill is a travesty of parliamentary practice and tradition. It makes a mockery of the principle of government accountability to Parliament. As I mentioned, $14 billion of the total is for the new fiscal year beginning April 1, and yet we have had no budget for that fiscal year; there has been no forecast of the financial situation of the government; there is no idea of what the total borrowing of the government will be in the new fiscal year; and no forecast of the revenue picture.

As the Deputy Leader of the Government has pointed out, we do have expenditure forecasts. In the other place, February 22, the President of the Treasury Board presented the main estimates, showing that the total spending for 1983-84 would be $87.5 billion. That increase is 17.9 per cent over the main estimates tabled a year ago for the fiscal year now ending. Such is the success of the six-and-five restraint program undertaken by the present government, the six-and-five program of which the Deputy Leader of the Government is so proud.

Parliament is being told to pass this unprecedented borrowing bill without being given the information that any responsible legislature would insist on before even considering such a bill. The bill comes to us, need I add, from a government whose record on budgets, financial management and fiscal and economic policy over the past three years has been a series of disasters. It comes to us from a government whose public support over the past 18 months has declined to historically low levels.

I am not suggesting that Canada should be governed by public opinion polls, but I am suggesting that a government which has suffered such a devastating loss of credibility and public confidence over such a sustained period, should not be allowed to inflict this kind of damage on Parliament and the country. A government which has suffered such a complete loss of public credibility and public confidence should hesitate before coming to Parliament with such an irregular demand, and Parliament should be especially cautious about acquiescing in such a demand from a government in that unenviable position, in that low estate of public opinion.

On an occasion such as this it is hard to decide which gives the greater cause for alarm, whether it is the further erosion of Parliament's rights, or the damage to the nation's financial health and future security done by this government. There is some cause and effect at work. A government that is respectful of Parliament, and of Parliament's rights, would not act in this way, and a Parliament that had a conscientious majority would exercise, as Parliament was intended to do, some restraint on the government. Over time one hopes and expects that a new government will help rebuild parliamentary democracy in this country; but it will take a much longer time to restore or regain the financial health of the country and to restore confidence in our economy.

The Deputy Leader of the Government has put our net debt at approximately $108 billion. I have seen what I believe to be a more recent figure from a government source—given, I believe, to the standing committee of the other place—putting the figure at $122 billion. Whether it is $108 billion or $122 billion, it was approximately $16 billion in March of 1968, and a couple of years ago the Auditor General expressed the view that that net debt is understated by $14.5 billion.

The interest on the debt in the fiscal year now ending is about $17.3 billion. It will be $18.6 billion in 1983-84. That is 4.8 per cent of our gross national product. It was 2 per cent when Mr. Trudeau took office.

In 1968-69 one tax dollar in nine was needed to service the debt. Today one tax dollar in three is needed to service the debt. Putting it another way, that is 21.7 per cent of all government expenditures. In 1968-69 the deficit was the equivalent of four per cent of total spending. Today it is 34 per cent of total spending.

One of the gravest consequences of this to our economy has been the loss of flexibility that this fiscal irresponsibility has caused. The government has almost no room to manoeuvre, to operate in a countercyclical fashion when necessary. What a legacy! What a mess the new government is going to inherit; and the longer this government is in office, the longer it will take for a new government to restore stability and confidence.

The government had hoped that oil taxes would send its revenues soaring and cover its economic and fiscal mistakes. Unfortunately, for the government—and, I suppose, for the public finances of the country—it did not turn out that way. The government had hoped that economic growth might help reverse the growing gap between revenues and expenditures. Instead it has been obliged four times to revise its revenue projections for the current fiscal year and to revise its revenue revenue projections always downwards. In November 1981 they forecast revenues for the current fiscal year at $64.9 billion. In June 1982 they revised the figure downwards to $58.5 billion. In October 1982 they lowered their expectations to $55.6 billion, and in February 1983, a couple of weeks ago, they estimated the revenues for the current fiscal year at $53.2 billion. That is more than $11 billion less than the original forecast of revenues made by this government. How can a government be so wrong? How can a government be so mistaken about economic trends and about the implications of those trends on the budgetary position?

Our economic growth last year declined by almost 5 per cent, according to the Minister of Finance. It has fallen by 7.5 per cent since the second quarter of 1981. The best projections for 1983 are that real economic growth will be considerably less than 2 per cent. The forecast is for weak recovery, feeble growth and continually rising unemployment, rising from its present level of 12 per cent—almost 1.6 million Canadians out of work. The standard of living of Canadians, by whatever measure you want to take, has declined significantly during this recession. GNP per capita and personal disposable income per capita are down in 1982 over 1981. Statistics Canada surveys expect that capital investment in 1983 will fall by 3.2 per cent, and this following a decline of 5.6 per cent in 1982. These declines in capital investment represent a loss to the Canadian economy of $6.9 billion over two years. It is little wonder that the OECD measurement indicates that Canada's economic decline in 1982 was the worst of any of the 24 members of the OECD, and little wonder that a recent edition of a respected London magazine, The Economist, portrayed economic conditions in this country under the heading "Canada Self-made Slump".

● (2030)

So we have an unprecedented borrowing bill coming from a government that has no credibility left. Within its present mandate, since its re-election in 1980, it has brought down four budgets or quasi-budgets. The first was a device to present the so-called National Energy Program. Of course, since that time there has been an update on the National Energy Program and the whole thing has proven to be an unmitigated disaster.

In November 1981 Mr. MacEachen brought in a budget, and never in the history of this country has a budget collapsed so quickly or failed so disastrously. Subsequent budgets or financial statements by Mr. MacEachen in June 1982 and by Mr. Lalonde in October 1982 have tried to undo the damage. Parliament is still trying to undo the damage caused by the initial MacEachen budget in November 1981. The forecasts of this government have been wildly inaccurate on economic growth, on inflation, on unemployment, on their revenue position, on spending, on the deficit, and yet they come to Parliament and ask for authority to borrow $14 billion for the next year without even presenting a budget, without giving us a financial forecast to show what the total borrowing program will be or how it will fit into a fiscal plan, without telling us how the borrowing program might affect borrowing by the private sector or by the provinces.

Honourable senators, this kind of financial management further undermines the confidence of the private sector in our government, and our acquiescence in it confirms the view of many who see Parliament as impotent and irrelevant. As I understand it, this bill will go to committee. The very least we should do is tell Mr. Lalonde that Part II, which seeks authorization for $14 billion interim borrowing to tide him over until June, will not pass until he has presented a budget or a financial statement giving us the essential information that prudent and responsible parliamentarians need and must have before voting on such a measure.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, this time last week I had the pleasure of attending a very pleasant dinner in this building. Much to my surprise, I found the Deputy Leader of the Government moonlighting as a guitarist and folk singer at that dinner. I have no comment on his performance that evening, except to say that it was far more melodious and harmonious than this evening's performance. The fiddle that he used this evening was badly out of tune and the beat could be described as anything but an up beat.

The bill before us this evening is unprecedented in its magnitude, unprecedented in its attitude and unprecedented in its latitude. It is, as Senator Murray said, the largest borrowing authority in our history. The attitude of the government is unprecedented, in that it kept warning Parliament that if it did not get the authority it would use the Financial Administration Act. The bill is also unprecedented in its latitude in that the amount of borrowing authority being sought is sufficient for one year, with proper management.

Last year, the borrowing authority requested was $11 billion; the comparable bill this year is $19 billion. In his remarks in introducing the bill, Senator Frith smiled and mentioned six-and-five. I would like him to smile now and explain to me why six-and-five does not apply to the borrowing authority. A series of bills was referred to us recently in which six-and-five applies to salaries, to pensions, to old age security. Why doesn't six-and-five apply to the borrowing authority?

The Minister of Finance, before the committee in the other place, stated that the deficit was somewhat like an accordion; it could be stretched. Well, honourable senators, it cannot be stretched very much more in the upcoming year, because the Minister of Finance has already started out by forecasting a deficit of $30 billion for the next year; and that is just about the limit of the accordion.

The deficit has increased 250 per cent since the year 1981-82. Recently, a story in the Ottawa Citizen said that a combination of ministers of finance—in other words, Mr. MacEachen and Mr. Lalonde—missed the deficit forecast by 270 per cent. What the writer of that story forgot to mention was that these two gentlemen were right on target. It was a direct hit or, if you like, a bull's-eye as far as these two gentlemen are concerned.

The sponsor of the bill and Senator Murray have mentioned the national debt. This time last year we were saying that Prime Minister Trudeau wanted to leave the Constitution as his legacy. Honourable senators, the present Prime Minister will be cursed by future generations for the legacy that he is leaving us, and that is an increase of about $100 billion in our national debt. Honourable senators, the deficit is nothing more than a tax deferred, and future generations will have to pay that $100 billion that the current Prime Minister has added to our national debt.

● (2040)

The total Canadian debt is $250 billion. In that figure I include the responsibilities of crown corporations and what the federal government owes the various pension plans. It has used moneys in those plans. When we add all that together, it totals approximately $250 billion. Various economists have worked that out to be $10,000 per capita. To put it in a different perspective, one that I think illustrates the point better, when the Prime Minister took office the average mortgage was approximately $40,000, with a 20-year amortization period. That same mortgage is now almost amortized and that homeowner, with an average family of four, now must assume an additional payment of $40,000 of the national debt as a result of the tenure of the current Prime Minister.

We like to get perturbed about the foreign debt of countries such as Brazil and Mexico. Brazil, honourable senators, has a population of 123 million and a foreign debt of $89 billion.

[Senator Phillips.]

Mexico has a population of 82 million and a foreign debt of $82 billion. Canada has a population of 24.5 million and a foreign debt of $95 billion. While we are busy worrying about the foreign debt owed by countries such as Mexico and Brazil, we should pause for a moment to consider our own foreign debt. It is fine to say that we have resources, but Brazil has many of the same natural resources as we have. Unless the government changes its pattern, we will become a concern to the international financial community.

France, with a population of approximately 54 million, recently had to devalue its currency because it was facing a deficit of $17 billion. Canada, with a population of 24.5 million, is starting out with a deficit of $30 billion, and that will rise throughout the year. Expenditures and the deficit keep increasing.

Honourable senators, I believe the six-and-five program should apply to the expenditures and the deficit. Apparently, not only cabinet ministers within the Senate cannot work within the six-and-five guidelines, but the whole administration seems to have difficulty working within the six-and-five guidelines, and each day we see further signs that the six-and-five program is being discarded by the government.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to take too long, but I do want to mention the fact that in the economic mess we are currently in one would expect that our expenditures would be curtailed. Let us have a look at the estimates and the increases for various items. Under the item "Professional and Special Services," there is an expenditure of $2 billion for next year. That figure is largely made up of consultants' fees. We have consultants' reports filed all over the place. I think the total number of consultants' reports on file with the various departments is 4,000. Nobody knows what is in them except the person who was paid to do the consulting work. This is a sort of pattern, and I do not want to say it is all political patronage, because it is not. Patronage is divided into bureaucratic patronage and political patronage. I find that bureaucrats are handing out patronage just as well as politicians. Many senior civil servants take early retirement and arrange contracts before they leave their departments.

I was surprised to learn the other day that our Clerk will be retiring in two or three years—I thought it would be at least ten—but had he stayed with his department he could have retired, arranged contracts and made more money in the past few years than he has working full time. That is an item that should be checked.

I point out that consultants' fees account for approximately 7 per cent of our deficit, and that is not a small item, honourable senators.

Senator Murray mentioned the petroleum and gas revenue tax. I noticed that Senator Frith did not. The reduction of the oil price to $29 a barrel will cost the federal government approximately $4 billion in taxes. The forecast was for $11.5 billion; the reduction in oil prices will reduce that to approximately $7.4 billion, or a difference of approximately $4 billion. Not even this government or this Minister of Finance can turn a blind eye on the loss of $4 billion. Perhaps when Senator Frith does his encore he will be kind enough to give us some more information on the petroleum and gas revenue tax.

I understand that the Canadian ownership charge is to be continued on a month-to-month basis. A decision is to be made at the end of each month regarding that. We are at the end of March, so could the deputy leader tell us if the Canadian ownership charge will be discontinued for next month, or, if not, for what purpose the funds will be used?

Senator Roblin: They can buy some more filling stations.

Senator Phillips: Yes, Imperial has a few service stations that Petro-Canada probably wants to buy.

The sponsor of the bill mentioned the estimates provided by the President of the Treasury Board, but I do not have a great deal of faith in those estimates because there are many items missing. There is nothing in the estimates for the Post Office deficit; there is nothing in the estimates for VIA Rail; there is nothing in the estimates for the Kirby report; and there is nothing in the estimates for the changes in the Crow rate. They are really just a sign post, and not a very good one at that, because they do not give a true indication of where we are going.

Senator Flynn: May I put a question to the sponsor of the bill?

Senator Frith: Certainly.

Senator Flynn: Clause 2(1) states:

> The Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by any Act of Parliament—

Et cetera.

My understanding is that, as soon as authority has been given and the government has used the authority, it can re-use that authority indefinitely. In other words, once you have borrowed you can always borrow to repay that loan indefinitely—at least that is my understanding. I do not know why you use that formula.

● (2050)

Senator Frith: What clause are you talking about?

Senator Flynn: Clause 2(2), the authority used or unused. When the government has used any authority to borrow, it can borrow to repay indefinitely.

Senator Roblin: That is called rollover.

Senator Flynn: Yes. I am wondering why you make that difference between used authority and unused authority. After all, used authority is very simple to understand. What I cannot understand in a bill such as this is that we do not know what the amount of used authority is or the amount of unused authority.

Clause 2(2) is rather interesting because it says:

> The borrowing authority conferred by subsection (1) shall be reduced by any amount that is borrowed pursuant to section 39 of the Financial Administration Act after February 16, 1983—

What amount has been borrowed under clause 2(2) that will not be used under the authority of this bill? If you turn to clause 2(3) it states:

> All borrowing authority conferred by subsection (1) that remains unused and in respect of which no action has been taken by the Governor in Council pursuant to section 37 of the Financial Administration Act shall expire on March 31, 1983—

That is in two days time.

> —to the extent that the unused authority exceeds two billion dollars.

I should like to know exactly what that means.

What reduction, if any, is there, or has every authority been used under section 37 of the Financial Administration Act? It seems to us that the drafting of these bills is rather confusing. It is done in order to hide the total debt of the government and it is drafted in order to confuse Parliament. I think something should be done about that because it is difficult for anyone who is not familiar with the system—and I would say that represents about 80 per cent of the members of Parliament—to understand exactly what is meant by the wording in the whole of clause 2. I would appreciate it if the deputy leader could give us some explanation on the points I have raised.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw attention to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should like to deal first with Senator Murray's intervention. Just before the sitting commenced, he told me that he had prepared what he described as a non-partisan, mild intervention which he intended to deliver, if I remember his words correctly, "unless provoked". By attributing incorrect numbers to certain clauses perhaps I so enraged him as to cause him to throw away his mild, non-partisan intervention. If that is not the case, the mind reels as to what a partisan intervention would be like, if what we heard was a mild non-partisan one. In any event, Senator Murray underlined the fact that he felt the interim borrowing authority of $14 billion ought not to be proceeded with because insufficient detail was given as to what the borrowing required for 1983-84 would be. It seems to me that impliedly, if not expressly, he recognized that the amount that is going to be required for 1983-84 will turn on the budget which will have some prognostications as to 1983-84 and that, in turn, will be significantly affected by what happens to the economy in 1983-84 in terms of what the financial requirements will finally be for that year. That is why, when I made reference to the estimates that were tabled by the President of the Treasury Board, and which, as Senator Phillips said, are not complete, I said that that is the best information I could give because it is too early to predict what the requirements will be since it is not known how the economy will be performing next year.

As to records, I have very little to say. If this is "Murray's Awards Night," we are not exactly playing to a packed house, but he pointed out that I did not dwell on what he considered, and what might be considered, a negative record set by the government. He would understand that I felt I could count on him to do that and that I could equally count on him not to refer to some of the records of this government that are of a more positive nature such as the effect of the six-and-five, and a dramatic drop in interest rates and a significant reflection in the inflation rate—

Senator Flynn: Unless you claim responsibility for the recession.

Senator Frith: —and the accomplishments of this government during the course of this session by achieving a great deal—probably more than ever before—in terms of legislative programs. However, as I said, in our system we count on the government supporters to refer to the positive side, and we are never disappointed in finding that the opposition will draw to our attention anything that they consider negative.

Senator Murray also seemed to think that there was something rather illicit about the procedures followed this evening. I think this is a regular borrowing authority bill in terms of its clauses and its procedures.

I will have something to say to the question raised by Senator Flynn, which was raised on another occasion as well.

Of course, I am grateful to Senator Phillips for the good reviews of the performance last Wednesday. I regret that he found the performance this evening not worthy of the same stars. If we could rely on uniformly good reviews, especially from Senator Phillips, we would never leave the dressing room.

As far as the estimates are concerned, I agree with Senator Phillips that they are in terms of a totally accurate prediction of the requirements for the forthcoming year. They are only of general help and benefit in getting perhaps a dim picture of what might be waiting for us in the future.

I should like to thank him also for this absolutely unyielding support for the six-and five program. Perhaps I am drawing an undue inference when I say that he so often refers, both here and in committee, to the six-and-five program and is apparently so enthusiastic about it that he never misses an opportunity to suggest additional areas for its application. I assure him that I will draw to the attention of the government that this kind of support deserves serious consideration. I assume it is based on his conviction that we have been successful in the areas where we have applied it, so why not apply it more broadly.

Senator Flynn: It is a question of fairness.

Senator Frith: As to the question of the two items he asked about, I apologize that I cannot give him the details on the petroleum tax or on the users, but I am going to suggest that this bill be referred to committee and we will have the minister attend and he might want to ask those questions then.

• (2100)

Senator Flynn, as I recall it—and he will correct me if I am mistaken; in fact, he may correct me if I am not mistaken—

Senator Flynn: Possibly.

Senator Frith: —previously raised the matter of the revolving borrowing authority in committee. I admit that I have not answered him on previous occasions. I can only say that we should raise it again in committee because I do not have an answer for him. I remember it being dealt with by Mr. Drabble on a previous occasion, but I do not remember what his answer was. Perhaps we can raise it with the minister tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Subclause (2) of clause 2.

Senator Frith: The problem with the numbering arises because the bill we have before us is not the "as passed" bill which was amended and reported by the standing committee. That is the reason we got out of sync on the numbers. You will note that in the explanatory notes the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is indicated by underlining. In this version it is indicated by a marginal line. Subclause 2(2) was added in committee and that put the numbers out of sync.

I had prepared my speech before subclause 2(2) was added, and that is why I ended up by referring to subclause 2(3) instead of to subclause 2(4).

According to my understanding, subclause 2(2)—that is, the old subclause 2(2) which would now be subclause 2(3) to which they referred—

Senator Murray: Don't get into that again.

Senator Frith: I want to be clear.

Senator Roblin: Stick to the bill we have in front of us.

Senator Frith: I want to be sure the subclause Senator Flynn is referring to is subclause 2(3).

Senator Flynn: It is subclause 2(2) which states that:

> The borrowing authority . . . shall be reduced by any amount that is borrowed pursuant to section 39 . . . before the coming into force of this Act.

That means that the government has already used up some of the borrowing authority before Parliament has authorized it to do so.

Senator Frith: That may well be so, but I do not understand it to mean that.

Senator Flynn: It certainly means that.

Senator Frith: That particular clause was raised in committee, and I suggest that we can raise it again tomorrow in committee because I cannot provide a specific answer to what was intended by that amendment made in committee.

Senator Flynn: What about subclause 2(3)?

Senator Frith: Subclause 2(3) is the old subclause 2(2) and has also been the subject of concern in the National Finance Committee. It deals with the non-lapsing authority to be carried forward for use in 1983-84. I thought I had explained that in my speech, but if it requires further clarification we can get more detail from the officials or the minister tomorrow.

While I understand some of the concern Senator Flynn has with regard to these clauses, I cannot agree with him that they are designed to try to hide the actual authority used or not used. Nor are they in any way designed to withhold information.

Senator Flynn: They may not be designed to do that, but they do it.

Senator Frith: I would suggest that they do not. As honourable senators will remember, I tried to give specific figures, and I repeated each one of them—the authority that was used to date; what specific authority is now being asked for; the use of the authority to date; and the outstanding debt. However, I know that Senator Flynn feels that many of the details I gave in the speech I made could be included in the bill itself.

Senator Flynn: Part of it.

Senator Frith: No one has suggested that before. In view of the fact that I have furnished them in this chamber, in spite of what the bill might be attempting to do, we have not tried to withhold any information at our disposal.

Senator Flynn: It is not you; it is the practice.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am asking for support on second reading of this bill.

Senator Roblin: That is asking too much.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

[Translation]

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS) CONTINUING ASSISTANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 29, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill C-130, intituled: "An Act to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions", with instructions to consider the constitutionality of clauses 5 to 11 inclusive, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Monday, March 28, 1983, considered the matter and, because of the urgency of its passage, reports the said Bill without amendment. However, having regard to the reservations that were expressed with respect to the constitutional implications or propriety of the procedures set out in clauses 5 to 11, it invites the Government to consider amending the negative resolution procedures set out in this Bill and in other legislation to ensure that both the Senate and the House of Commons have equal power to initiate negative resolutions and further, that future legislation of a similar nature incorporate this principle.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: The report of the Committee is self-explanatory. It provides an answer to Senator Deschatelets's question. We must be thankful to him for having called the attention of the Senate to a weakness in the provisions of this Bill. This weakness concerns what is usually called the negative resolution in cases where the Governor-in-Council uses his power under Clause 4 to amend the schedule by deleting from it or, even more important by adding to it. Clause 5 provides that, after an order of the Governor-in-Council is laid before Parliament, unless the House acts within 15 days, the order is deemed to have been adopted and approved by Parliament. In such a case, the Senate will have had nothing to do. What we pointed out in Committee is that the Senate should have some input in the decision as the House of Commons. I would like to suggest that the proper procedure to follow would be that, when the order is tabled as prescribed in subsection 1, instead of saying:

> An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless.

The clause should read: "It is deemed to have been adopted by the House of Commons on the 20th sitting day of Parliament after being laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless", and so on. The procedure would be the same for the Senate. The order would be deemed to have been adopted on the 20th sitting day of Parliament after tabling unless the Senate takes the same action as is now provided for the House of Commons. The problem is very easy to solve. There is no doubt that the Bill in its present form puts the Senate in an inferior position. The Senate is being completely ignored. The House of Commons can say: "We are in agreement; we shall say nothing; you in the Senate just follow us." I believe that the report of the Committee underlines this weakness. Because this legislation must be passed as soon as possible since we need it for the beginning of the new fiscal year, we shall let it pass. However, we recommend that the Government amend the Bill at the first opportunity as well as any other Bills which might have the same shortcoming. Therefore I ask the Leader of the Government to assure us that he will draw the attention of the Cabinet to this situation. On our return, unless he is willing to do so tomorrow, he could perhaps tell us that the Government will not only consider the Committee's recommendations, but also make a decision in keeping with the wish which was expressed in the report.

● (2110)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I attended the committee meeting this afternoon for a short while. I want to repeat here what I said there, that we do give an undertaking that we will examine the question raised by Senator Flynn then and by a number of other senators this evening. Since that committee meeting, I have not been able to get a full and detailed explanation of the interpretation—I suppose, the lack of reason, according to Senator Flynn and other senators—that has led to this situation. I offered one possible explanation during the committee meeting. I was not trying to argue at that point that it was due to advice that we had received from the departmental offices and the Department of Justice; I am not now asking honourable senators to accept that.

I want to assure Senator Flynn, however, that I did give an undertaking to follow the matter up. I will get an explanation as to why it was done in this way, with initiative being confined to the House of Commons. When I have received that explanation, if there are not good and sufficient reasons that are not a problem with the constitutional authority between the two houses, further action will be taken.

I cannot give a commitment to Senator Flynn tonight as to when this will take place, but I do give a commitment that I will get an explanation. As I have said, if the reasons are not more substantial than those we know of now, further action will be taken.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is one outstanding matter that is to be dealt with either in committee or at third reading, and that has to do with a request made by Senator Roblin for some further information about these institutions that are listed in the schedule as international financial institutions.

I have here a document from CIDA that sets out information on the international financial institutions. I do have some explanations to offer, if honourable senators have the schedule before them. For example, there is listed the African Development Fund and the African Development Bank. I understand that those two institutions share a common administration. The same applies to the Asian Development Fund and the Asian Development Bank, as it does to the InterAmerican Development Bank and the Fund for Special Operations. The Caribbean Development Bank and the Special Development Fund are combined in the schedule. The other two institutions are not referred to in this information, but they are the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Common Fund for Commodities.

The International Fund for Agricultural Development is a part of the United Nations family. The Common Fund for Commodities is very new and has just been organized. In fact, it is awaiting ratification by a couple of the member nations, but it too is about to be made a member of the U.N. family.

Honourable senators, I have this information in French and in English. I suggest that I make a brief reference to each of these institutions, after which I will table the documents for the further information of honourable senators. I make that suggestion because there is an introductory page that I will not refer to but that I will include in the tabling.

With regard, for example, to the Caribbean Development Bank, there is detailed information under each of the following headings: Background, Financial Resources, Ordinary Capital Resources, Special Fund Resources, and Canada's Position in the Bank. In terms of general information, the Caribbean Development Bank was established in 1970 to contribute to the economic growth and development of Caribbean member countries and to promote regional economic co-operation and integration, having special regard to the needs of the less developed members.

Membership in the bank, headquartered in Bridgetown, Barbados, includes all the countries and territories of the Commonwealth, Caribbean, as well as Canada, the United Kingdom, Colombia, Venezuela and Mexico. The affairs of the Bank are managed by a board of governors, a board of directors, and a president. The governor for Canada is the Minister of Finance, and his alternate is the president of CIDA. Canada also elects an executive director. In this case, there is also provided additional information about financial resources and the other headings I mentioned.

With regard to the InterAmerican Development Bank, the background information is as follows: The InterAmerican Development Bank, the oldest of the regional development banks, was established in 1960 to accelerate economic development in its member countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. With headquarters in Washington, D.C., the bank has since expanded to include countries of the Commonwealth, Caribbean, Europe and Japan, and now comprises 43 member countries. Honourable senators, I have tabled the further information that I have regarding that bank.

The African Development Bank was for many years unique in the world as the only regional or continental development bank without external contributions to its capital stock. With membership restricted to African states, now numbering 50, the bank was established in 1963 to contribute to the social and economic progress of member states, giving special emphasis to investment projects and programs that benefit more than one country. At the ninth annual meeting of the board of governors in May 1982 it was decided to open membership in the bank to non-regional countries that were members of the African Development Fund. Further details with regard to that are then given.

The Asian Development Bank was established in 1966 by 32 developing and industrialized countries, including Canada, to foster economic growth and co-operation in the region, and to accelerate the economic development of developing member countries, both collectively and individually. The bank, headquartered in Manila, Philippines, is supported by 44 member countries, and total resources now stand at nearly $US 12 billion. The bank's development role is particularly significant, since Asia is home to over half of the world's population and more than three-quarters of its poor.

The affairs of the bank are managed by a board of governors, a board of directors, and a president. The Canadian government is represented by the Minister of Finance, his alternate being the president of CIDA. Canada shares a constituency with the four Nordic countries and the Netherlands.

Honourable senators, I will table both the French and English versions of that document. I have an additional document respecting the International Fund for Agricultural Development. I have it in French and in English. It has the same general headings. Under "Establishment" it says that the International Fund for Agricultural Development was established as a specialized agency of the United Nations in December, 1977, following a recommendation emanating from the World Food Conference held in Rome in 1974. The Fund began lending operations in April, 1978.

• (2120)

Its membership, as of February, 1982, totalled 136 countries, 20 in Category I—that is, developed countries—12 in Category II, oil exporting developing countries, and 104 in Category III, other developing countries.

The purpose of the fund is to mobilize additional resources to be made available on concessional terms for agricultural development in developing member states. The document goes into further detail with regard to the purpose. It then goes on to further headings such as organizational structure, lending activities, and Canada's position in the fund, which are also covered here.

Honourable senators, that is the general information. I can actually read into the record more information if you wish, but if you are satisfied with that in general, I suggest that this document be tabled for reference, in case someone is interested in more detail.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As I am responsible for my honourable friend's comments, and since he was kind enough to respond to my question, I thank him for the information. I would be pleased to see the documents and get more detail from them. I would also ask him if he could give some more detail of the common fund for commodities. I understand that this is something brand new in the field of international economic co-operation where member states are trying to stabilize the price of commodities, mostly tropical natural products. I am very much interested in that because the question of stabilizing the price of wheat is in the forefront of the minds of many representatives of western Canada. Perhaps we would find food for thought if we were able to study the details of that fund, so if my honourable friend could provide some detail on that at his convenience I would be pleased to have it.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: I have here the document "Profil du Fonds commun" with the background history after four years of negotiations, etc. It gives an impression similar to the one that Senator Roblin has, but I am not positive that it is up to date. I can check that. If the answer is no, I will try to get an up-to-date version. If the answer is yes, I will table the one I already have.

Senator Roblin: I thank my colleague; I have no difficulty reading French.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be now read a third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 30, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline respecting the transportation of petroleum and natural gas north of 60° entitled: Marching to the Beat of the Same Drum.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1982-83, (NO. 3)
BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

March 30, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which was referred Bill C-143, "An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority (No. 3)" has, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, March 29, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND E. LEBLANC
Deputy Chairman

[English]

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be now read the third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I had the pleasure of attending the meeting of the National Finance Committee this morning. I found that all questions—many of them very skilfully put by Senator Roblin and Senator Phillips—were answered entirely to my satisfaction. I am haunted by a lingering doubt as to whether I can say the same for Senator Roblin and Senator Phillips. In the light of that, I yield to them or to any other honourable senator who wishes to speak on third reading.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am overcome with a sense of anticlimax in speaking to the bill at this moment, because I have still ringing in my ears the speeches made last night by my two colleagues.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: They said it all!

Senator Roblin: They said a lot that I agree with, but I am bold enough to speak again because in the questioning of the minister this morning certain facts were brought to bear which could be related to the house, as they enable us to form a clearer impression of what we are actually being asked to do.

The bill is really divided into two parts. There is a request for $5 billion for the current fiscal year, and that is not unexpected because it is based on the financial scenario sketched by the government during the fiscal year. Apropos of that, the minister advised us—and I mention this because of the interest of my colleague, Senator Flynn, in the matter—that the borrowing authority that was exercised under the Financial Administration Act, section 39, which is an emergency form of raising funds, amounts to $2.3 billion. That indicates the amount by which the $5 billion portion of this bill will be reduced in order to keep the government honest, if I may use that colloquial expression.

• (1410)

What is more disturbing is the fact that this bill also allows the government to borrow $14 billion on account. One has to ask the question, "On account of what?"

Hon. Jack Marshall: They'll find a way!

Senator Roblin: Well, it is on account of the requirements of the government for the coming fiscal year, for which we have received no financial scenario and no budget. What we have received is a statement contained in the main estimates of some $90 billion, which, insofar as it goes and insofar as it is accurate, is a useful piece of information, but everybody knows that a statement of the spending intentions of the government in the main estimates is not really a reliable indication of how much we shall end up spending, because there are always supplementary estimates of a considerable amount. We also have to bear in mind that the book of main estimates tells us nothing about the financial position we are in. It tells us what we hope to spend, but it says nothing about where the money is coming from. It says nothing about how close we are coming to meeting the requirements of the public service through taxation. It says nothing about the forecast of the minister for the next five-year period, which we are certainly expecting with the budget. And it says nothing about how much the government will really have to borrow in 1983-84 in order to close any gaps that exist in its financial requirements. It is therefore, in a sense, a step in the dark. We are being asked to vote $14 billion in respect of a financial year the main details of which have not been revealed. The minister told us this morning that he had no intention of revealing them at the present time, and that we would have to wait until his budget comes down. I suppose we have to content ourselves with that statement, because in the nature of things, particularly in this house, his opinion is more likely to be accepted than mine, and I am reconciled to that.

I want to explain to honourable senators why I think it unfortunate that this $14 billion request is being brought in without a budget, since it is the climax of many years of difficulty in public finance. At least, I hope it is the climax. When we see the 1983-84 figures we may find out that it is not the climax, but merely another step on the primrose path of public finance that we have been following for the past few years.

Let me tell the Senate why I think we are in difficulties in connection with our financial arrangements. I asked the minister what the deficit would be for the year just about to end, and he stuck to his figure of $27.2 billion. In fact, he might even find that figure to be a little more than the final figure he will be faced with on March 31.

Let us take it, however, that this $27.2 billion is a reasonably accurate reflection of the deficit that will be experienced for this year. What's $27 billion?

Senator Frith: It's a lot of money.

Senator Roblin: It is a lot of money. Not only that, but it is a horrendous fraction of our gross national product. It represents 7.8 per cent of the gross national product of Canada in this year, merely to account for the deficit. I am not aware of one country of the 24 within the OECD and I am not aware of one of the major industrial countries that is faced with a figure like that. Perhaps Italy is the exception. I will reserve my comments on Italy because I think they may be in a worse position than we are. Relatively, the United States certainly is not faced with such a figure, and we know the tremendous fuss that is being raised down there with respect to their deficit, which is over $200 billion. The deficit in the United Kingdom, as a percentage of their gross national product, is less than half ours. In West Germany and Japan it is the same. So I think we can take it as a fact that our debt, as a fraction of the gross national product, is exceedingly high. It is much higher than we can accept with any easy or free mind.

So much for that—7.8 per cent of the gross national product. Can you get a handle on that? Well, figures given to us in committee this morning were interesting, because they pointed out that the deficit would be equal to 51 per cent of the tax money that we take in. That means that with every two dollars of tax money that we collect from the people of Canada, we are going to have a deficit of one dollar; and if we translate that into the actual borrowing amount, which is a little less, we get 49.1 per cent. So, in round terms, for every $2 that we collect in taxes today we have to go out and borrow another dollar. We have never before been in that situation in time of peace.

Senator Marshall: Disastrous.

Senator Roblin: I wonder how long this Senate thinks this form of public financing can go on. Fifty per cent of the total tax money is the equal of the amount of money that we have in the deficit of the country today. That is a horrendous figure. But let me give you another. What about interest on the public debt? Interest on the public debt is taking one-third; one in every three dollars raised in taxation is earmarked for the payment of the interest on the public debt. I see Senator Austin looking at me. I obtained my figure from the minister this morning, so, if he wants identification of those figures, I can refer him to the minutes of our committee proceedings, and he will find that, as a result of my questioning of the minister this morning, those figures are spread on the record.

● (1415)

Let us think about that for a second: one in every three dollars we collect in the taxes of this country is going to pay the interest on the debt—I repeat, the interest on the debt. We are actually having to go out and borrow money to pay the interest on the interest. The vast proportion of the amount of money we are going to have to borrow this year will be required just to pay the interest on the national debt.

One then has to ask, "How long can this situation continue?" I believe it is perfectly clear that it cannot last indefinitely, that somehow, somewhere, by someone some changes have to be made to reverse this process.

I recall that one honourable senator—he is not here today, so I will not mention him by name—a man who is usually quite concerned about the public debt, spoke on the topic in this house a week or so ago and seemed quite relaxed about the problem he was discussing. He held the view that when times get better, when there are less people on the unemployment insurance rolls, when income taxes raise more money, when we get back on an even keel in our economy some time in the future, these deficit problems will take care of themselves. I wish that were so. I do not believe it to be so, and I shall tell you why I do not believe it to be so. This is not the first deficit we have had. We have had deficits in the federal government's expenditures since the year 1970-71—for 13 years. This is the climax of 13 years of deficits, and what is particularly important to note is that for the past six years, from 1977-78 to the present—it will be seven years the day after tomorrow—we have not only had a deficit but the deficit has been well over $10 billion in each one of those six years—getting higher every year, from $10.8 billion in 1977 right up to $27.2 billion today—every year progressively higher.

The significant fact is that in those seven years we had good years, some very good years, not depression years, years that were not affected by unemployment insurance requirements or by falling revenues or by increasing welfare expenditures and things of that sort. In those six years we had at least three that were very good, as prosperous as we are likely to see, yet in every one of those prosperous years we had deficits of over $10 billion. So, if we think that prosperity, if it ever comes, is going to be enough to eliminate the deficit problems in the federal government's finances, it seems to me that that is not likely to be the case. I must say that I am concerned about that, because if it is not likely to be the case then we face deficits ad infinitum.

● (1420)

I should mention in parenthesis that when recently discussing this matter with officials of the Treasury Department of the United States, they came to the same conclusion with respect to this situation regarding deficits that I present to you, that there are aspects other than the cyclical ones that make up the deficit. In their opinion, in the United States at any rate, the cyclical portion of the deficit is the smaller portion, and the structural part—that is, the part that will be with us after good times come back—is the major portion of their deficit problem. Though one cannot say that the opinion of the people in the United States applies to conditions in Canada, what these officials said lends some credence to the indignation I expressed to this house with respect to these rising deficits and the fact that they have reached such horrendous proportions. I suggest that, when talking about deficits, we be realistic. I do not think there is any way in which this deficit will disappear overnight, no matter who is in power. When I consider that the minister told us today that between now and 1986 there will be a $25 billion shortfall in revenue from the oil industry, I can see the kind of problems with which this nation is faced.

Senator Frith: Balanced.

Senator Roblin: "Balanced" is quite true, and I thank my honourable friend. The minister said he thought that the declining price of oil would have some positive advantages, and I wholeheartedly agree with him on that point. I have no complaint about the fact that OPEC appears to be breaking up. That would suit me just fine. However, we would face short-term problems of various kinds. I do not wish to get into them now, but I recognize the fact that lower oil prices would have a positive effect on some aspects of the tax raising capacity of the country. But a $25 billion loss in revenue from the oil industry takes a lot of making up, and I do not know where the full make-up of that will come from.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: That is a lot of income tax.

Senator Roblin: You are quite right. In fact, if we wanted to close the deficit today we would have to raise the taxes of every man, woman and child in the country by 50 per cent, and I am not recommending such a proposal.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: There is tax on a lot of income, of course.

Senator Roblin: We can debate that when we see the colour of their money, but right now it is in the realm of speculation.

The point I want to make is that the deficit is very large and there is no magic way, in my opinion, in which it can be reduced by sleight of hand. There is no quick fix. We have a problem with energy income which is enormous and, taking into account all the offsets, it will still be a big problem for us. We cannot fail to deal with the needs of people. We cannot fail to deal with the needs of the unemployed and the unemployment system. We cannot afford to undercut the social welfare assistance programs, medicare, hospital assistance or any of those vital services on which our nation depends. I am aware of that, but what I am saying is that we must have some kind of plan, some reasonable approach to this problem of mastering the deficit.

We might as well reconcile ourselves to the harsh fact that in the coming fiscal year, 1983-84, it will be worse than it is now. There is no question about that. The deficit will be worse than it is now even if the minister does not do a thing about trying to inflate the economy. He has already told me so. The deficit will be about $30 billion, instead of $27.2 billion. I would not be at all surprised if, when the budget comes down, it is estimated to be more than $30 billion. The point I am making is that we have not yet reached the climax of this debt financing problem. We have had it for six years. The deficit has gone from $10 billion six years ago to $30 billion next year. What are we going to do about it?

How can anyone approach that problem without knowing what the government's financial plans are? This brings me back to my complaint about the $14 billion. We are being asked to put up that money in the face of a highly unfavourable federal government financing scenario, so far as we ordinary mortals know, without the benefit of advice or information that the minister could give us with respect to the 1983 revenue projections, the deficit and the borrowing program. The worst of it is that you cannot expect anything better next year. The question is, however, what will we do in the three or four years following that? Can we resolve that we have reached the climax of our debt problems? Can we resolve to support a program that will produce a reasonable return to sound public finance? All those questions hang in limbo, because we cannot see the five-year forecast of the government; indeed, we cannot see their forecast for 1983-84, and that bothers me.

● (1425)

I must also report that the size of the public borrowing, which will be pretty close to the deficit, will certainly make a great drain on the savings of Canadians. I do not believe that in the coming period we will be subjected to the crowding-out problem that is commonly spoken of, whereby the requirements of the government will be so great a percentage of the savings of the people that the private sector will have no room to borrow.

I am well aware that the private sector generates savings of its own for investment in corporations. I know that the private sector can borrow abroad, as indeed can governments, and I know that the Bank of Canada can print some money, as indeed it has done. I estimate that in the last 12 years the Bank of Canada has monetized about $12 billion of the public requirements of the Government of Canada. I know all those things, but, in spite of that, because private investment requirements are so low in this forthcoming 12-month period, I do not really think we will have any crowding out. However, I do think that the size of the government demand on the market place must have an effect on interest rates. They would be higher than they otherwise might be if the government requirement were not so great. That is something that cannot be avoided, no matter what you do.

However, if government requirements continue to grow at their present rate, then in the coming period, when we would expect prosperity to return and the private sector to require more money, we will be faced with that crowding-out crunch. That is another reason why I am anxious to see the government's estimates for the coming year and the five-year forecast. All these matters have to be considered before members of this house can cast an intelligent and instructed vote on this matter.

I am not going to detain the chamber any longer, honourable senators. I have a great deal more to say, but perhaps I can say it in some other way at some other time, and maybe to some other people. At any rate, I wanted to place before this house my appreciation of the magnitude of the debt and deficit problem we face. The fact is that it is too high and is getting higher and ought to be reduced. The fact is that we have no plan before us to show how this government intends to achieve those goals—which I have no doubt they share with me—for the five years that are to come or even in the fiscal year that is ahead of us. I regard it as unfortunate—that is perhaps the kindest word I can use—that the administration is asking for $14 billion on such a shaky basis of fact and of policy.

I want to make it clear, then, that I object to this bill for the reasons given, and I feel that, until we receive a stewardship accounting from the Minister of Finance, we should withhold our support of his activities. If he intends to bring down his budget within the next couple of weeks, as we believe he is going to do, let him do so. He can always use that famous section 39 of the Financial Administration Act if he feels like it. He certainly did not hesitate to use it in the past.

However that may be, I want to make it clear that, in my opinion, we are in an extremely difficult financial situation. Our deficit is too large; our interest charge on the public revenue is just incredible—one dollar out of every three we raise goes to pay interest. It is perfectly clear that such a process cannot long continue. Having made that protest and having offered that warning or prophecy with respect to our future position, I will take my place with an uneasy mind with respect to the management of the public finances of Canada.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin has shared with us some of his concerns and some of the information we received from the minister in committee today. I think, in essence, Senator Roblin's concern is for the lack of detail as to the use of the second part of the bill, namely, the $14 billion interim borrowing authority being sought.

• (1430)

To share with honourable senators the answers given by the minister this morning, the minister in effect agreed with Senator Roblin. He said that he would much sooner be asking for this borrowing authority on a final basis, and would prefer not to be asking for it until he has presented his budget.

He explained that there were certain delays in the House of Commons regarding Bill C-139; that he had undertaken his portfolio with the intention of ensuring that all tax changes necessary from previous budgets would be cleaned up so that he would have a clean slate. But because of the delay with Bill C-139, and other delays, he had to ask for what he is asking for in Part II of this bill, the $14 billion interim borrowing authority.

He undertook that before June he would bring a full borrowing authority bill before Parliament. Obviously, the $14 billion that is being asked for between now and June will not be adequate in view of his estimates and predictions as to the size of financial requirements, as underlined by Senator Roblin.

As the minister said today, as soon as a budget is brought down—and he stated to the committee that he expected an announcement would be made this afternoon as to the date of the budget—he will bring before Parliament a full borrowing authority bill.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Would you mind repeating that?

Senator Frith: Certainly. He said that he would bring in a full borrowing authority bill before June. I want that to be clearly understood. That is important in assessing what Senator Roblin has said, because a good deal of the concern Senator Roblin has is shared by all of us, because in order to debate properly the question of borrowing authority it must be set in the context of a budget, the five-year predictions, expected revenues, and in the whole frame of the budget. So the minister is now asking only for interim authority, borrowing authority to take him to June.

As I said earlier, he is asking for this interim authority to implement a borrowing plan and debt plan, and it is essential that that be done in an orderly way. The use of section 39 is not an adequate way of doing so. When he presents a full borrowing authority bill to Parliament, it can then debate, examine and consider it in the context of the budget which, it is hoped, will contain the information that Senator Roblin has asked for.

Since it does not seem that there is a serious difficulty with regard to Part I, the $5 billion—because that is the completion of 1982-83—I urge honourable senators to grant the minister's request for the $14 billion between now and June, knowing that we will have all the information we need to judge the full borrowing after the budget proposals for 1983-84 are laid before Parliament.

I ask honourable senators to support the bill on third reading.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I believe that some comments on what Senator Frith said would be in order, especially regarding Part II of the Bill where the senator insisted—and I do not think that in the other place they were as emphatic about this point—that it is an interim borrowing authority. I like the way he uses the word "interim" and "interim borrowing". According to the Minister, it is supposed to cover the period until the end of June. If the Minister had brought down a budget, he could have indicated at the same time how much the Government would need to borrow for the financial year starting the day after tomorrow. I have just been informed that the Minister has announced that he will be bringing down his budget on April 19, in about two weeks. I think it is rather odd that the Government should be seeking a borrowing authority of $14 billion to cover a period of two weeks. The Minister could have waited and given us a clear indication of what he wanted for the current financial year after explaining exactly what the financial situation was and all the implications thereof. This does not make sense.

• (1435)

Perhaps it is because the Government has run out of money. Today, The Citizen announced that the Government would not be able to pay RCMP salaries due this week until next Tuesday. Whether the story is true or not, I do not know. Has the Government really run out of money? Is it going to use funds allocated for the year ending tomorrow evening to pay the members of the Force? What is going on here?

The Minister explained in committee that he had already used up a substantial portion of the borrowing authority provided under the Bill, pursuant to a provision of the Financial Administration Act. The Government seems to be in complete disarray as far as the administration of its finances is concerned. What they are trying to do is to hide the truth, confuse Canadians and put up a smoke screen to hide the Government's complete disarray and failure to act in fiscal matters.

One thing is clear in any event. This Government will leave us with a terrifying debt burden. No one will be able to change that if he has to work with the same party and the same people who ordered these measures in the other place and in the Senate. Only a radical change in Government would make it possible to remedy gradually, and with great difficulty, a situation that has now become a disaster. Unfortunately, that is the burden the Conservative Party stands to inherit, eventually. And this has happened because the Government was able to rely on the slavish and docile attitudes of its Members.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

[English]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, may I ask my honourable friend how many times he expects to speak on third reading? He spoke when he moved third reading. I made my speech. He ignored the fact that he had spoken on the first occasion and rose to speak a second time. I made no objection at that time because I wanted to hear what he had to say, although I believe his speaking a second time is not within our rules. He is now attempting to make a third speech. This is not Committee of the Whole; this is the Senate sitting in consideration of third reading. One speech is all that each honourable senator is entitled to make on third reading.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: I agree that the intervention of my colleague does not deserve a reply.

Senator Flynn: No one else may reply anyway.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., that this bill be read the third time.

Is it your pleasure honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

• (1440)

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Bonnell
Anderson	Bosa
Argue	Cameron
Austin	Cottreau
Barrow	Davey
Benidickson	Denis

Deschatelets	Lucier
Frith	McGrand
Graham	McIlraith
Haidasz	Molgat
Hastings	Neiman
Lafond	Olson
Langlois	Riel
Lapointe	Rizzuto
Leblanc	Rousseau
Le Moyne	Sparrow
Lewis	Stollery—34.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Beaubien	Marshall
Bielish	Murray
Cook	Nurgitz
Flynn	Phillips
Macdonald	Roblin
Macquarrie	Tremblay—12.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

• (1450)

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, March 30, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill C-141, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, March 29, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 19, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, although I did not hear it directly, I am informed that the Minister of Finance intends to present his budget in the House of Commons on the evening of April 19. For that reason, it occurred to me that it would be better to adjourn until 2 o'clock on that date rather than 8 o'clock. Considering the debate today, I know that some honourable senators will be especially interested in hearing what the minister has to say.

As for the date of April 19 rather than April 11, which is the date on which the House of Commons returns in accordance with its newly established rules, I believe that that is an appropriate date. We do not expect to have legislation from the House of Commons that week, or, if so, it is not likely to be of such an urgent nature that we will be required to come back. Of course, if it is, His Honour has the power within the rules to call the Senate back.

It is for that reason, honourable senators, that I propose that we adjourn until Tuesday, April 19, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the motion speaks for itself, but there are other implications in it. There is, first, the implication that we will not have a new session, since the budget speech is going to take place on April 19, as I had the honour of informing the Senate first.

• (1500)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): You were on your feet.

Senator Flynn: I was on my feet, but you were too slow. You should have been on your feet first.

In any event, that is the implication. Of course, if we had known that there was to be no new session on the eleventh or soon thereafter, we might have arranged our timetable differently; but this being the case, it is obvious that we do not need to come back. It is not the usual practice of the House of Commons, when it comes back, to adopt bills very quickly. It usually takes a little time for the house to get moving. Recently they sent us five bills in four days, but none during the preceding month. We were therefore in a situation where we had to deal with all these bills in rather too hasty a fashion. It is quite obvious that the motion of the deputy leader is the only one that could be made under the circumstances.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition has prefaced his comments with the proviso, "if we had known." I can tell him that it would have been far easier for the government to plan the legislative program, including such things as prorogation and the beginning of a new session, if we had known, too. I do not think the government expected, way back at the end of 1982, that it was going to take us so long to get through the legislative items that have come over from the House of Commons in the last few days. It certainly did not come as any surprise to honourable senators, because with one exception every one of those bills was known to both sides in the other place and to members on both sides in this place.

Senator Flynn: You still do not know when you want to finish the session, so your argument does not stand at all.

Senator Olson: We do know, though, the pieces of legislation that are required urgently—that is not quite the right word.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Indeed, it is not.

Senator Olson: No, it is not, and the opposition never seems to take that word "urgently" very seriously. There are some pieces of legislation—Bill C-139 is one example, and Bill C-143 is another—that are required for the public service of Canada. There is no question about that.

Senator Flynn: They are passed now.

Senator Olson: That is right; but the Leader of the Opposition is raising the matter of whether we had known that there was not going to be a prorogation, a new session, and a speech from the throne.

Senator Flynn: You could have told us.

Senator Olson: No, I could not have told you, because it is still possible for the government to decide to have a new session on April 11. They could prorogue Parliament between now and then and call a new session. That is still possible.

Senator Flynn: Don't add to the confusion.

Senator Olson: I am sorry if the facts confuse my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: He says he is confused and does not want you to add to it.

Senator Olson: I understood that, and that is why I said I am sorry if further facts confuse him. That is what I wanted to say, in any event. If I did not do so, I am sorry.

Senator Flynn: That is a reflection of your own thoughts.

Senator Olson: I do not really see any point in pursuing this. The Leader of the Opposition knows that he wanted to have a little grievance about a couple of things. He cannot have much to grieve about, because the Senate and all its committees have done a good job in the public interest, which we are dedicated to serving, by dealing with these bills in the time available. Whether we have a new session or a continuation of this session some time in April, is for the government and the Prime Minister to decide; but at the moment I cannot announce that there will be a new session because I do not know whether that decision has been made.

Senator Flynn: You do not know much. There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, assuming we are still in the present session at the time we resume, since the motion calls for the Senate to sit at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, will the deputy leader take note that the Subcommittee on National Defence has a firm date with the minister and members of his staff on that day, probably in the latter part of the afternoon?

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators. I will see to it that the proper motion is accordingly put before the Senate.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I want to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in connection with this matter.

Assuming, as appears to be possible and perhaps even probable, that the delivery of the budget on April 19 is based on the continuation of this session beyond that date, could the Leader of the Government please arrange to explain to the Senate, when it reconvenes on the afternoon of the nineteenth, by what right the government is authorized to deliver a budget for the consideration of the House of Commons without having a throne speech?

My understanding of the long-estabished, traditional practice—established well before Confederation and continued ever since—is that the government must submit a throne speech at the opening of a session of Parliament, and then, when it has the vote of confidence from the House of Commons that is required—we are not involved in that procedure here—it is enabled to submit its program for the consideration of that body, and, of course, by us following upon that.

Since there was a throne speech at the beginning of this session, and a budget which took a very long time to present, 16 or 17 months, I do not understand what right the government has to submit a new budget without a throne speech at the beginning of a new session, with the house having passed on it. The House might reject the right of the government to submit its legislation.

I should like to have a full answer on this question, because even in wartime, when there were occasionally two budgets, there was always well established authority, because of the war emergency.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, because of the long experience of Senator McIlraith, I think he raises the question seriously.

Senator Flynn: Take it seriously yourself.

Senator Olson: I am being very serious. There has been more than one budget in this session, which started on Monday, April 14, 1980. During the course of this Parliament a number of tests have been made in the other chamber as to whether or not the government enjoyed the confidence of a majority of that chamber. Right after the budget, normally, there is a series of motions that are considered to be votes of confidence. If my memory serves me correctly, I expect that there will be a vote within two days in this case, and another one about five or six days after the budget comes in.

Senator McIlraith: You are not addressing the point.

Senator Olson: I understand the point very clearly. In any event, I would have to get an answer on what legal authority the government has acted. There is no question on that in my mind, but I have not got it all written out here in front of me. I understand the implications of the question, however.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

NOTICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I crave your indulgence to mention something that Senator Hicks asked me to bring forward at the time of the adjournment motion, or after it was adopted.

His message is about the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. Senator Hicks says that honourable senators should be reminded that applications to attend the June 16 to 20 meeting at the Minaki Lodge must be completed by April 13. As of today only seven senators have applied. We are entitled to seven members of the delegation but we need some leeway, to choose some alternate delegate.

● (1510)

Therefore he asks that any members of that worthy organization please get in their applications before April 13.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ISSUANCE OF SALARY CHEQUES

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with regard to Bill C-143, can the Leader of the Government say something about the article in the press today to the effect that members of the RCMP cannot get their pay before next Monday because the government is out of funds?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to check that out and ascertain whether or not there is any foundation to that story. I do not believe there is. While the government has indeed run down the account somewhat and made some borrowings under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, I do believe that there are sufficient funds to pay the accounts. There may be some other reason. I cannot provide an answer off the top of my head as to whether authorization has or has not been made. The story is probably without foundation. I believe the other authorization to the Solicitor General's Department, for what appears to be payment of salaries for the RCMP, has been made.

Senator Flynn: When the Leader of the Government replies, the problem will have been cured.

YUKON TERRITORY

GULF OIL APPLICATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning the Yukon North Slope and the application by Gulf Oil for the Stokes Point site.

As the Leader of the Government is aware, under Order in Council P.C., 1978-2195, those lands were withdrawn and set aside for a park, or at least a wilderness area, and were not to be used for other purposes.

Can the minister give us further information on whether the government will decide on this matter shortly, and on any negotiations that are taking place? The native people of the area are very concerned, particularly the Mackenzie Delta Dene Regional Council, who have written to the government in this regard.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice and will obtain details on whether there have been any developments with respect to that matter. If I have a complete reply—as I usually try to have—before April 19, I shall communicate it to the honourable senator directly.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That would not absolve the minister of the duty of reporting to this house.

Senator Olson: Not at all.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Leader of the Government at this time, particularly having in mind the occasion that we shall be celebrating this weekend. My question pertains to the four inmates who are still held in custody under the procedure of the National Parole Board. Honourable senators will realize that that procedure has now been found illegal by the Supreme Court of Ontario, the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and the Appeal Division of the Federal Court. Seven of those inmates have been released and four remain in custody.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Would he call on that great reservoir of goodwill, charity and compassionate understanding that I know he has and encourage the government to instruct the National Parole Board to release those men, according to law, under mandatory supervision?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice, as I know that Senator Hastings is keenly interested in this problem. I know that he had some discussion this morning with the Minister of Justice. This matter is with the Solicitor General's Department, but I can give him an undertaking that I will convey that message on an urgent and indeed, as he described, on a compassionate basis.

AIRLINES

EASTERN CANADA—DECLINE IN PASSENGER TRAFFIC

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Rowe on December 1, 1982, respecting air travel statistics in eastern Canada for the six months ending November 30, 1982. I cannot plead that it is a long answer, so I shall read it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If it contains only figures—

Senator Olson: It is relatively short. Perhaps honourable senators would prefer to have it appear in Hansard as though it had been read?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Senator Rowe inquired on December 1, 1982 about air travel in eastern Canada. The Department of Transport regrets that the specific information sought will not be available until late 1983, due to the statistical reporting system.

The information now available indicates that EPA's overall scheduled passenger traffic declined by about 9 per cent for the 11-month period ending November 30, 1982, compared to a year earlier. Air Canada's overall scheduled passenger traffic declined by about 7 per cent during the same period. It is expected that major Canadian air carriers will have an 11 per cent decline in 1982 from the previous year.

The cause of these declines is believed to be the general economic downturn, rather than air carriers pricing themselves out of individual markets.

TRANSPORT

MANITOBA—VIA RAIL SERVICE FROM WINNIPEG TO MINAKI-FARLANE AREA

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Roblin on February 15, 1983, concerning VIA Rail service Winnipeg-Farlane and contact with Winnipeg to Farlane Camping and Recreational Association. The answer is not particularly long, and I can read it or have it taken as read.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It can be taken as read, honourable senators, because VIA Rail sent me a copy of the correspondence some time ago and I have received the answer.

Senator Olson: Then I ask that it be taken as read, so that it may appear in Hansard.

(The answer follows:)

Senator Roblin inquired on February 15, 1983, about the lack of cooperation from VIA Rail in relation to complaints from the Winnipeg to Farlane Camping & Recreational Association.

As Senator Roblin noted, there has in fact been voluminous correspondence between VIA Rail and the association. On February 4, 1983, the President of VIA Rail, Mr. Franche, offered the association a meeting with VIA Rail's regional vice-president to again review the association's concerns. The meeting was held in Winnipeg on February 25, 1983.

VIA Rail indicates that it has little flexibility in making changes to this service as it is bound by a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission which specifies the levels of service to be provided. The CTC held hearings in 1982, at which the views of the association were fully presented, before arriving at its decision. Nonetheless, VIA Rail has informed the association that it will be able to offer four additional weekend train services for campers in 1983. It is hoped that this will at least partially respond to the concerns of the association.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

EXTENSION OF LINES OF CREDIT TO OPEC MEMBER STATES

Question No. 69 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Orville H. Phillips:

1. What are the terms of agreement involving the Government of Canada or any Crown Corporation, including the Export Development Corporation, in the extension of lines of credit to OPEC member states?

2. What are the interest rates charged on present and completed loan agreements made to those member states?

Reply by the Minister of State (International Trade):

Export Development Corporation states that:

(1) It has one line of credit extended to an OPEC member state, as of February 16, 1982. The line of credit in an amount of Cdn. $1.2 billion is to Algeria to finance 85 per cent of the sale price of Canadian goods and services sold to Algerian buyers by Canadian exporters.

(2) As a matter of general policy the corporation does not disclose details of transactions such as that which is the subject of the present request. As to the rate of interest, in view of the intense competition that prevails among countries in foreign trade, it is not in the public interest for the Export Development Corporation to discuss its participation in export transactions or proposed export transactions. Such information would assist an exporter's competitors both foreign and domestic. Since information on bids, participation or negotiations is given by companies to EDC in confidence, the corporation, to respect that confidence, refrains until the sale arrangements are final, from discussing a deal or even from indicating that it has been approached in a transaction. EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions when the financing agreement therefor is signed, and, on request, in credit and foreign investment insurance cases where the exporter or investor consents to publication. If the exporter or investor has not given its consent the reply will so state. When EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions it does not, because of the intense competition above-mentioned, publish the rate of interest, for the reasons mentioned.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-141, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I simply want to say for the record that the bill was studied in committee, but that we are not fully satisfied that our study was anything but superficial. However, we did take into consideration the study of the bill made by the House of Commons committee. The committee heard senior civil servants as well as members of the Human Rights Commission and spokesmen for the Department of Justice. Through his officials, the minister gave us the assurance that, generally speaking, the bill meets the expectations of the interested parties—who benefit, if you will, from the legislative provisions of the bill—as well as those of the members of the Human Rights Commission.

Under the circumstances, we agreed that the committee should not hold up the bill any longer. We do not feel that we could have done a lot more by delaying the committee report until after the Easter recess.

With this type of legislation, we usually find out through experience whether the wording is appropriate or not. There is no doubt that everyone agrees with the principle behind this Bill. Its purpose is to protect people against discriminatory practices. The Bill is obviously praiseworthy and has received unanimous support. The problem is whether, in each specific case, the text of the legislation meets the particular problems that the legislators wanted to solve. In many cases, there are a few question marks. We cannot find an answer for the moment. Only experience will show what should perhaps be changed. In this area, we know that the Government, at the request of parliamentarians and members of the Human Rights Commission and all the groups concerned, is always willing to make the required changes as the need for them becomes apparent. In view of the circumstances, we have no objection to this Bill receiving third reading and royal assent today even though it reached us only yesterday.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Flynn's comments. I simply want to add that, even though we have not had a lot of time to consider this Bill, the review by the Committee is rather striking.

Senator Flynn: Interesting.

Senator Frith: Yes, but I particularly wish to express my admiration for our colleague, Senator Tremblay, who gave us a rather well-documented analysis in committee.

Within the context mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, he gave a certain caveat or warning to the public servants and others who were there at the time. He said that, with their experience, they would have to be careful about some of the problems he had mentioned in determining whether the text of this specific legislation really expressed the principle of the Bill. Once again, on behalf of the government, and especially of the committee, I wish to thank Senator Tremblay.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[English]

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

March 30, 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th day of March, 1983, at 4.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,

Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2).

An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4).

An Act to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions.

An Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof.

An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

An Act to revive Polyventreprise Ltée and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Lloyd Francis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting was resumed.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the Senate, I would like to wish you all, on behalf of the government, a very happy Easter and I hope to see you back in about two weeks.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 19, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 19, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-136, respecting small business investment grants.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-142, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock this afternoon, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1410)

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I should like some information with respect to it. The motion refers to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, but does it relate to the proposed meeting of the Subcommittee on National Defence?

Senator Frith: I believe so, honourable senators. If I am not mistaken, the Minister of National Defence intends to appear before that committee this afternoon. An appointment was made sometime ago.

I thank Senator Roblin for underlining the fact that it is a meeting of the Subcommittee on National Defence.

Senator Roblin: I should like to be clear on that because the committee really operates as two separate entities, one relating to foreign affairs proper, and the other relating to concerns of national defence. It is important to know which committee my honourable friend is talking about. I am taking it from what he said that he is quite firm that it is the Subcommittee on National Defence that is referred to.

• (1415)

Senator Frith: Yes. There is really no reason for not stating whether it is the committee or the subcommittee, but I do not think subcommittees have any official status under our rules. For example, they have to report through the main committee. I will ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Defence if I am correct in saying that it is his subcommittee that wishes to meet this afternoon.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, the Subcommitee on National Defence is meeting this afternoon. This is all the more reason why the Subcommittee on National Defence should become a special committee of the Senate on national defence as opposed to being a subcommittee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: I am glad to have given the chairman of that subcommittee an opportunity to insert a commercial in the proceedings today.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, he put me up to it.

Senator Frith: Then, I will add my appreciation for Senator Roblin's usual candor.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit tomorrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1983, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

I might add that the permission would be granted to the Subcommittee on Estimates.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is no mention in the motion as to when this committee has permission to meet. Perhaps the mover of the motion gave a time and I did not hear it.

We have had some discussions recently about what we should do on Wednesdays, the idea being that to avoid a clash we make use of Wednesday evening. I should like to know whether it is the intention of the government that we should sit tomorrow afternoon or sit tomorrow evening. The answer to that question would have some bearing upon this motion. In any case, I think the motion ought to say when the committee intends to meet.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the permission that is required by the rules is just to meet notwithstanding that the Senate might be sitting at the same time. However, that should not prevent our taking advantage of the opportunity to announce also the time of the committee meeting so that honourable senators are so advised. In this case the committee meeting is set for 1.30 in the afternoon, but the permission that is needed, as I said, is just to meet notwithstanding that the Senate might then be sitting.

I believe that the committee we are concerned with here is the Subcommittee on Estimates.

As to the question of sitting tomorrow afternoon, Senator Roblin is quite right that we have launched an experiment to sit on Tuesday evening, Wednesday evening, if necessary, leaving Wednesday afternoon free for committees to meet and then Thursday afternoon. In order to accommodate some speakers on the two bills that we have before us now, we intend to ask the Senate to sit tomorrow afternoon as an exception to the rule, and the rule is not thereby considered to be changed. We will continue to try to give committees the opportunity to meet on Wednesday afternoons and not to have the Senate sitting then. If it is necessary to sit on Wednesdays, our proposal was that we sit on Wednesday evenings.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, this raises another question. Suppose the Senate sits tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock and does not sit in the evening, and we have agreed to permit the committee to meet while the Senate is sitting, does that mean that honourable senators who are attending the committee meeting have to skip out and come in here in order to have their attendance recorded, or may they give their attention to the business of the committee and have their attendance in the Senate counted for that day?

● (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, convenient though the alternative suggestion is, I am afraid there is no way that it can be implemented under the applicable rules and provisions. Therefore, if honourable senators want to get their attendance, they will either "skip out," as Senator Hicks has said, or they will hope that the committee will finish its business before the Senate rises, in which case senators will, I am sure, come directly from the committee meeting to the Senate.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, surely attendance at a committee meeting is considered to be public business and senators would, therefore, be excused from Senate attendance. Perhaps some senators, as a matter of convenience, walk through the Senate to have their attendance taken because it is sometimes more convenient to do that than to write a letter explaining that they could not attend because they were on public business. My point, however, is that if honourable senators are absent from the Senate because they are attending a committee meeting, they are counted as being here for all practical purposes.

Senator Frith: Perhaps some honourable senators are not familiar with the alternative that Senator Godfrey has quite correctly suggested; namely, writing a letter instead of "skipping out," "skipping in," or "skipping through." I am sure that if a letter were written stating that the senator was attending a committee meeting, there would be no question but that that would be considered public business, bearing in mind what qualifies as public business.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am sure I will have no trouble attending the sitting of the Senate at 2 o'clock, because I think that the Senate comes before committee meetings. This discussion does underlie, I think, the unnecessary awkwardness of the arrangement that is proposed. The committee has no doubt made a prior engagement with its witness—who is a very interesting one, and it will pain me to miss him—but surely all of our recent discussions were aimed at getting around this sort of problem by simply not having a meeting scheduled at the same time as the Senate is supposed to sit. The means whereby this can be done have been explored and, I will not repeat them.

I do not intend to vote against this motion. I simply say that to propose that the committee meeting clash with the sitting of the Senate is a completely unnecessary imposition on the house; it is unnecessary; it should not happen; and, in my view, my honourable friend ought to think again.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I believe this committee quite often meets at 1.30 p.m. on days when the Senate is scheduled to sit. Senator Roblin is saying, in effect, that he has not found persuasive anything we have said as a reason for an exception to our experiment. I understand his viewpoint, but it is an exception. In that context, I ask for support of the motion.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS—RESPONSIBILITY FOR CANADAIR LTD.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before asking the first question, I wish to say that the Leader of the Government is looking very fit and youthful this afternoon. I am not sure to what he would ascribe this—I almost said "improvement" but I do not know whether that is a fair word to use, so let me say "change in his appearance". At any rate, with or without his beard, we are happy to see him. I must say that, if he wants my vote, he looks in excellent form this afternoon—well able to deal with any questions we might ask.

I wonder if the minister of state in charge of the CDIC would like to deal with some of the questions that I have no doubt he is expecting from the opposition this afternoon. Perhaps I should begin by trying to clarify his position.

Recently—I think it was around the turn of the year—by some sleight of order in council and before any reference to Parliament had been made, the government decided that there should be established an organization called the CDIC. In respect of that, I would like to know what responsibility the minister accepts for the CDIC, and, in turn, what responsibility the CDIC accepts for the goings-on at Canadair which have received such unfavourable notice in the last few days.

● (1425)

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, first, I thank Senator Roblin for acknowledging that I am here and am ready, willing and very able to respond to questions about the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

The corporation was established by Canada Development Corporation and was transferred to the Government of Canada, which then, by orders in council, under existing parliamentary authority, enabled CDIC to commence business operations in the nature of acting as the holder of shares and/or investment advisor with respect to, first of all, the shares of Canada Development Corporation, which are under its act held by me, and thereafter—and I am now speaking of late November 1982—shares in Massey-Ferguson, in Eldorado, in Canadair and in de Havilland. I hold ministerial responsibility for Teleglobe, and I am advised in that respect by CDIC.

I am somewhat puzzled by the phrase Senator Roblin used, "sleight of order in council." There is nothing "sleight" about these orders in council. They constitute a standard method by which governments, under authority Parliament has given to the executive, perform their duties in respect of their public responsibilities.

With regard to Canada Development Investment Corporation, I am the minister responsible and I answer for that corporation in Parliament.

As for Canadair, the shares of which are held by CDIC, I am the minister responsible, and I answer for that corporation also in Parliament. I might add that the responsibility for Canadair was given to CDIC, and consequently to me, in the last week of November 1982. The purpose of the government was to enhance its understanding and control of the financial and business affairs of Canadair, which were becoming of increasing concern, particularly in the business environment which was manifesting itself throughout the world in 1982, causing a pervasive slow-up in the western industrial economy, and consequently, as one of its features, a real retrogression of the ability of Canadair and other companies in the world which were manufacturing similar aircraft to market those aircraft.

Accordingly, I wish Senator Roblin and other honourable senators to understand that CDIC is a method used by the government for achieving more intense financial and business management of the affairs of Canadair.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not going to follow the minister down his interesting path with regard to "sleight of order in council," because he knows as well as I do that it is necessary that the activities of his department, and of CDIC, receive the approbation of Parliament. He has made that statement before and has promised us a bill, although we have not had it yet, and God knows when we will; but that does not alter the fact that it would have been far more appropriate, in the interests of the proper conduct of public business, to get the statute and the approval of Parliament first, and the orders in council and the manipulations of the government, if those have to continue, afterwards. However, I am going to leave that because we will have a chance to debate those matters when the legislation comes before the house. I do not think, however, that the minister should try to hide behind that particular situation. Perhaps he is not trying to hide behind it, but I will find out.

The minister received the responsibility for Canadair in November 1982; but perhaps he would have been a little more frank if he had told us that the government had the responsibility long before that. Canadair has been a public corporation for a long time. Government money of heroic proportions has been invested in this company—about $1.3 billion according to one count, and nearly $2 billion according to another. So it is quite clear that there is government responsibility that encompasses not only the minister's association in November 1982 but before that. So it is in the hands of the government.

● (1430)

I want to ask the minister some specific questions about the present condition of this company. Is it true that 25 per cent or a substantial percentage of its order book has been examined and found to be perhaps unjustified, so that the order book of this company is fuller than it has previously appeared? Is it true that sales were so difficult to make that bribery had to be resorted to in Alaska? That is a question on which the minister should be prepared to give us some information.

Is it true that the government will refuse in the Senate—I know what they have done in the House of Commons—to have the affairs of this company brought before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which is in charge of Auditor General's reports and the finances of the government generally, so that there may be a full accounting as to what has been taking place in this company?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin uses the technique of saying that he will not go down certain paths of inquiry, and then he goes down them, obliging me to travel a certain distance with him.

First, I renew the undertaking I have given to bring a bill before Paliament respecting CDC and CDIC. The bill is being examined by the law officers of the Crown and I hope to have it shortly. The house leader in the other place has advised his opposite number in the official opposition, and also the other opposition party, that the legislation is a priority for the government. It will be introduced and, hopefully, passed before the end of June 1983.

The honourable senator overlooks—I am sure that is all it is—my previous answers concerning the current role of CDIC and the possible roles for CDIC following parliamentary approval. The government, in giving CDIC an operating role in the financial and business management sector with respect to some of its current investment holdings, is acting in accordance with its existing authority and need not come before Parliament to ask Parliament to do twice what Parliament has already done once.

Senator Roblin: Then why are you doing it?

Senator Austin: In other words, the government has the authority to manage the assets it now owns. It has asked CDIC to carry out what will be a better method of management in the judgment of the government.

With respect to what will be requested of Parliament in the bill, that is in the nature of CDIC having an enhanced mandate to facilitate the performance of the Canadian-owned private sector under circumstances which will be described in the bill. In simple terms, it means that Parliament will be asked also to allow CDIC to participate in limited acquisitions of equity now in the private sector. However, I have assured a committee in the other place, and, I believe, I have said previously in this chamber, that CDIC will not be given work beyond currently-owned government assets until Parliament has given its approval of the enlarged mandate. I believe that deals with the first part of Senator Roblin's editorial views.

Senator Roblin: What kind of views?

Senator Austin: Editorial views.

Quite frankly, I am startled by Senator Roblin's comment that I had not been frank in admitting that the government owned Canadair before I became the minister responsible. I believe it is very much on the public record that the government has held the shares of Canadair for a good period of time, and other ministers have been responsible for Canadair in the past. So why I should state the obvious is beyond me, though sometimes I suppose it is necessary in order to make things clear to the other side.

● (1435)

With respect to Senator Roblin's specific question regarding the order book of Canadair, that is one of the key questions in the investigation by CDIC of Canadair's affairs. There are others that are also under close investigation and I am hopeful of making a report to the appropriate parliamentary committee some time before the end of June 1983—that is to say, some time before this session ends. The responsibility I want to discharge is one of careful analysis and elucidation of the affairs of Canadair. I do not want to react in any unadvised and ill-considered way with respect to the financial and business difficulties which that company has been experiencing.

I want to make clear to honourable senators that the Government of Canada is committed to Canadair, the aircraft industry and the technology of this industry. We do not intend to cancel the Canadair Challenger program in the way in which the Avro Arrow was cancelled by the Diefenbaker government, because we believe that the Challenger is an excellent technical product and that the training and skills of the people of Canadair are an asset to this country.

I want to refer specifically to this objective of the government because I think that members of Parliament and members in the media will ill-serve this country if they blacken internationally and commercially a quality product of Canadian business. I distinguish between the technical quality of the aircraft and perhaps issues of financial and business management within Canadair which, as I have already said, are part of a very careful investigation and which I will be sharing with Parliament as soon as I am satisfied that the facts are established and the analysis is clear.

It is not well taken for Senator Roblin to use phrases such as "resort to bribery in Alaska." There is no evidence that I have seen that Canadair, as a corporation, or any employee of that company, has been linked to any question of bribery in Alaska. Until someone brings me evidence of such a case, and is willing to stand in the Senate or in the other place and make charges against some individual, I do not think it is proper to make innuendoes. Therefore, I do not propose to respond in any other way to that reference.

Finally, I want to make clear, as I have in this rather extensive answer brought on by Senator Roblin's several comments and questions, that there is no intention whatever, by me as the minister responsible, or by the Government of Canada of holding back on the financial and business situation with respect to Canadair. The matter will be brought forward for examination and determination by Parliament. Through that examination and determination I will seek the renewed confidence of Parliament in the technology of that particular industry.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, the minister has made a number of interesting points. I shall not comment upon all of them but certainly on some of them. With respect to the bribery, the minister stated that he does not know who committed the crime. Why does he not read the newspapers, in which he will find that there have been some convictions in Alaska with respect to the crime? The person whose name is linked with this is a Mr. Larsen, who is the sole representative in the United States for the sale of the CL-215 water bomber.

• (1440)

I hardly think it irresponsible of me to raise in this chamber a matter which is in the public domain, in respect of which serious questions of probity and proper conduct have been raised. If the minister had told me that he intended to have the law officers of the Crown investigate this matter, perhaps I would have been satisfied; but for him to rebuke me and say that it is unfitting or unseemly—or whatever expression he used—for me to report to this chamber a piece of news which is available to all of the citizens of both Canada and the United States, if they care to pay attention to it, is to my mind an absurdity. I guess we will let the absurdity lie where it deserves to lie.

With respect to the other matters, the minister really typifies, in a way, the attitude of his government towards its responsibilities. A matter has been raised in a public forum, namely, on the public television screens of the nation, with respect to certain goings-on in Air Canada—

An Hon. Senator: Canadair.

Senator Roblin: Canadair. Thank you. I certainly do not want to mix those two up, because I do not think I should like to criticize Air Canada in that way.

The fact is that the matter has been on the television screens. The minister says to us, and these are his words. When I am satisfied as to what the facts are, I will bring some information to the house. When did he constitute himself as the judge in this matter? Public funds are involved in this matter. Parliament is the area in which the decision should be made.

Far too often we find the administration, the executive, the cabinet, with respect to a matter which is clearly within the purview of Parliament, namely, the expenditure of public funds, saying, "If we decide that you should look into it, we will let you know."

What happens if my friend is not satisfied there is any prima facie case in this matter? Are we not to hear any more about it? Why does my honourable friend not allow the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to look into this matter? It is competent to do so, in every respect.

I must tell him that, while I appreciate his efforts to make sure that we do not go haring down any blind trails, or that we do not go getting ourselves involved in activities that will unfairly prejudice the achievements of Canadian technicians in building a very good aircraft—and I have to believe that that is what it is—there is another area of responsibility altogether, and that is one of management. That is where the minister is supposed to be taking an interest, and that is where the control of the funds is involved.

Technicians in Canadair do not control the funds; they deal with the funds given to them. The government controls the funds and, theoretically—and, in my mind, I underline the word "theoretically—it is Parliament that has control of the funds.

So I say to my honourable friend that, if he wants to discharge his duty in the way I think would be appropriate, he will see that Parliament is allowed—allowed, if you please—by the executive to look into the affairs that are in dispute at the moment, and he will agree that we should not be obliged to wait until the minister is satisfied that perhaps we should have a look at it. That will not do.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, with respect to the first part of Senator Roblin's observations, I want to be clear that it is my understanding regarding questions of alleged bribery in Alaska that in no way has Canadair, or any subsidiary or employee of Canadair, been implicated by any judicial proceedings. Therefore, I do not know what I am asked to answer.

Senator Roblin: Do you want me to tell you?

Senator Austin: Certainly.

Senator Roblin: Well, here it is in the newspaper: Charges. I call them judicial proceedings. I don't know what my honourable friend thinks of them, but charges, to me, are judicial proceedings.

Senator Austin: Charges against whom?

Senator Roblin: Well, I will read them:

> Charges were also laid against three other individuals following an Alaskan grand jury investigation of the affair. The individuals were Michael De Man, an Anchorage businessman, Arthur F. Kelly II, an Anchorage businessman who was a consultant to Canadair, and Mr. Larsen, who was then the sole representative in the United States for the sale of the CL-215 water bomber.

I certainly think those are judicial proceedings.

Senator Austin: Well, perhaps we are playing at the meaning of words. What I am trying to say in substance, Senator Roblin, is that I do not understand whether you are suggesting that Canadair has been implicated in judicial proceedings in the State of Alaska, or whether you are saying you would like to know whether Canadair is in some way implicated. I thought you were asking me the latter question.

What I am saying to you is that I have no information to indicate that Canadair or any employee of the corporation has been in any way implicated. Are you asking me to find out, or are you accepting that statement as consistent with the newspaper article you are reading?

Senator Roblin: Well, I believe the minister when he says he does not know. I think there is a good deal he does not know in connection with this matter. My suggestion is that he should find out.

Senator Austin: In that case we can settle the matter amicably by my saying that I have asked for all the information in the possession of Canadair. As I receive that information I will be better informed.

With respect to the second question, the responsibility of myself as minister to report to Parliament, I have acknowledged it and I will report to Parliament. I said I would report to the appropriate committee. I am not certain at this moment whether that is in this chamber or in the other place, but I will certainly report fully on every aspect of the business and financial matters related to Canadair.

Senator Roblin raises the question of whether the management of Canadair may in some way be questioned in terms of its capabilities. I do not want to point the finger at any individual or group of individuals in Canadair until I have received a full and detailed report from my advisers. I think that that would be unfair. I am certain Senator Roblin would not want me to be unfair or hasty because a question has been raised in public on the matter of Canadair. I acknowledge that the question has been raised by the media. I acknowledge that there are financial and business problems with respect to Canadair.

The Prime Minister said in the other place that we had acquired a company that was in trouble, and had done so for policy reasons. Since then we have had problems of a business kind and of a technical kind with respect to the Challenger, but we have certainly not had any insurmountable technical problems, and I think we have a good aircraft there. I will be very happy to tell the appropriate committee, as soon as I am in a position to do so, what the Canadair story is.

Senator Roblin: I hope the minister will also share his information about the bribery question with this house, too. He did not say that he would, but I am taking it that he will.

When he prepares his answer, I think he had better be prepared to deal with the question of why, when the government took over a company which it knew was in trouble, it seems to have given it so little attention over all these months.

● (1450)

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the minister's confirmation of the federal government's strong commitment to the aircraft industry and to Canadair in particular, I would like to ask the minister whether the government has approved the impending layoff of 570 employees at the Canadair plant in Montreal.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, the government qua government does not approve acts of hiring or acts of layoff. These are matters that are left to CDIC, its management and its board of directors, and I ask them to act in a proper commercial manner with respect to the business affairs of Canadair. I can only say that I have no evidence that they are doing otherwise.

I might also say to Senator Haidasz, since he comes from Toronto, that I have an equal affection and regard for de Havilland.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I have some questions arising out of the answers given to Senator Roblin.

The minister of state responsible for the CDIC stated that Canadair was transferred to that corporation when Canadair became a matter of increasing concern to the government.

My question is: When was the government aware of the severe financial problems facing the crown corporation, and what action was taken prior to transferring Canadair to the dummy corporation, the CDIC?

Senator Austin: I must say to Senator Phillips that I do not understand the reference to "the dummy corporation."

CDIC is an active business and financial management corporation with very senior responsibilities, and I think that at least today Senator Roblin has been taking those business responsibilities seriously, so I will pass to another part of your question.

At the time Canadair was transferred to CDIC, in late November 1982, the government was certainly concerned about the downturn in the business market for the Canadair Challenger and was also concerned about the increasing costs of manufacturing and of maintaining inventory. I cannot give you a precise time prior to November 1982 when those concerns began to mount, but it would be at least several months prior to then. As Senator Phillips knows, the business environment changed quite dramatically. In 1981 it went from a high degree of market performance and world industrial activity to a recession, and Canadair and many other businesses, both government and non-government owned in this country and elsewhere, were dramatically affected in their performance by the change in the world economic environment.

Senator Phillips: I would like to ask a supplementary question. The management appointed by the Honourable Senator Austin has, I believe, instituted a number of changes in the management of the crown corporation. Will he advise the Senate of those changes and the reasons for instituting them?

Senator Austin: The only changes with respect to Canadair since CDIC became responsible for it are the addition to the board of Canadair of the president and chief executive officer of CDIC, Mr. Joel Bell, and the installation at Canadair's headquarters of an employee of CDIC, Mr. Gilbert Bennett, as secretary of the executive committee of Canadair. In addition, consulting services have been retained to examine the financial and operating circumstances of Canadair.

Senator Phillips: If I understood correctly the minister's reply to a previous question, it was several months prior to the takeover by CDIC that the government became aware of the problems, so we can safely assume that the government has been, for at least a year, aware of the severe problems, the severe losses facing Canadair. Surely, the government must have done more than just appoint a member of CDIC to be employed at Canadair? Was a meeting requested by the minister's predecessor with the corporation to discuss its difficulties? Was there any responsibility assumed by anyone for the huge losses facing the public treasury, or did they just say, "Spend it and go and hide"?

Senator Austin: Senator Phillips, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was responsible for Canadair as my immediate predecessor, and he and his department were very active in monitoring the affairs of Canadair and endeavouring to understand the changes in its business circumstances.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: The minister referred to acting in a proper commercial manner, and I am curious to know why, other than the fact that the minister himself is from Vancouver, the head office of CDIC was established in Vancouver when all of the companies it was to control and manage are in eastern Canada. I am speaking now, of course, as a senator from eastern Canada.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, the head office of CDIC is in Vancouver, British Columbia, and its parent and predecessor corporation, the Canada Development Corporation, also had its head office in the city of Vancouver. It is a strange assumption that Senator Godfrey makes that it would be impossible to have a head office in one part of the country and some business activities in another part. There are a number of corporations with head offices in Toronto and Montreal which are able to conduct business quite effectively in British Columbia, in the United States, in Europe and in Asia. Surely, the location of a corporation's head office has no relationship to the ability of that corporation to conduct its business?

Senator Godfrey: I never suggested it was impossible. I merely suggested that, if you were acting in a proper commercial manner, the most convenient and efficient place to locate your head office would have been, as you say, central Canada. When you talk about the Canada Development Corporation, I do not think Mr. Hampson, its president and now chairman, ever moved to Vancouver and, although technically the head office of the Canada Development Corporation is still in Vancouver, in fact it is in Toronto and that is where it has been from the start. The CDC is, moreover, an illustration of the impracticability of operating something from Vancouver when most of the assets that it is now running are in central Canada.

Senator Austin: I do not wish to engage in an extended debate with you, Senator Godfrey. What you and I are doing is defining some of the problems of perception that we have in this Canadian nation.

I come from a community which has some level of commercial and economic expertise. It aspires to grow in that respect, and it is perfectly legitimate for the Government of Canada to encourage the growth of a financial and business environment in my city of Vancouver, as it is in Halifax, Winnipeg, Regina or in any other community outside of the golden triangle. I know that there are some people from the golden triangle who find that idea an odd one. I also know that the ideas of Sir John A. Macdonald and his development policy linger in various parts of central Canada, since he himself was a central Canadian. However, I think he began to escape that attitude after he became a member of Parliament from Victoria, and he is fondly regarded there, I am told, because he began to understand that this country does stretch from sea to sea. Now, in this century there is another sea called the Arctic, and so our country now stretches from sea to sea to sea. All of that area is what we call Canada, and the federal government, being the national government, has a responsibility to act equitably in all parts of it.

• (1500)

Senator Phillips: I am sure that Senator Godfrey is not suggesting that the loss occurring at Canadair is as a result of its headquarters being moved to Vancouver.

Could the minister tell us Canadair's losses when the headquarters were in Toronto, and what the losses are now that its headquarters are located in Vancouver?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, Canadair, to the best of my recollection, has never had its headquarters located anywhere but in the city of Montreal. That has not changed and there is no proposal that that be changed.

Senator Godfrey asked a question with respect to CDIC, and from the beginning of its history—and I referred to CDC—its head office has been located in the city of Vancouver, or has intended to be located in the city of Vancouver.

Senator Phillips: Perhaps I did not express myself clearly. I was referring to the losses which resulted while CDC had its headquarters in Toronto and CDIC had its headquarters in Vancouver.

I have one further question on this subject, honourable senators. Petro-Canada has purchased executive jets. Since Petro-Canada is our national oil company, did Petro-Canada purchase jets manufactured in Canada or jets manufactured in a foreign country?

Senator Austin: I will have to obtain information on Petro-Canada's air fleet and its intentions regarding further acquisitions. I will be happy to relate that information to Senator Phillips when I obtain it.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have a further question relating to Canadair. Would the minister please tell us when he will allow the Auditor General, who does report to Parliament, to audit the books of Canadair?

Senator Austin: I have referred that matter to the government because I understand that the choice of auditors for a Schedule D corporation is a matter of government policy.

As you well know, auditors perform valuable accounting functions and important advisory functions. I have no quarrel with the Auditor General with respect to his responsibilities to Parliament and his desire to report to Parliament, but I have a concern about this because the matter of policy with respect to a so-called comprehensive audit has not yet been settled. That is a matter which the Auditor General is pursuing with interest in terms of federal auditing procedures. That type of audit is essentially an audit of a subjective nature, and determines not only where the money went and how it was used but whether those decisions taken were wise ones.

Consideration is being given in terms of its applicability to CDIC, because the Auditor General not only wants to audit in the conventional way but he wants to audit in the comprehensive way, using that term in the special sense professional auditors use it.

I have asked for examples where similar types of audit take place in the private sector. I have found that there are some questions of concern in terms of recruiting directors and senior employees to corporations subject to such audits because they would be unsure as to which auditing standards would apply, and whether they would be different from those that apply in the private sector. As I said, I have been seeking advice on this.

Senator Roblin: The Auditor General should get good marks on this matter, because in his last report—which is now quite old—he singled out Canadair as being a big risk on the public purse. He stated:

> It is particularly important that reliable information (on their operations) be available to ministers concerned and to Parliament.

Heaven knows that is the truth, and heaven knows, regardless of your comprehensive audit business, you would obtain a plain statement of what the facts are, just as the Auditor General provides for many other organizations of government. I regard the minister's qualifications or hesitations on this matter as being unacceptable. He should tell the Auditor General to go in and do his job, as he does with other crown corporations.

Senator Austin: I agree entirely with the Auditor General's point in the statement you have read relative to Canadair. The purpose of CDIC was essentially to obtain that information, to have control of the information and the methodology for obtaining information, but a reputable firm of private, professional auditors have audited the books of Canadair. I do not believe that those auditors have done a job other than at the highest level of professional qualification.

When I have received an audited statement of Canadair's books, you can rest assured that it will be tabled in this chamber and in the other place. I doubt whether the Auditor General would do a better audit, although I am sure he would do just as well in auditing the affairs of Canadair.

Senator Roblin: Judging from the results, I will take the Auditor General, thank you.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF EVALUATION REPORT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Rowe on March 2 concerning research projects relating to icebergs. It is quite a long answer, so I ask that it be taken as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

> The Ocean Science and Surveys (OSS) sector of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is engaged in a variety of research projects related to sea-ice and icebergs. They can be categorized in the following areas:
>
> (1) Climatology—A description of the distribution, characteristics and properties of ice in all regions of interest is an objective of OSS.
>
> (2) Growth and Decay—In order to develop the capability to forecast local sea ice change, studies of the chemistry, heat flows and the interaction of the ice cover with the adjacent ocean and atmospheric layers are being undertaken.
>
> (3) Ice dynamics—OSS is cooperating with the Atmospheric Environment Service of Environment Canada in the development of a computer model to predict the movement of sea-ice under the influence of oceanic and atmospheric forcing.
>
> (4) Ice Properties—The physical and electrical properties of ice are being studied in order to contribute to the forecasting capability for ice forces on structures and in the interpretation of all-weather ice surveillance by radar and satellite sensors. An ice deformation-pressure program is presently under way in cooperation with the National Research Council at Adams Island. A high frequency (HF) radar surveillance program is sponsored at C-CORE Nfld., and in cooperation with the NCR, a transportable ice physics laboratory has been developed.
>
> (5) Icebergs—There is a great need to understand the trajectories and decay of icebergs on the East Coast. The safety of the offshore drilling and future production facilities are threatened every year by the incidence of icebergs. Programs are underway to investigate the dynamics of the icebergs in relation to the forcing functions of wind and current and the influence of the size and shape of the iceberg itself. The decay of the iceberg is also a result of many factors—ice cover, waves, temperature, et cetera, and data is being collected continuously. For future design of bottom mounted production systems, the keel depths and impacts of icebergs have to be determined and investigated.

ENERGY

DOMESTIC OIL PRICE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Murray on March 15. At that time Senator Murray asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate to outline the federal government's interpretation of the provisions of the September 1, 1981, agreement between the Governments of Canada and Alberta respecting energy pricing.

This answer is also fairly long. If Senator Murray agrees, I suggest that it be taken as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when appearing before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, on March 29, 1983, clearly stated the federal government view regarding price rollbacks. The federal government is of the opinion that, notwithstanding the provisions of the Canada-Alberta Memorandum of Agreement of September 1, 1981 relating to energy pricing and taxation, the statement on oil prices of September 18, 1981, issued by Mr. Lalonde, the then federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, with the concurrence of Mr. Leitch, the then Alberta Minister of Energy, is the official interpretation of the 75 per cent maximum relationship of the domestic oil price to the international price.

I will quote directly from this statement:

—"as indicated in Paragraph 2 of the Memorandum of Agreement, the overall average field price of conventional old oil plus transportation costs to Montreal—adjusted for quality—will never exceed 75 per cent of the actual international price for a similar quality of imported crude oil laid down at Montreal; and —"as indicated in Paragraphs 3(b) and 3(f) of the Memorandum of Agreement, the New Oil Reference Price adjusted to the average of imported crude oil laid down at Montreal will never exceed 100 per cent of the actual price of imported oil."

Honourable senators may recall that this announcement was made due to confusion which arose from an apparent contradiction between paragraphs of the September 1 document, which appear to indicate that there would be no rollback should a situation develop where domestic prices exceeded international prices.

I would like to reiterate that this is the federal government's interpretation of the price "rollback" provision. Unfortunately, it is not one shared by the Province of Alberta. However, the federal Energy Minister has indicated that he has no intention of acting unilaterally and imposing the federal view on producing provinces. We look forward to a continuation of productive discussions on domestic oil and gas pricing with producing provinces.

I have a further delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Roblin concerning the relative retail prices in Canada and the United States of gasoline. There is some detail in this answer, and, if agreeable, I suggest that it be taken as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

According to the latest EMR data, comparing retail gasoline prices in select Canadian and American cities, in January 1983, Winnipeg consumers were paying 35.7 cents per litre for gasoline ($1.62 per Canadian gallon) versus the 38.9 cents per litre ($1.77 per Canadian gallon) being paid by gasoline consumers in Minneapolis. These figures clearly disprove the honourable senator's contention that the Minneapolis gasoline price was 50 cents per gallon less than that being paid in Winnipeg.

However, the government does acknowledge that in some parts of this country gasoline prices do exceed those paid by American consumers. This differential is due largely to the fact that provincial gasoline taxes in Canada are considerably higher than state gasoline taxes in the U.S.

The average Canada-U.S. price gap of 5.5 cents per litre will be narrowed in the near future as a result of an increase, effective April 1, in the U.S. federal tax of 5 cents per U.S. gallon (1.5 cents per Canadian litre), and planned increases in state taxes equivalent to about 3 cents per litre. This will leave Canadian prices slightly higher than U.S. prices because of the provincial tax level.

When price comparisons are made of a commodity such as furnace oil—which is not subjected to the taxes that gasoline attracts—the Canada-U.S. comparison takes on a different perspective. The average Canadian price of heating oil is 30.5 cents per litre. The average U.S. price for this commodity is 39.7 cents per litre.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

NEWFOUNDLAND—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF LIFEBOAT BASES ON WEST COAST

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Finally, honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Marshall on March 29 last regarding the intention of the Department of Transport to locate lifeboat bases along the west coast of Newfoundland, which was promised approximately seven or eight years ago. Since this is also a fairly long answer, I suggest that it be taken as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

As the honourable senator knows, search and rescue (SAR) resources are not unlimited, and are therefore carefully deployed in the areas of greatest need. In 1982, there were 57 incidents off the west coast of Newfoundland, compared to 174 off the northeast coast. Even on the northeast coast, the Coast Guard believes that its facilities need improvement, and it is seeking authority to do so.

SAR resources on the west coast are provided primarily by the Jackman. Although designed as an offshore vessel, the Jackman has responded to several inshore incidents. SAR services are also provided in this area by Coast Guard and Department of Fisheries and Oceans vessels whose primary duties are ice-breaking, tending of navigational aids, fisheries surveillance, et cetera.

In addition, the Canadian Marine Rescue Auxiliary has provided valuable assistance in Newfoundland, participating in 63 missions in 1982. There are now 23 CMRA volunteers in various locations on the west coast, and the Coast Guard is continually seeking additional members.

Finally, as part of the SAR planning process, the Coast Guard will be reviewing requirements for the west coast of Newfoundland, particularly the Daniel's Harbour area, and will consider the installation of a shore-based lifeboat at this location.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS) CONTINUING ASSISTANCE BILL

DOCUMENTS TABLED IN COMPLIANCE WITH UNDERTAKING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have what amounts to a delayed answer, or at least a fulfilment of an undertaking, regarding Bill C-130. In response to a question posed by Senator Roblin, which appears at page 5537 of Debates of the Senate of Tuesday, March 29, 1983, I undertook to provide information regarding les fonds commun, which was one of the organizations referred to in the bill.

If I understood Senator Roblin's request correctly, it was for an updated version of the document so entitled, and also more detailed information on the Common Fund, in particular, to give him an opportunity to consider that from the point of view of wheat as a product, but not only for that purpose.

I suggest that the best way of dealing with this is for me to table two documents attached to a memorandum I have received on the subject. The first document is entitled "Annexe I, Fonds Commun Pour Les Produits de Base." That is further to an annex referred to as annex 6.9, to which I had referred but did not table during the debate on the bill.

The second is a copy of the agreement establishing the Common Fund.

Representatives from CIDA have authorized me to say that they would be glad to arrange a briefing session on the Common Fund for Senator Roblin if he so desires.

Consequently, honourable senators, I table the following:

Document dated 1981 entitled "Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities" issued by the United Nations (English text).

Document entitled "Profil du fonds commun" (French text).

• (1510)

BUDGET SPEECH

ACCOMMODATION FOR SENATORS IN SENATE GALLERY OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as previously announced, the Minister of Finance will deliver his budget speech in the other place at 8 o'clock this evening.

May I be permitted to remind honourable senators that none but senators will be admitted to the Senate Gallery of the House of Commons on this occasion. This step is being taken for the purpose of providing accommodation in the gallery for as many senators as possible. In this manner, senators will not be excluded from the gallery on account of many of the places being occupied by relatives and friends of senators.

May I add that such instructions were first issued in 1931 by the then Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable P. E. Blondin, and that this practice has been followed ever since.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill C-136, respecting small business investment grants.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to present to the Senate Bill C-136, respecting small business investment grants.

As honourable senators will recall, the budget of June 28, 1982 announced an important new program to reduce interest costs for small businesses by a grant of up to 4 per cent for two years on borrowings by small businesses to finance new investment and research and development.

The program was described in the budget as a temporary program being introduced pending a decision on the proposals set out in the discussion paper on inflation and the taxation of personal investment income. Eligibility for the benefits of the temporary assistance program will generally parallel the rules for the recent small business development bond tax program. Eligibility under this program was also extended to farmers, fishermen and other unincorporated businesses.

The temporary assistance program was to apply to loans made to small businesses by financial institutions if the proceeds of the loans were used to finance purchases of new depreciable property to be used in an active business in Canada after June 28, 1982 and before March 31, 1983, or to finance expenditures on scientific research during the same period.

The total amount of eligible loans to a business or related group of businesses which could qualify for the interest subsidy is limited to $500,000, and each qualifying loan must be at least $10,000.

The maximum 4-per-cent-a-year grant is payable in respect of higher loans subject to an interest rate of 16 per cent a year or higher, and no grant is payable when the interest rate on the small business investment grant loan is 12 per cent a year or less. Between the 16 per cent per annum and the 12 per cent per annum rates the grant payable is a rate equivalent to the difference between the interest rate charged on the loan and 12 per cent. If the interest rate is 15 per cent, the small business investment grant is 3 per cent per year.

It was made clear in the budget that the assistance program was temporary in nature and that it did not profess to address all of the problems facing small businesses during the period after June 28, 1982 and before March 31, 1983. The program was intended to encourage those small businesses contemplating investments in new depreciable assets or in research and development, but not to hold such investments in abeyance.

Bill C-136 is an instrument that was introduced at a time when interest rates were high. In June of 1982 they were hovering around 18 or 19 per cent. It was directed essentially at easing the interest burden of small businesses for two years on loans taken out to finance the acquisition of property and to finance research and development according to the criteria of the program. It was a temporary instrument designed for a specific and fairly narrow purpose.

The current situation is that the March 31, 1983 deadline for taking out loans and using the loan proceeds for eligible purposes has passed. The need for legislative authority to pay the interest subsidy grants for two years is, however, very much alive and pressing. Without it grants cannot be paid to eligible borrowers.

There was some concern about the absence of a clear March 31, 1983 sunset clause in Bill C-136. This was assuaged by unanimous consent to adopt a motion amending Bill C-136 by adding immediately after line 16 on page 2 the following:

> The Minister may only make grants under subsection (1) in respect of small business investment debt obligations that are incurred prior to April 1, 1983.

This amendment is in keeping with the statements in the budget of June 28, 1982, the various press releases and in the SBIG information material that was given wide distribution in both the public and private sectors and makes the temporary nature of the assistance very clear.

In order that the small business investment grant program would be implemented as soon as possible after the June 28, 1982 budget announcement, it was necessary to secure temporary program and funding authorities pending passage of the small business investment grants bill. The temporary authorities expired on March 31, 1983. Therefore, it is important that this bill pass quickly so that payments may continue to be made to all eligible small business investment grant applicants.

Up to March 31, 1983, some 4,300 small businesses borrowed over $244 million under the program. Over 60 per cent of the borrowers are farmers and fishermen. Applications have been received from every province and territory in Canada attesting to the widespread popularity of this temporary assistance.

Honourable senators, this is a positive, innovative bill which has been welcomed by the small business community in the spirit in which it was proposed, not as a panacea but as a temporary measure providing relief during a period of high interest rates. I hope that honourable senators will give the bill speedy passage so that assistance under this program can be delivered as promised to all eligible applicants.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

• (1520)

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved the second reading of Bill C-142, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

He said: It is my privilege to speak to honourable senators on Bill C-142, which I think is reasonably well understood, in a general way, by members of this chamber. It is a bill to increase the amount of insurance on deposits in certain institutions from the present $20,000 ceiling to a ceiling of $60,000.

There are other implications of the bill which I will go into in due course, but perhaps I should first indicate to honourable senators that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is a crown corporation. It was founded in 1967 by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. The main purpose of the corporation is to insure, within specified limits, savings deposits made with financial institutions that are members of the corporation. I think that function is well understood. Perhaps what is not as well recognized by the country at large—and was not by myself, since I had to make several inquiries in this regard—is the operation of this corporation over the years.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation seems to be operating very efficiently. It now has assets of $255 million. It is financed by a charge of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent on the total deposits that qualify by all of the financial institutions that are members. In 1981, which is the last year for which I have figures, this brought in a revenue of $14 million. Added to that, the interest on the money that had been accumulated in the year 1981 amounted to $25 million. In that year, therefore, it had a total revenue of $39 million. It is provided for in the act that, should the corporation be in a financial position such that it does not need these substantial funds, the amounts charged can be reduced in accordance with regulations.

Another interesting aspect of this crown corporation of which I was not previously aware is that it pays income tax. Last year the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation paid to the Government of Canada $12 million in income tax. I can say, therefore, that this is one crown corporation which seems to operate efficiently. Moreover, I think that since 1967 it has given the people of Canada confidence in the deposit system—confidence which was not there before.

Since its inception, the total losses amount to $3.6 million. These losses came about because of losses incurred in Commonwealth Trust and Astra Trust. It is possible that some of that amount could still be recovered.

When honourable senators look at the overall operation of this crown corporation, I think they will agree with me that the corporation does run efficiently and that it does provide protection for those who need it, which is a very important part of our whole financial system.

Because of inflation the ceiling of $20,000 is unrealistic at this time. It is proposed in this bill that that ceiling be raised to $60,000. A little later I shall discuss with honourable senators why the figure of $60,000 was chosen rather than, perhaps, $100,000, which is the ceiling in the United States, or some other figure. Incidentally, a committee of the House of Commons, in examining the banking system, proposed that $60,000 would be a reasonable figure for this ceiling.

It should be brought to the attention of honourable senators that individuals can make deposits in various institutions which are covered by this insurance, so that there is really no limit to how far the protection goes in terms of an individual who is prepared to spread his accounts throughout the financial system. There is a variety of ways in which the figure of $60,000 can be greatly enlarged, insofar as protection is concerned, by good financial management and planning. Really, what I am saying to honourable senators is that, looking at the overall operation, it has been a successful one. In the past, there has been protection provided to depositors who have been covered by this insurance, and I think that the future will be taken care of under these new proposals.

There are other interesting changes, over and above the proposal to increase the ceiling to $60,000. The amount that can be loaned to the corporation by the Government of Canada through the Consolidated Revenue Account has been increased from $500 million to $1.5 billion. Honourable senators might ask why there is this loan requirement when I have told them that the corporation really does not cost the Government of Canada anything. The answer is, because it is not possible, realistically, to quickly liquidate the assets of a trust company, bank or financial institution in trouble without taking great losses. The depositors have to be paid. There is a possible heavy outflow of funds which happens in due course as assets are being liquidated in an orderly manner. Liquidation at fire-sale prices, however, could lead to severe losses. The $500 million has been in place. The $1.5 billion, which is three times that amount, should be a reasonable figure, just as the figure for the new ceiling is three times that of the old and is considered to be realistic. Again I emphasize that this is not a cost to the Government of Canada, nor is it a cost to the taxpayers of Canada.

There are some relatively unimportant amendments which are nonetheless interesting and which are in place simply to make the system work better. I will draw two or three of them to the attention of honourable senators.

One such amendment requires a provincial loan or trust company, subject to certain exemptions, when acknowledging receipt of money that does not constitute a deposit within the meaning of the act, to stamp such an instrument, indicating that it is not evidence of a deposit within the meaning of the act. Put more simply, if somebody brings money to a financial institution for some transaction which does not qualify as a deposit—it might be, for example, a real estate transaction—the institution must put a stamp on it so that the depositor knows that it is not insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I think it is a good practice to advise clients of these financial institutions of circumstances in which they are not protected. This applies to both provincially and federally incorporated institutions.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, might I be permitted to ask a question on this point? Suppose you go to a bank and ask for what we call in French un certificat de dépôt for $10,000?

Senator Buckwold: Yes, that would be considered a deposit. A wide variety of instruments, other than the traditionally orthodox putting of your money into a savings account, are considered to be deposits. A deposit could be a debenture of a loan company; it could be the guaranteed investment certificates of trust companies. There is a limit of five years. You cannot give a certificate or take a debenture that is longer than five years and have it come under the protection of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. This could involve an RRSP; it could involve a home ownership savings plan. There is a wide variety. There are, however, some financial transactions which some individuals might think are protected. I gave an indication of perhaps a deposit being made or something put in trust. Such transactions are relatively few, nevertheless, for the protection of the public, financial institutions have to indicate by a stamp that they are not protected.

• (1530)

Another interesting amendment is the one that empowers the corporation to make payment to a person who establishes that he or she is a depositor. At present the payment would be paid to people who appear to be entitled to it by "the records of the institution." Sometimes such records could be inadequate, and as long as the depositor has proof that he has made a deposit he will be entitled to be covered by the insurance. I think that is an interesting protection in addition to others that are now being provided.

May I give one last example of some of the minor changes. Up until now one corporation could solicit on behalf of another; that is, a corporation that was covered as a member of the deposit insurance group, and protected by it, might be selling paper that came from a company that was not a member of the deposit insurance corporation and thereby mislead the public. It is now hoped that with the approval of this act these companies will not solicit funds on behalf of another corporation that is not a member institution unless it displays a notice indicating that fact. In other words, they will have to indicate that although they are selling certain paper of another financial institution, it is not a member of the deposit insurance group. That will stop the peddling of paper of non-insured institutions I referred to earlier.

These are some of the interesting, though perhaps minor, provisions of the bill that have not had general publicity. Most people think of this as a bill that merely raises the limits; but it does greatly improve the protection afforded depositors throughout the system.

The major question in this chamber, I think, and in the committee, if it goes to committee, will be the limitation of $60,000. Many will ask why the limit should not be $100,000. For your information, a ceiling of $60,000 would cover 92 per cent of trust and loan company deposits—that includes all deposits, Senator Deschatelets—and 78 per cent of bank deposits, at the present time.

I have indicated to you that there are many ways of speading your risk if you feel you want other accounts, and you could deal with any number of financial institutions or utilize some of the other methods available, such as having deposits in your wife's name, or in a company's name, and so on, that we have talked about; but, basically, if the ceiling becomes too high we may move in a direction which is not really appropriate to a deposit insurance corporation. For example, originally it was said that the plan was to insure savings deposits rather than to insure investments. In other words, we are not trying to make absolutely every investment safe for everybody, but, rather, to insure savings deposits at a level where the investor could perhaps be expected to be less sophisticated. In other words, the ceiling is not exactly modest—it is a fairly large amount—and those who have larger deposits than $60,000 would be expected to have some financial acumen or would seek professional advice. Otherwise, if we went too high it would confer on insured savings, or insured deposits, a very real advantage over other types of investment, and it is felt that were we to move too far in that direction we might make it more difficult to raise other types of financial instruments.

There are many other arguments, of course, and one can pick figures, but in the end the financial institutions are the ones that pay the shot, in the form of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of the deposits. If the ceilings were raised, it is quite possible that the figure of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent would have to be increased considerably to meet those higher ceilings and to demonstrate that the insurance was protecting the deposits. Knowing financial institutions, I have a notion that it would not take long for those extra costs to be passed on to those who utilize the services of the institutions. In today's environment we should try to minimize our costs whenever possible. All in all, if we look at the situation, at the history and the strength of Canadian financial institutions generally, with some exceptions, we will see—and I personally feel—that the $60,000 ceiling is a realistic one. I believe that opinion is shared by most people in the financial community.

Before I sit down, may I pay tribute not only to the board of directors and the management of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation but also to the general financial community. We have had some nasty items in the last few months, and, in fact, there have been years when unfortunate situations have developed; but again, as I have said, Canadian depositors have been protected to the extent of the ceiling. I think we can generally be very proud of our banking system and our trust company and loan company system, each having operated with reasonable supervision in most cases; but behind all of that is the protection that is offered by this insurance, which should make every Canadian saver—and Canadians are indeed savers—very comfortable with the fact that they have their money invested in Canadian institutions.

With those remarks, I ask honourable senators to consider supporting this bill, and I await your decision as to where it should go from here.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Will the honourable senator permit a question? Is the contribution of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent as a premium to fund this program sufficient, in the light of the fact that the obligation on the part of the corporation has now been tripled?

Secondly, what would happen if a deposit were made in one branch of a financial institution and a like deposit were made in another branch of the same institution? Does the deposit insurance apply in both instances, or is this taken as a total deposit, or is there a total insurance of $60,000 per individual depositor?

Senator Buckwold: To my knowledge, insofar as the second question is concerned, you could not put your deposits in three different branches of the same institution. That would be considered as one deposit.

In response to the original question as to whether the one-thirtieth of 1 per cent is enough in view of the fact that there are higher ceilings, I believe I went to some length in explaining the fact that the corporation is in good financial condition, that there are in fact relatively few long-term demands made, although there may be short term pushes. I have a figure, for instance, that I did not give you but which astounded me. It shows how dedicated Canadians are to saving money. The total insured deposits amount to $118 billion.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 20, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

HIS EMINENCE EMMETT CARDINAL CARTER, ARCHBISHOP OF TORONTO

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have the distinct honour and pleasure of rising to draw your attention to the presence in the South Gallery of a very distinguished guest, a man who is in Ottawa today to be made a Companion of the Order of Canada, one of the most outstanding preachers in Canada, the embodiment of ecumenism, raconteur par excellence, tennis partner of His Holiness John Paul II, a prince of the Roman Catholic Church, and, to those who know him well, a prince of a fellow: His Eminence Emmett Cardinal Carter, Archbishop of Toronto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had the unexpected privilege of meeting Cardinal Carter a few moments ago when I had occasion to consult the Honourable Leader of the Opposition on a matter of Senate business. I suppose I was simply lucky enough to get caught in the net of good luck that surrounds Cardinal Carter. I do not know from personal experience all the details the Leader of the Opposition has just mentioned, but from what I have heard I think he probably understated the case in his praise of the Cardinal.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

PRIVATE BILL

EPARCH OF THE EPARCHY OF SAINTS CYRIL AND METHODIUS OF SLOVAKS OF THE BYZANTINE RITE IN CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Peter Bosa presented Bill S-35, to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Bosa, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PARLIAMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. It appears that we are now entering upon or beginning what is described in some quarters as the spring trimester of Parliament. The third anniversary of the opening of the first session of this Parliament was last Thursday, April 14. I think it has become clear that we will not have another session during this Parliament, that the work will be divided between the trimesters of spring, fall and winter. According to the rules applicable in the other place, an announcement concerning the legislative program should be made in that place. I do not know whether that announcement has already been made, but I think we should be told, if a specific legislative program awaits us during this trimester, and, if so, what it is. Perhaps the leader could also confirm whether or not we will be having any Speeches from the Throne other than at the beginning of a new Parliament.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder whether I understood the Leader of the Opposition correctly.

Senator Flynn: You certainly did.

Senator Olson: Does the Leader of the Opposition mean a new Parliament or a new session of this Parliament?

Senator Flynn: There will not be a new session.

Senator Olson: I do not know whether the government house leader in the other place has announced the legislation that he expects to be dealt with by Parliament during what the Leader of the Opposition has referred to as the spring trimester. I am not sure that anyone but the Leader of the Opposition has put that connotation to the sittings. In any event, I expect he is talking about the period from now until June 30 when the other place, by a house order, is to adjourn.

I think it is fair to say that the government house leader has discussed the legislative program with the opposition leaders of the other place. I am pretty sure that they have not come to an agreement on the legislative program which is already known to the House of Commons and to the Senate. In addition to that program, I think we will be looking at bills related to the budget of last night. However, I shall be open and frank with the Leader of the Opposition and indicate to him that if we have a reasonable agreement, at least as to the target of what items in the legislative program can be dealt with between now and June 30, I will convey that to him as quickly as possible.

Senator Flynn: I would very much appreciate the leader's providing me with that information. Perhaps he could also discuss with Mr. Pinard the use of the words "spring trimester" because I find them in this letter which Mr. Pinard wrote to Mr. Lewis, the house leader for the official opposition, and, apparently, to the house leader of the New Democratic Party.

In any event, the Leader of the Government has not replied to my question as to whether there will be only one session during this Parliament. Apparently, this will be the case. The point has been raised in the other place about whether carrying on such a long session is contrary to the Constitution. Evidently there is some discussion as to the exact meaning of section 20 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which states, in effect, that there will be a new session every year in the way that a new session will not begin later than 12 months after the end of the previous session. I can see the double interpretation there, but this system of holding sessions which last three years as opposed to having a session every year is certainly contrary to the practice and tradition of our Parliament.

• (1410)

The leader realizes full well that all of the legislation pertaining to the duties of senators and members of the house is based on the concept that there be one new session every year. Indeed, it used to be the practice some years ago that a session would last no more than 100 days during one year, and in the Senate we sat even fewer days than that. But this present session has taken up close to 300 days already. I believe it was 285 days in the Senate as of yesterday.

Surely the Leader of the Government owes the Senate an explanation of this new attitude of the government regarding the length of sessions, and their beginnings and endings.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I really do not want to become involved in an argument about what comprises a session, or what a new session consists of. The Leader of the Opposition intimates that according to practice there must be a new session of Parliament each year. Well, that has simply not been the practice of this government, or of several previous governments. He may recall, for example, the session between 1958 and 1963 that went on for over 200 sitting days.

In any event, I don't wish to argue the point, because it has not been resolved. If a reasonable legislative program can be achieved between now and June 30—and I wish to acknowledge that the house leader in the other place did use the word "semester"—

Senator Flynn: Trimester, like "three-mester".

Senator Olson: Semester.

Senator Flynn: Three sessions—"three-mester."

Senator Olson: Certainly, it would be reasonable—and the government has always been reasonable in this—

Senator Flynn: Hah!

Senator Olson: —to try to complete a certain amount of essential public business. There would probably be the prospect of a new session in this Parliament some time later in 1983. I am sure I do not have to remind the Leader of the Opposition that we are only three years and a few days into a five-year mandate.

THE BUDGET, 1983

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND—STATUS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, arising out of the budget speech last night I have one or two questions to direct to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The 1980 budget provided for a Western Development Fund of $4 billion. My understanding of the 1981 budget was that there was some modification of that, and an extension of the number of years over which those funds would be spent. To the best of my knowledge, the budget presented last night made no specific mention of the Western Development Fund. At least, in those portions of the speech that I heard in the television broadcast there was no mention of the fund, and I listened, I thought, to almost every word.

Has the fund ceased to exist? If not, what is the government's current timetable for the expenditure of the Western Development Fund, and what particular projects are involved?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are specific and large expenditures where the commitment has been made. The last time I calculated the total it was well over $2 billion for the types of project involved. Some of them are not yet under way, for a number of reasons I don't wish to go into at the moment, but they are there.

To answer Senator Nurgitz's more specific question with respect to the present status of the fund, I suppose if we were to consider all the criteria for what it was hoped to do with the Western Development Fund, we could then add several hundred million dollars, if not perhaps over a billion dollars, of projects that were included in the budget announcements last night, projects which would meet the criteria designated for that fund.

With respect to his question as to whether there is a designated fund in which all of the funding for a certain geographical area of Canada would be included, I am not sure that that is the way the accounting was done in a number of the announcements that were made last night for economic development in western Canada.

• (1415)

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. I wonder if he could advise us if it is anticipated that any of the programs announced last night will come within the old $4 billion Western Development Fund.

Senator Olson: I suppose a great many of those projects do, in fact, fall within the criteria laid down for economic development in western Canada.

Senator Nurgitz: Perhaps the minister could tell us which particular projects those might be, or bring to the chamber a list of the likely projects.

Senator Olson: Perhaps in the next few days I will be able to obtain a more up-to-date list of what projects were discussed in the budget last night, together with a number that have been announced from time to time that fit the criteria for western economic enhancement, and I could give that to the honourable senator.

Senator Nurgitz: While we are discussing the list, perhaps the minister could also let us have a list of those projects already undertaken which have been earmarked to come out of the Western Development Fund.

Senator Olson: Yes, I will do that.

GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN INDUSTRY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have one other brief question. The Minister of Finance, in his pronouncement last night, announced a $300 million fund to be under the direction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The only detail given about the fund was that it would allow the government to purchase stock in willing companies. I wonder if the Leader of the Government could elaborate on what, specifically, the funds are expected to do. Is this perhaps a fund that would provide for government investment in the Maislins, the Massey Fergusons or the Canadairs. What specific kind of company would be invested in?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I know that Senator Nurgitz has said that he listened carefully last night to the budget speech, but he missed one thing and that is that the Minister of Finance did say that each of the ministers who would be responsible for the administration of the various projects which he announced would be participating in the budget debate in the other place, which will go on for several days.

While it is possible, I suppose, to find some of the details that Senator Nurgitz has just asked for, perhaps, if he is a little patient and waits for the day when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion speaks in that debate, the minister will spell out the details of that project with comprehension and clarity to his complete satisfaction.

Senator Nurgitz: Perhaps I was not paying as careful attention as I ought to have paid to that section of the budget speech, but in view of the comments and criticisms made by the members of both houses and by the Auditor General, perhaps the Leader of the Government could tell us whether there is proposed to be some form of parliamentary control over these funds, once invested, in order that the public funds will be better safeguarded than they have been in the past.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think that Senator Nurgitz will be very much better equipped to ask those questions, as I will be to answer them, after we have heard the speech of the minister concerned.

[Senator Olson.]

SPORT

OLYMPIC STADIUM, MONTREAL—COMPLETION OF ROOF

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. During the recess, I thought I heard a statement made by the minister to the effect that the government is already committed to completing the roof of the Olympic Stadium in Montreal on one condition, but I did not get the condition. Could he reiterate the policy statement that he made?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I would be pleased to bring a statement on this subject to the Senate. However, I do not have firm information on the report which has come to the attention of Senator Asselin.

● (1420)

I made no formal statement about the proposed roof for the Olympic Stadium. I made an informal comment to the effect that I understand that a number of options are being considered to cover that very fine facility in Montreal. I have been advised that conversations have been held with a number of technical advisors as to the best way to proceed.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

SALE OF ST. LOUIS BLUES FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON BUSINESS INTERESTS

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

In the morning newspapers there were two very good stories. The first was on the federal budget, which I am sure pleased everyone. The second was one that particularly pleased the people of Saskatoon, in particular, and of Saskatchewan, in general, to the effect that the St. Louis Blues hockey team had been sold to a group of Saskatoon investors. It is quite possible now that we will have a National Hockey League team in that great city.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The Blues will be moved to Saskatoon?

Senator Buckwold: That is the idea. They may change their colours to red—I am not sure; we have been trying to achieve that for a long time. I can tell you that excitement is already running high. We have signed the greatest stick-handler in Canada, Marc Lalonde, and if he doesn't have a scoring punch I don't know who has.

Senator Flynn: He had better hurry; I may have to retire pretty soon.

Senator Buckwold: You still have a good few years left, Senator Flynn.

I want to draw to your attention the fact that Saskatoon, historically, has been a hotbed of hockey and has maintained a very real hockey interest. I go back to the 1920s, when the best professional hockey team in the whole of Canada at the time was the team that Senator Argue was named after, the Saskatoon Sheiks. It boasted the Cook brothers, Bun and Bill, Cy Denney, and George Hainsworth in goal. They were moved, as I recall, to play with the New York Rangers, so if anybody asks you where is Saskatoon, and what right have they to have a professional hockey team, you might remind them that our history with regard to professional hockey, and our participation in it, go back a long time, with great support.

I am coming to the question, by the way. I am sure you are all anxious to hear the historic background first, however.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Continue the story.

Senator Buckwold: The next obstacle is the governors of the National Hockey League. They may be all right, but I am concerned about John Godfrey's friend from Toronto. You remember that, in his little speech yesterday, John indicated that he wanted everything to go through Toronto. He was begrudging the CDC's having its head office in Vancouver, but he did not mention anything about the Toronto Maple Leafs, that great winning hockey team, headed by Harold Ballard, who has said publicly that he does not want a team in Saskatoon because it would be a damn shame if the Saskatoon team was well up in the league as compared to the lowly Leafs.

The probability, then, is that it will be necessary to exert some pressure on the governors of the National Hockey League. I should like to have a commitment from the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport that his good offices will be used to influence the board of governors, to the effect that in the best interests of the game we will be able to bring hockey to a place which has produced some of the greatest players, such as Gordie Howe, the Bentleys and all the others who have come from Saskatoon.

• (1425)

Saskatchewan itself, including Senator Balfour's Regina, will support this team, just as we support the Roughriders in his city, and I am sure the stadium will be packed. This will add a new dimension to Canadian hockey, and I think it is important for Canadian unity.

My question to the minister is as to whether he can assure me of the full support of his department.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I know I speak on behalf of parliamentarians of all parties when I express the hope that the National Hockey League board of governors, in their wisdom, will give favourable consideration to the establishment of this NHL franchise in Saskatoon. I recall the days, as I am sure do other honourable senators, when there were many people who doubted whether Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver could or would support major league hockey. Well, we see the evidence today in four of the best NHL franchises in these four great cities.

Saskatoon, with its great hockey tradition—a tradition we have been reminded of very eloquently and vocally today by Senator Buckwold—

Senator Flynn: At length!

Senator Perrault: —I have no doubt, will demonstrate that it will be an excellent home for an NHL team. I will make certain personal recommendations in support of that move. My mandate, of course, does not include professional sport. I think it would be good for Canada to have this franchise awarded to Saskatoon. I am sure that the establishment of an NHL franchise in Saskatoon has the support of my colleagues in cabinet, and I know that support extends to all members who serve in Parliament.

SPORT

CANADIAN WOMEN'S FIELD HOCKEY TEAM

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, while I am on my feet may I bring a bit of good news to this chamber. We have provided some support through Fitness and Amateur Sport for Canada's field hockey team, which to this time has been rated variously between tenth and fourteenth place in the world. I am pleased to report that I have received a message that this team, competing in the World Championships in Malaysia, has just defeated Australia in double overtime. They are now in the finals of the women's field hockey world championships, with an excellent chance of winning the world championship. This is progress we all like to see.

SOCCER—1986 WORLD CUP COMPETITION—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN VENUE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I take this opportunity to say that I have received a telegram from Zurich, Switzerland, with the message that a FIFA "presidential delegation" will shortly visit Canada to discuss Canada's candidature for the 1986 World Cup and to examine proposed sites. We are therefore going to have an official delegation from world soccer in Canada.

If members of the Senate can support, in any way, the application for the Canadian hosting of this world tournament, I urge them to let me have their names and I will then see what role they can play.

Our proposal, as honourable senators are aware, would be to have this world soccer competition take place in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. I think there are nine sites. If this delegation is to visit various centres across the country, I would hope that honourable senators would be available to speak with members of the delegation and to help convince them of the desirability of having this major world tournament played in Canada. There are numerous economic benefits that would flow to every section of the country if we are able to achieve a successful bid. We may not be favoured for the World Cup at the present time, but the women's field hockey team was not favoured before they won today's world semi-final, from which they may go on to win the championship.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LTD.—REPORT BY DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that my friend, the Honourable Senator Austin, who is about to proceed to other business, was kind enough to come back at my request to deal with a couple of questions I want to put to him as the minister in charge of Canadair.

I wonder if he could throw some light on the developments that have led to some of the circumstances surrounding this problem. In particular, I want to ask him about the report rendered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in October of last year about the Canadair situation. I want to inquire from him also when this report came to his attention. I think that would be my first inquiry.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I have not seen that report, and I shall make inquiries with respect to it, Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: It surprises me that the minister has not seen it because if the minister was taking over the responsibility, through CDIC, for Canadair, one would have thought that this report would have been brought to his attention. I really am surprised, as I say, because among other things it made recommendations for the improvement of the management of that company. It pointed out that some of their claims with respect to their order book were questionable and, indeed, made some recommendations as to what the company should do to cut its losses. This information was available to the government—I think to the Cabinet—in October, and I am really perplexed to learn that the minister is not acquainted with the document.

● (1430)

Senator Austin: I am wondering whether the honourable senator's information is based on press reports or whether he has seen or has a copy of the report.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that is material. It is just on my own responsibility that I am making these remarks. If I am incorrect, then I am sure my honourable friend will put me right. I want to go on with my question. This is the point that I am leading up to: Shortly after that report was received by the government, the officials of Canadair appeared before a committee of the other place respecting their request for more money. I am under the impression, from reading the information placed before the other place, that no reference was made to the fact that this company had this particular problem. I think that requires some explanation, because if an ordinary company was raising money in the stock market and put out a prospectus and omitted a significant fact that would bear on the issue, then I do not think it would be approved of in the market or perhaps even in law.

I am curious to know why this report—which was received in October, preceding the application of Canadair before the House of Commons committee for more money—apparently was allowed to lie dormant on the table, or on someone's table, while all this was going on. This has led to unpleasant allegations of a cover-up. I am not lending myself to those comments at the present time, but I am offering the minister an opportunity to explain what happened.

Senator Austin: I thank the honourable senator for his question. The officials of Canadair, to whom he refers, appeared before a standing committee of the other place in November, prior to the time that I was appointed minister responsible for Canadair. I have seen the press report with respect to an October 1982 ITC study or review of Canadair's affairs, and I have asked my own officials for a briefing with respect to that study, if it exists, and the nature of its recommendations.

I am not at this moment able to tell the honourable senator whether officials of Canadair were aware of an ITC study, or an ITC position paper or analysis of Canadair. I do not have that information. But I understand the question that the honourable senator is asking and, in the course of the inquiries about which he and I exchanged views yesterday, I will most certainly satisfy myself on the point he has raised, and will in due course respond to him with respect to the question.

Senator Roblin: I should like to ask the minister if he would extend his inquiries a little further than that, because if he did not know about the report, then I would like to know who did, and I would like to know what that person did about it. I remind the minister that when he was speaking in this house on November 24 he said:

> Honourable senators, with respect to Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado and Teleglobe, I will stand in the same position, in reporting to this house, as the previous respective ministers did in reporting to the other place.

I take him at his word and I therefore ask him, when he is making his investigation of this matter, to give us the full background, including those details as to whether the report was actually tendered to cabinet, as I believe it was, and what happened to it, and, in particular, why what appears to be a material factor with respect to the financial needs of Canadair was not laid on the table before the committee of the other place at the time the request for money was made.

Senator Austin: The statement that was made by me in this chamber, to which the honourable senator has referred, is one to which I adhere. It is a statement that assures that I am the minister responsible for Canadair and I will report in this chamber as the previous minister responsible reported in the other place. I am now endeavouring to do so in response to the honourable senator's questions. I appreciate the reference to officials of Canadair. I can only respond by saying that I do not have the information that the honourable senator requires. Of course, I will not be in a position to discuss what takes place in cabinet or the nature of reports which are discussed in cabinet. That is beyond my responsibility as a minister in parliamentary terms.

I very much appreciate the honourable senator's reference to "cover-up" which appeared in a press story yesterday, and I want to take this opportunity to deny that I am in any way involved in a cover-up with respect to Canadair. I took on these responsibilities in the last few days of November. I have moved as rapidly as anyone could to understand the facts. There are very serious concerns with respect to the business and financial affairs of Canadair. I want to know what the facts are, and I want Parliament to know what they are, when I have them—and I hope to have them before long. I did say that I expect to be able to report in full before the end of June of this year.

I do not want to act on partial information or on preliminary information. The kind of information that I am prepared to act on is that which has been gathered and discussed with officials of Canadair, so that I understand their explanations. Only after that point has been reached will I be prepared to come before Parliament to report, and to report also on my responsibility as minister for the good stewardship of Canadair.

Senator Roblin: I believe the minister is on the right track in his statement; but I am a little disturbed by his reference to having all the facts at his disposal. I agree with that, but I consider they should also be at the disposal of Parliament. It seems to me that the minister cannot expect to be judge in his own cause, and he will be in that position unless he makes a complete disclosure to Parliament.

To say that this report of last October is confidential seems to undermine the first step that was taken, the first piece of information that I am aware of that came to light with respect to the current problem; and I suggest to my honourable friend that if I cannot persuade him to do anything before the end of June, then I will probably have to content myself with that. But I suggest to him that, when his time to report does come around, he be forthcoming with Parliament and let us know what was in that report of October.

The Prime Minister has made some pretty scathing remarks about the competence of the managers of Canadair, and one then has to ask, "Well, what about the competence of the government in that period between the time they received the report in October and the time that Canadair appeared before a committee in the other place in November, without any disclosure of a serious situation which might well have justified disclosure at that time?"

Not having seen the documents, I am in no position to judge; but I want to be in a position to judge, and I think the minister wants me to be in a position to judge. So I tell him that we shall be looking for full disclosure of all the facts when the time comes for him to report on this matter.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have said several times today, yesterday and previously, that I propose to report to Parliament. The question of a report to Parliament is beyond question, so far as I am concerned. Parliament does have the right to know what has been done with the funds voted by Parliament.

With respect to the report to which the honourable senator refers, I have said today that I am not certain that there is such a report. I will make inquiries. Obviously, then, I am not certain whether the report, if it does exist, is a full analysis or an overview of certain aspects only of the business and financial problems, whether it was done by consultants, whether it was checked with the management of Canadair, and whether it has been reviewed and by whom. So I do not know the quality of the report and I do not know whether any useful purpose will be served in tabling that report. Those are the questions that I would bring to bear in an assessment. Nor is it the practice, as Senator Roblin knows, for reports by public servants to their ministers to be tabled or referred to committees of this chamber or the other place.

● (1440)

What I am prepared to do, and I think it is my responsibility, is come forward on my own with a statement of the financial and business situation of Canadair. I repeat, I am prepared to do that. I am awaiting the process of analysis that I launched on the very day that I assumed responsibility for Canadair.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is making me feel a little nervous because he is now saying that he is going to report what he thinks he wants to report. The question is: What is he going to report? It can only be a highly subjective decision as he passes all the information through his mind. I will not be surprised if there are other factors that might be—I would not like to say "political" because that is a bad word in this place—in that subjective assessment. Of course, parliamentarians do not like a subjective assessment. They want the committee to come clean. I feel that unless the minister makes an effort that convinces impartial observers—and I am not entirely impartial, so I shall not set myself up as the judge—that it is reasonably full and factual, then I am afraid we will have trouble.

Senator Austin: I understand that Senator Roblin is a worst-case worrier, and perhaps that is an appropriate way for a person of his position in this chamber to proceed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You should know.

Senator Austin: However, I do want to repeat that I will present to this chamber the financial and business facts as they are understood by me and by the officials.

Senator Flynn: I don't like that either.

Senator Austin: Both I and the appropriate officials will be available for cross-examination. I had the pleasure of serving with Senator Roblin on the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution, and I know that he is a capable and effective cross-examiner.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend, but I must tell him that on that occasion I was debating a known quantity. My fear here is that I may not be in that favourable position when he and I discuss this matter before a committee.

Senator Austin: I assure Senator Roblin that I have no intention of withholding any relevant fact.

Senator Roblin: Of course, a "relevant fact" is in the eye of the beholder.

THE BUDGET, 1983

ESTIMATED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, over the next few days, I would like to put a number of questions to the Leader of the Government concerning last night's budget, in particular with regard to the deficit projections for the next several fiscal years contained in both Mr. Lalonde's speech last night and the accompanying documents. For today I would like to ask the Leader of the Government how he reconciles the commitment made by the Minister of Finance last night to keep expenditures within the trend growth in GNP with the fact that in the current fiscal year, according to Mr. Lalonde's own estimates, expenditures will rise by 12.2 per cent, which would be considerably over—perhaps by 50 per cent—the trend growth in GNP?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I find it a bit difficult to find words to explain to my honourable friend—

Senator Murray: Then bring in an explanation from the minister.

Senator Olson: —this subject better than the Minister of Finance explained it last night. I have with me a copy of that statement and I could read it back to the honourable senator, but I think he has already seen it. The question is whether I can find words that will convey the message to his mind better than a reading of the paper. If the honourable senator disagrees with the statement then, of course, that is a debatable matter, but I am sure that he agrees that the Minister of Finance has offered a reasonable and plausible explanation.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Spend now, pay later.

Senator Murray: I despair getting an answer today from the Leader of the Government, but I will ask him to inquire of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, as to how he reconciles his commitment to keep the increase in expenditures within the trend growth in GNP with the fact that the estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board a few weeks ago provide for an increase of 12.2 per cent in expenditures in the current fiscal year. I may say that that 12.2 per cent figure is grossly understated, in any case, because it does not include the supplementary estimates that were brought in and spent during the past fiscal year.

Senator Olson: I shall have to give an undertaking to the honourable senator to refer that question to the Minister of Finance for an expanded explanation that will completely satisfy him.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government which is really supplementary to the question put to him by Senator Nurgitz. Last night Mr. Lalonde admitted that he had decided to increase the special recovery program to $4.8 billion from the original amount of $4.6 billion—which was the subject of a news leak—an increase of $200 million merely to save the minister's face. I would like to know the projects that will be served by this additional $200 million. It is quite obvious from reading the speech that the minister was referring only to those projects covered by the $4.6 billion originally planned for, and that he could not have in any way invented programs totalling $200 million in about 12 hours.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: 13 hours.

Senator Flynn: I will settle for 13 hours. I know that there was quite extensive consultation as to the method by which the minister's political life or his face could be saved. I guess the government figured that $200 million was not an exaggerated amount to spend in the circumstances.

In any event, will the Leader of the Government give us the details of how this addition of $200 million to the recovery program came about?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I heard the Minister of Finance give an explanation. I have not read it today, but he indicated very clearly that some of those numbers are the result of the best estimates that they could make at the time, and that they could probably vary by the very small percentage that my honourable friend is referring to. I am not sure as to whether or not the Minister of Finance said it last night, but we do not need to invent new programs for capital expenditures, especially public capital expenditures in the infrastructure because, as my honourable friend must know—and if he does not I will tell him now—there are many possible projects costing in excess of the total amounts before last night and before even last week, but they could not all be accommodated. There is no doubt at all that there are good capital projects that can be added to the program because of that increase of $200 million, or even an increase in excess of that. It was not a matter of searching around for 12 or 13 hours to find new projects. It was probably a matter of being able to allocate funds to a larger number of the particularly good projects that are before the government because we never have enough money to fund all the good requests that come in.

Senator Flynn: I should like the Leader of the Government to ask the minister to tell us what he had in mind with regard to this additional $200 million. Does the leader say that it is peanuts?

Senator Olson: I didn't say that.

• (1450)

Senator Flynn: Well, for $200 million he must have had something in mind, apart from saving his face once again. So I am asking the leader to obtain an explanation from the Minister of Finance.

Senator Olson: Well, the honourable senator can, of course, read the explanation in Hansard.

Senator Flynn: There is none.

Senator Olson: There certainly is. There was an explanation given last night and I heard it. I was there and I heard it.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no, there wasn't.

Senator Olson: If the honourable Leader of the Opposition does not accept that, or if he is asking me to spell out more details, then—

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Olson: The money is, in fact, meant to enhance the economic recovery process that we believe is under way. Of course, the most important part of that is more jobs—

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: —whether those jobs are in public capital works or stem from the enhancement of private sector investments and general economic activity.

The Leader of the Opposition is asking me to have the Minister of Finance identify more projects, to the extent of $200 million worth, than he had in mind about 13 hours before he made his budget speech. Well, I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that there is not only $200 million-worth. There is much more than that in projects that were considered, and obviously considered, by the government, but, of course, the line has to be drawn some place for a budget presentation.

Senator Flynn: The minister obviously does not want to reply. The only thing I am asking the Leader of the Government to do is have the minister give us his explanation. I do not want the leader to give me his interpretation. I want the minister's own explanation. Moreover, what the Leader of the Government in the Senate said a moment ago is entirely false, because the minister in his statement last night said he would give the details of the special recovery program in explaining the $4.6 billion proposed expenditure.

I am asking about the additional $200 million. You say "jobs." I ask where? I am again asking the Leader of the Government to have Mr. Lalonde give a statement, something in writing or otherwise, with respect to what he figured in his own mind this additional sum would apply to.

Senator Olson: Well, my answer is in two parts. The first is that I did hear the Minister of Finance give some explanation.

Senator Flynn: No, he did not.

Senator Olson: Now the Leader of the Opposition has that in front of him, and yet he says that that is not enough. The Minister of Finance also said last night, as he went through the whole of the recovery program that he announced, that some would be in public sector capital projects, some in the private sector—

Senator Flynn: No, you are avoiding the question.

Senator Olson: —some in enhancing employment programs, some—

Senator Flynn: You are avoiding the question again.

Senator Olson: No, I am not.

Senator Flynn: You certainly are.

Senator Olson: No, I am being very specific about it.

Senator Flynn: You are not specific.

Senator Olson: I am quite specific in saying that the Minister of Finance said last night that when each of the programs was being discussed during the budget debate the ministers directly responsible would answer, and I believe that today it is the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Senator Flynn: He will not be speaking here.

Senator Olson: No, but I will bring that information to you, if that is helpful to you.

Senator Flynn: That is all I am asking you to do. I don't want you to shield the minister. I want you to obtain from the minister the information, because you are not responsible; you are not the Minister of Finance. You are here to put the questions to the ministers responsible, and that is all I am asking you to do. I am not interested in what you may say concerning things you don't know anything about and for which you are not responsible.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, that makes it easy. I shall simply say I will take it as notice.

Senator Flynn: Well, that is it, then.

Senator Olson: However, I want to understand what the Leader of the Opposition is asking for. Apparently he is asking for something which he has right in front of his nose, because he has the Hansard right there and it contains part of the answer. The rest of the answer concerning the details of specific projects that will be added will come as the various ministers outline their programs.

Senator Flynn: Well, ask him anyway, and we will see whether he can be more frank than you.

I have a supplementary question. Does the government feel that by changing the figure from what it was in the original budget speech the government now has a device by which it can correct a leak, in this case a leak which would normally have required the minister to resign?

Senator Steuart: Oh, oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: Just a minute, senator. Stop barking back there.

Senator Steuart: That is groaning; not barking.

Senator Flynn: I thought I had recognized a bark. I am sorry.

In any event, the minister in his statement admitted that there was a leak in the budget. If that leak had no importance to it, he did not need to correct his speech. By correcting it, he admitted that not only was there a leak but it was a substantial leak. I am asking the leader if the government is satisfied that by making that mere correction it can do away with the tradition of requiring a minister to resign when there is that kind of leak.

Senator Steuart: Yes!

Senator Flynn: Obviously, if he is a Liberal minister.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition is now asking me my opinion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Senator Flynn has had his answer.

Senator Flynn: I am asking the opinion of the government. I would not care to ask you for your opinion. It would not be worth anything.

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Opposition has had a long and distinguished career in law and as Minister of Justice. He knows that there are certain procedures provided for in this place and in the other place to deal with the allegations that he is making. The fact is that there was a long debate there based on exactly the same allegations he has made here this afternoon. There were many participants, mostly from the opposition. They argued for the rules and the so-called traditions of the other place. But Senator Flynn knows that a budget is presented in the House of Commons. It seems to me that it would be inappropriate for me to comment now on whether or not the Speaker, who had the authority, made a proper or improper ruling after having listened to the arguments on both sides.

Senator Flynn: The question to the minister is a question for the government. A question of the government is of as much interest to the Senate as it is to the House of Commons.

I am merely asking the Leader of the Government whether the government is satisfied that, by this method, it can avoid the consequences of a substantial leak in a budget.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, apparently the Leader of the Opposition did not understand what I just said.

Senator Flynn: You did not say anything. You never say anything.

Senator Olson: There was an allegation in the House of Commons yesterday that was debated for several hours.

Senator Flynn: I don't care about that.

Senator Olson: And the Leader of the Opposition knows very well that the responsibility to decide whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege with respect to an alleged leak is the responsibility of that house and that the Speaker of that house makes the decision. In this case she listened to the arguments for several hours yesterday, then came back and gave her ruling. He knows what that ruling was. It was that there was not a prima facie case of privilege. It would seem, therefore, that there is something terribly wrong with the reasoning of the Leader of the Opposition that he should think that I, as a member of the government, or the government as a whole, would have an opinion on whether or not the Speaker acted properly. We do not.

Senator Flynn: No, that is not the point.

Senator Olson: We accept the ruling of the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: You are evading the question. That is not the point at all. The government is the government. The government apparently is satisfied, because the Prime Minister did not ask Mr. Lalonde to resign, that by this mere device it can avoid the consequences of a budget leak.

That apparently is the position of the government up to this point. I merely ask the Leader of the Government if that is the final position taken by the government in this particular case.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I don't wish to add to the arguments I have just made.

Senator Flynn: I don't care about the question of privilege. It has nothing to do with the matter. It has nothing to do with it at all.

Senator Olson: It has a great deal to do with it.

Senator Flynn: No, sir, it doesn't. Not at all.

Senator Olson: It is exactly the point being debated.

Senator Flynn: No, sir. You are so stubborn that you have not listened and you have not understood one word I have said.

Senator Olson: I do not think it is on this side of the house that the stubbornness exists now. In any event, honourable senators, I don't think I have anything to add.

Senator Flynn: Then sit down, if you have nothing to add.

• (1500)

Senator Olson: In any event, honourable senators, I have nothing to add to what I said a few minutes ago, and when the honourable Leader of the Opposition reads it carefully, perhaps his level of understanding will also increase.

Senator Steuart: What we have to decide here is: Was it a leak or was it a peek?

Senator Flynn: The government says that it is only a peek.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The Minister of Finance made it clear last night, in the addendum to his budget speech, that of course, there was a leak. He also tried to draw a distinction between a leak of tax information in a budget and a leak of other information in a budget, which brings me to this question which I put to the Leader of the Government: Is it the position of the government that the principle of budget secrecy need not be maintained in its entirety; that, henceforth, those who have access to the budget documents will be free to divulge bits and pieces of the budget, but required to keep other bits and pieces secret?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it seems to me that there is a constant attempt to drag this matter back as if it is some business of the Senate to pass judgment on the traditions in the House of Commons—

Senator Flynn: Yes it is. We, too, are Canadians.

Senator Olson: There are procedures that are long-established in the House of Commons, and one of them is to refer any matter that is an alleged breach of the privileges of the House of Commons to a debate. In this case, the debate went on for several hours yesterday, as I said. The House of Commons has set up certain procedures for dealing with matters of this nature, the first one being that the Speaker shall make a ruling on whether there is a prima facie case of privilege, and she ruled that here there was not. I am not going to comment on her rulings.

Senator Flynn: Again, it is not a question of privilege. It is a question as to the intention of the Prime Minister to keep Mr. Lalonde, despite the leak.

Senator Murray: I was going to ask the Leader of the Government whether it is not a fact that the principle of budget secrecy is more than parliamentary tradition; that it is also what could properly be called a constitutional principle, having to do with the operations of cabinet government.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, again these are legal matters or interpretations, if you like, but there is one essential thing that members of the opposition, including the Leader of the Opposition, will have to understand, and that is that I do not think it is proper for us to discuss and comment on what is appropriate or inappropriate action taken in the House of Commons. What we are discussing are the traditions of the House of Commons, which is where the budget is presented.

Senator Flynn: I must again correct the Leader of the Government. The Speaker in the other place ruled that the question submitted by the opposition was not a matter of privilege. The Speaker could not rule that Mr. Lalonde had to resign. That is a matter for the Prime Minister. There could be a substantive motion in the house calling for the resignation of Mr. Lalonde, and, of course, if the motion carried, Mr. Lalonde would have to resign.

The Leader of the Government should read and try to comprehend the question put to the Speaker of the house, which was whether it was a question of privilege of the house, and she said it was not. You have been repeating to us that it is a question for the House of Commons alone. The Speaker of the house has already said it was not, so please don't rehash that.

Senator Olson: Perhaps, on reflection, the Leader of the Opposition will realise that he has just answered his own question.

Senator Flynn: Yes, I had to, because you did not.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I will not go into the theory underlying the documents tabled yesterday by the Minister of Finance to explain what had happened and the way he set the situation straight. My question has to do more specifically with the consequences of the changes made and the conformity of those changes with the budget as a whole.

He told us himself that the specific corrections which he mentions in his document will entail further corrections to the budget documents. I have not completed my study to see whether everything jibes, but as an example I will quote the last paragraph on page 21 which, I believe, appears on page 23 of the French version:

> The direct impact of all the measures I have announced tonight will be to increase the deficit by—

Original draft, $1.8 billion, corrected version according to the indications of the minister, $1.9 billion.

> —in the current fiscal year and by—

Original draft, $600 million, corrected version, $650 million.

> —next year. In the following two fiscal years, as the economy improves, these measures will reduce the deficit by $1.8 billion and $2.6 billion—

Those two figures have not been corrected, according to the list of corrections provided by the minister.

Quite obviously, if the deficit, as the minister asks us to correct it, will increase by $100 million one year and by $50 million the following year, the starting point is thus higher and, when we refer to subsequent reductions, they should be changed as well. The minister did not make the change nor did he point it out.

Here is my question: How are we to know when the list of consequential corrections which he gave us will be completed? Will we have to do that work ourselves, or should we wait for the minister to complete his release? I am asking that question because, pursuant to the theory he has explained, should the consequential changes to make both versions agree have an indirect impact on the fiscal aspects—something which is not impossible when we talk about a deficit—then his own theory would gain currency and the conclusion would be that it was indeed a budget leak. That seems to be a significant consideration, and I hope that the minister will show us the extent and nature of the corrections as well as the consequences involved, including the possibility that they might have repercussions on the fiscal aspect.

[English]

Senator Olson: I will take that question as notice and ask the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It seems to be a simple, straightforward question. There shouldn't be any trouble with that.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question? I observed the events that occurred yesterday in the House of Commons. For many years I have believed it was a principle of parliamentary democracy that a cabinet minister, about to present a budget, was required to keep it secret, and that if he failed to do so he committed a breach of parliamentary rules which required him to tender his resignation when requested. I also heard the Prime Minister say that one could not say that there was a budget leak because the budget was not a budget because it had not then been presented, and it does not become a budget until it is presented in the House of Commons. I heard this afternoon the Leader of the Government in the Senate advance essentially the same theory. I am confused and am looking for understanding in this matter.

• (1510)

I would like to know if I am correct in believing that there is no principle of cabinet secrecy, or ministerial secrecy, required on the part of the Minister of Finance, because a budget is not a budget until it is presented in the House of Commons and, when presented in the House of Commons, it is immediately a public matter and, therefore, under no circumstances can we have—according to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Government in the Senate—a breach of secrecy on the part of the Minister of Finance in presenting a budget.

Senator Steuart: That is absolute nonsense.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is not correct, and if he wants to expand his understanding of this matter he should read some of the arguments presented on both sides of the House of Commons yesterday.

Senator Donahoe: I heard them.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

CANADIAN SKI COUNCIL—USE OF TV BROADCASTING

Question No. 102 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

1. Does the Canadian Ski Council use the TV media for advocating skiing as a means of physical fitness and, if so, what is the cost?

2. If a celebrity is used in the commercial, (i) who is it and (ii) what is his/her nationality, his/her occupation, and how much is he/she paid?

Reply by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport:

1. Yes, the Canadian Ski Council uses the TV media as a means of advocating physical fitness and promoting skiing. All TV clips used on TV are presented on a public service basis at no cost.

2. The Canadian Ski Council has not paid for a celebrity in the development of their TV promotional program this year.

This fiscal year the Canadian Ski Council (CSC) received a $10,000 contribution towards the development and production of three promotional TV clips.

The CSC also purchased at their own expense ($750) an American TV clip which was funded by the Presidents Council on Physical Fitness and Sport and featured the well-known celebrity John Denver. Mr. Denver was not paid for his services but donated his time because of his interest in skiing. The Canadian Ski Council were allowed to remove the U.S. credit line and insert their own credit line.

All four tapes are being well used by some 80 TV stations across Canada as public service announcements and the estimated costs to date (if purchased) would be $386,636.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Bosa for the second reading of Bill C-136, respecting small business investment grants.

[Senator Donahoe.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I find this a curious bill indeed. It is entitled, "Bill C-136, an Act respecting Small Business Investment Grants," and among other things it specifies that if anyone wants to get anything under this act they should have made their application, or their obligations should have been incurred, prior to April 1, 1983. That part of it is fairly straightforward, of course, but nowhere does it say when this act came into force. I have looked through the bill a couple of times, and I can see no date as to when it starts.

Actually, if there ever was a piece of ex post facto legislation, this has to be it, because here we are dealing with a bill whose currency has expired. A terminal date has been set on the time for which applications for assistance under this bill may be submitted, and that is clear; but there is nothing in the bill to say when it began. I realize that I am being a bit antiquarian to inquire into this matter, because it is all very much water under the bridge; but I am sure the mover will be able to deal with this when he comes to close the debate.

I suppose the bill itself will be widely supported, because it does provide a form of interest relief to small businesses, which undoubtedly is very welcome to those who qualify. The mover said that a large number of small businesses, in the neighbourhood of 4,300, had benefited under this program, but he did not tell us, or if he did, I failed to note it, what the costs have been up to the present time, since the bill provides for interest relief. I understood him to say that the total amount of money that was included in the compass of the act was some $244 million, but I do not think that that was the amount of the interest relief; that was another sum. If I am incorrect on that my honourable friend can put me right.

This bill is doubly curious, because here we have one of those ad hoc measures that this administration has been so adept at dredging out of its pocket, so to speak, in order to deal with a crisis in respect of the position that small business found itself in in Canada due to the extraordinary increase in interest rates. One thing that is peculiar about this is that while they were bringing in a bill, or at least operating a policy with regard to interest relief to some small businesses, at the same time, on the other hand, they were cutting down on the after-tax returns that small business could retain. Could anything be more silly? On the one hand, they are cutting down the income stream from which interest payments are made on the debts of small business and, on the other hand, they are providing a kind of relief to other small businesses that qualified under a set of regulations which have never been presented to this chamber—and so I do not know what on earth they are—but you do get this anomalous position of the government, on the one hand, closing down on the supply of funds to small businesses and, on the other hand, helping them out in respect of interest.

We talk about uncertainty and inconsistency in the tax system; this bill is a pretty good example of that. In November 1981 the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, brought in some proposals about small businesses, saying, "We are going to cut down on the amount of profit or income that these small businesses can retain. We are going to do it in two ways. We are going to abolish a thing called the cumulative dividend account"—which was a system by which small businesses qualified for special treatment—"but, furthermore, and even more important, we are going to put a surtax on small business dividends of 12½ per cent." I have already shared with this chamber my views on that piece of legislation. It was a central feature in Bill C-143, and I do not intend to repeat what I said on that occasion; but I do wish to bring to the notice of the Senate this inconsistency of policy. Who's in charge of the store, for goodness' sake? One must ask that question when we see one policy cutting down the income that small businesses can retain, as part of a budget speech in November 1981, and, in the interval between then and now, a bill which does precisely the opposite and tries to put some money back into the pockets of small businesses in this country. I ask you: What could be more farcical and more illustrative of the incapacity of this administration to get its act together? It really is extraordinary.

That is not the end of the story, however, because if anyone has been paying any attention to the draft amendments to the Income Tax Act submitted and made public after this house rose for Easter, they will find that the government is still on the same old beat. I really should reserve my comments on this for another time, but it is so apropos that I will indulge myself. In this reform of the tax system the government takes after small business again by dealing with certain other matters in connection with the cumulative deduction account. They are not satisfied with Bill C-143. No sooner have they got C-143 passed than they rush in with nearly nine pages—between pages seven and 15—of new amendments on one topic, the cumulative deduction account. Here they are again, therefore, dealing with small businesses and their cash flow in a completely inconsistent way. I say that all of this makes no sense.

Members of the Senate who are connoisseurs of tax legislation—as all members of this body, I am sure, are—will certainly get their jollies when they read this particular piece of legislation. This is a good one. It says:

> (6) Paragraph 125(6.2)(b) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
>
> "(b) the reference in clause (6)(b)(iv)(A) to "4/3" shall read as a reference to "3/2"

So by law we say that four-thirds is not four-thirds any more, it is really three halves. This kind of logic is perfectly appropriate, in my opinion, for tax legislation, because that is the way so much of it seems to be drafted.

I think the Senate deserves to be inflicted—and I use that word advisedly—with the wording of this proposal. I am tempted to read it to you because it is so incomprehensible as to be beyond the capacity of most people in this chamber to understand it, and it is certainly beyond mine.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Read it!

Senator Roblin: I was waiting for somebody to ask. Subclause 13(7) of the draft amendments to the Income Tax Act reads:

> Subsection 125(6.3) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
>
> "(6.3) Where a corporation (in this subsection referred to as the "payer corporation") has, at any time after November 12, 1981 and in its taxation year that ends in a particular calendar year, paid a dividend that is received by an associated corporation (in this subsection referred to as the "recipient corporation") in its taxation year that ends in another calendar year, for the purpose of determining the qualifying taxable dividends paid by the payer corporation and the cumulative deduction accounts of the payer corporation and the recipient corporation after that time,

• (1520)

That is just the introduction. Here we come to the real stuff:

> (a) the dividend shall be deemed to have been paid by the payer corporation and received by the recipient corporation on the first day of the calendar year following the calendar year in which the dividend was paid or, where the recipient corporation ceased to exist after March 1983 and before that day, on the day before the recipient corporation ceased to exist—

Are you ready to call it quits?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Roblin: I thought so. I did not think that you would want to hear any more of this, but it goes on, honourable senators, for eight or nine pages. If anyone can understand what that is all about, then I will award him a gold star. Senator Steuart, you look to me as if you are eligible for a gold star.

Senator Steuart: No.

Senator Roblin: No? Then I am disappointed.

We have this delightful piece of legislation. So what can we make of this government? They stumble along from one pothole to another. They have contradictory pieces of policy, running in opposite directions at the same time, and then they come and ask us to approve of it after it is all over and done with.

That is exactly what we are being asked to do with this bill today. I do not intend to oppose it, but I think it is a monumental example of confusion and incompetence on the part of my honourable friends opposite.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Bosa speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I have deep respect for Senator Roblin's knowledge of business and matters relating to taxation—

An Hon. Senator: And English.

Senator Bosa: We all know that he is also most eloquent and knowledgeable in this area.

I should like to underline one important aspect of this bill. The bill arose out of a budget that was presented on June 28, 1982, while my honourable friend was referring to budget measures that were presented in the budget of November 12, 1981. Economic conditions have changed and the government saw fit to bring in measures that would correct the anomalies that occurred in the meantime. It was for that reason that the government introduced this bill, to alleviate the problems of small business, which was facing a tremendous financial burden in incurring borrowing costs way beyond anything they had experienced previously. So the points raised by Senator Roblin really have little relevance to this particular bill.

I believe there was another point mentioned by the honourable senator regarding dates. While it is true that the bill does not contain the dates, there were amendments effected in the other place, namely, the termination of the bill—that no obligations would be honoured that might have been incurred after March 31, 1983. The amendment in the other place was to the effect that no obligations would be accepted under this plan after March 31, where the loan had not taken place between June 28, 1982 and March 31, 1983. That amendment is contained in the present bill.

Senator Roblin: Where?

Senator Bosa: There is reference to it in Hansard.

Senator Roblin: I do not like to interrupt my honourable friend, but from looking at the bill, as passed by the other place in April 1983, I find no reference to it there.

Senator Bosa: It is true that it is not in the bill, but an amendment was adopted in the other place on third reading of the bill. It was proposed by the minister and seconded by Mr. Blenkarn. I cannot find the reference, but if the honourable senator will give me a moment I will find it for him.

Senator Roblin: Just read the bill. It is not in it.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, it will be found at page 5559 of Hansard of yesterday. There is direct reference to that particular amendment. It appears halfway down the page. I stated:

> There was some concern about the absence of a clear March 31, 1983 sunset clause in Bill C-136. This was assuaged by unanimous consent to adopt a motion amending Bill C-136 by adding immediately after line 16 on page 2 the following:
>
> The Minister may only make grants under subsection (1) in respect of small business investment debt obligations that are incurred prior to April 1, 1983.

Senator Roblin: Would my honourable friend allow me to say that I read that to the house a few minutes ago? That is not my point. My point had to do with the commencement of the bill. There is nothing in there about that.

Senator Bosa: I thought I had responded to that particular aspect of the question, that it went into effect when the budget was presented on June 28, 1982, and it terminated on March 31, 1983.

Senator Roblin: It is not in the bill.

[Senator Bosa.]

Senator Bosa: I know, but, as I said, there was an amendment.

Having said that, honourable senators, I commend this bill to you for second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bosa, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Buckwold, seconded by the Honourable Senator Giguère, for the second reading of the Bill C-142, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act".—(Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I adjourned the debate on behalf of my honourable friend, Senator Balfour. I now defer to him.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, we on this side of the house support the principle of this amending bill, namely, that depositors and financial institutions in Canada shall have those deposits insured up to a limit of $60,000 rather than $20,000, as has been the case since the passage of the original bill in 1967.

Recent events involving certain financial institutions in Ontario make clear the need for this legislation. There are questions, however. Is the $60,000 limit adequate? Should there be a limit? However, these and other questions regarding what amounts to the nuts and bolts of the amending bill could, I feel, be more adequately and usefully addressed before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and that is the course we suggest.

• (1530)

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Buckwold speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Buckwold: As usual, I have nothing to add.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You were so eloquent.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Consideration of the Fifth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline entitled: "Marching to the Beat of the Same Drum: Transportation of Petroleum and Natural Gas North of 60°", tabled in the Senate on 30th March, 1983.—(Honourable Senator Hastings).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have been asked, on behalf of Senator Hastings, to adjourn this order in the name of Senator Kelly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 21, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

THE FLYING FATHERS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, it is a great pleasure for me to acknowledge the presence in the South Gallery of the distinguished group known as "The Flying Fathers."

This group of priests is well known to all honourable senators. As volunteers, through a series of benefit hockey games in many parts of Canada, they have skated and scored their way to raising millions of dollars for charities and worthy community causes of all kinds, without consideration of religious affiliation.

Tonight the Flying Fathers are going to play at the Civic Centre here in Ottawa. They will have with them as referee the outstanding Red Storey, who has done so much for Canadian hockey. We are glad to have all of them with us this afternoon. We want to thank them for all they are doing to promote charitable causes and good sportsmanship in this country.

WESTERN GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the following petition:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA,

IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The PETITION of the undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan who now avail themselves of this ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

THAT whereas the proposed changes to western grain freight rates announced by the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin on February 1, 1983 will cause serious economic hardship to grain producers, rural communities, service industries and to the entire provincial economy, through substantially higher freight rates, loss of family farms, abandonment of branch lines, fewer grain delivery points and a massive transfer to economic wealth from Saskatchewan to the railways and other regions;

THEREFORE, WE THE UNDERSIGNED, REJECT THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S TRANSPORTATION PROPOSAL because it fails to guarantee the following key elements:

* Statutory non-variable freight rate protection on all prairie grains and their processed products with adequate recognition of producers' ability to pay;
* Payment of Government transportation subsidies directly to the railways on all grain volumes shipped;
* Assurance of adequate railway performance guarantees;
* Assurance that the ability of The Canadian Wheat Board to perform its function as a central marketing agency is protected.

This is in recognition of the regional needs of Western Canada and the vital importance that the grain sector plays in the Canadian economy.

This Petition is being presented on behalf of the 110,000 residents of Saskatchewan who signed the original Petitions.

WHEREFORE your Petitioner humbly prays that your Honourable House may be pleased to pass an Act for the purposes above mentioned.

AND as in duty bound your Petitioner will ever pray.

Thursday, April 21, 1983

(Signed) E. K. Turner
V. H. Summerfeld
Marvin Quiring

I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the South Gallery of the distinguished representatives of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other citizens of Saskatchewan. I hope that you will acknowledge their presence here.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the fifth report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. George J. McIlraith, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, April 21, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-142, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, April 20, 1983, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE J. MCILRAITH,
Acting Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

• (1410)

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, April 26, 1983, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on Tuesday, April 19, 1983.

REFORM OF THE SENATE OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—APPOINTMENT OF SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That rule 66(1)(b) be suspended in relation to the nomination of senators to serve on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Reform of the Senate of Canada;

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the said special joint committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Asselin, Balfour, Doody, Leblanc, Lewis, Lucier, Molgat and Stanbury; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—PROCEDURE FOR CHANGING SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i):

That changes in the membership of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Reform of the Senate of Canada may be made by notification thereof, signed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or any senator named by him, with respect to government members, and by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or any senator named by him, with respect to opposition members, being filed with the Clerk of the Senate who shall cause the same to be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of that sitting, or of the next sitting thereafter, as the case may be; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house of such changes.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion is worded in exactly the same way as the substitution motion was worded with respect to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (1415)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 26, 1983, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am wondering if the Deputy Leader of the Government has anything to add to the simple wording of the motion. What is in store for us next week? I do not see very much on the Order Paper.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am informed that it is very unlikely that there will be any legislation coming to us from the other place next week. However, we do have other matters for debate. For example, there is the notice of inquiry given by the Leader of the Government just a few moments ago; and I intend to make an intervention on Senator Godfrey's motion regarding the review of human rights legislation by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I also hope to have something next week to suggest to the Senate with respect to alternative procedures for Royal Assent, following the request of the Leader of the Opposition that I consider that subject. I believe that there is at least one inquiry, that of Senator Molgat, which will be going on. Then of course we shall have Question Period.

The intention next week is to revert to the experiment we were working on just before Easter. That is, we shall sit on Tuesday evening, Wednesday evening, if necessary, and Thursday afternoon, with Tuesday morning, Tuesday afternoon, Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning remaining open for committees.

As to the following week, since the budget debate is continuing in the other place and it is equally unlikely that we will receive any legislation from there that week, the present intention is not to sit that week, subject, of course, to recall if in the Speaker's judgment it is required. I mention this intention now because I know chairmen of committees who plan their meetings well in advance will want to take it into account. They may wish to change their plans for that week, considering that some members of committees who live a long distance from Ottawa might find it difficult to attend that week simply for committee meetings.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, may I ask the chamber to revert to petitions?

Senator Flynn: You may ask once we have disposed of the motion which is now before the Senate.

Senator Austin: Thank you.

Senator Flynn: I merely want to tell the deputy leader that he has forgotten an important item for next week, the third reading of Bill C-142. It should take at least two or three minutes. That is very important.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: I might speak longer than that.

Senator Flynn: The deputy leader has also referred to Question Period for next week. Considering the mood we are in, I suppose the idea should be to keep our questions of today for next week. Perhaps then the Leader of the Government will be in a better position to give replies, because the experience of yesterday indicates that he has not fully assimilated the budget provisions and that he is not really prepared to reply.

● (1420)

I suppose the idea would be to keep important questions for next week and at least to appear to be very busy. However, I commend the deputy leader for having told the chairmen of committees that, as far as possible, they should arrange their meetings for next week so that, if we do not sit during the first week of May, senators will not be obliged to come here only for committee meetings that could very well be held next week.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with respect to the first point, I understand that Senator Flynn feels it is unlikely that anyone on his side will spend more than two or three minutes on third reading of Bill C-142. However, other senators may wish to speak at greater length on that bill.

Senator Flynn: It would be just to save face.

Senator Frith: In any event, they will have that opportunity.

With respect to questions, I am flattered to think that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition wants my advice on what questions he should pose, how long they should be, or when they should be put. I think that as usual Senator Flynn will take his own counsel on that.

With reference to committee meetings for next week, on that matter Senator Flynn and I are obviously ad idem.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): If I may add a comment, I should point out that one of the reasons we are asking for leave to introduce an inquiry today is to give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to legitimize himself and to put his whole speech and comments respecting the budget in one place rather than having a mini-debate on the budget each Question Period. It will also provide an opportunity for debate to some of the members on this side who have a keen interest in the matter but who normally follow the rules somewhat more assiduously.

Senator Flynn: I am not so sure about the matter of following the rules, but one thing I do know is that if the Leader of the Government has no reply to a question he should say so instead of going round and round the question while avoiding giving a reply.

Senator Olson: The problem I had yesterday, honourable senators, was not in making a reply but in making it three or four times before the Leader of the Opposition understood it.

Senator Flynn: Yesterday the Leader of the Government was unable to give a decent or direct reply to any question. I suggest, therefore, that during the weekend he might look over the questions I put to him yesterday. It may be that he will then understand them and that next week he will be able to bring in direct replies to a number of those very direct questions.

Senator Olson: Perhaps both of us should reflect upon that over the weekend. You might come back to us with more precise questions, having had an opportunity to absorb the replies I gave you yesterday.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should just like to point out that I will move two motions this afternoon, and it occurs to me that next week would be a good time to dispose of both of them.

Senator Flynn: No doubt that is justification enough for sitting next week.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

NATIONAL PHYSICAL ACTIVITY WEEK

ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an announcement of great importance for all Canadians.

[English]

It gives me great pleasure to proclaim the week of May 15 to May 23, 1983 National Physical Activity Week.

Over 15,000 schools and more than 1,000 communities have decided to participate. In total, close to ten million Canadians are expected to run, swim, walk, cycle or generally participate in this celebration of physical fitness.

I realize that there is a high level of physical fitness in the Senate and I wish to announce that there will be a jog around Parliament Hill on Wednesday of National Physical Activity Week. We hope that senators will joyously join in this celebration of fitness in Canada. We can even promise a healthy, high-fibre-content breakfast for those who arrive at the finish line.

• (1425)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister be leading the way?

Senator Perrault: It is entirely possible, Mr. Leader.

It gives me particular pleasure to state that National Physical Activity Week stands as a shining example of monumental co-operative effort in this country. As the lead organization, Fitness Canada, a directorate of Fitness and Amateur Sport, has worked diligently over the past two years with both provincial and municipal governments, with leaders of Canada's prominent health and fitness organizations and our national voluntary organizations to create what is to be an annual event.

This great co-operative effort, involving the leadership of 200,000 volunteers, two million known direct participants and a total involvement of an estimated ten million Canadians, is the first of its kind in the history of this country.

[Translation]

The National Physical Activity Week, which will take place from May 15 to May 23, 1983, will afford Canadians an opportunity to express their pride as Canadians in the nation's growing awareness of the benefits of physical activity.

[English]

Senator Flynn: That is a physical exercise in itself, for you to speak that way.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the third reading of Bill C-136, respecting small business investment grants.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

EPARCH OF THE EPARCHY OF SAINTS CYRIL AND METHODIUS OF SLOVAKS OF THE BYZANTINE RITE IN CANADA—BILL TO INCORPORATE—SECOND READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill S-35, to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I need take only a few moments to speak on this matter.

• (1430)

The purpose of this bill is to grant a corporate charter to a religious officer responsible for the spiritual and religious needs, as well as for the management and control of the property, affairs and interests, of his church.

Perhaps a brief explanation of the religious terms appearing in the title of the bill would be in order. In the traditions of the church in question, an eparchy is the equivalent of what is known to most of us as a diocese, and the eparch is the equivalent of a bishop. In other words, the eparch of the eparchy is, in more common parlance, the bishop of the diocese.

Honourable senators will understand how easy it is to engage in this transposition of terms once they are made aware that the diocese in question adheres to the Roman Catholic tradition. In the words of the preamble to the bill, church members are "in apostolic communion with the Holy Roman See". However, what is unique to this diocese is that, because of the distinctiveness of its rites and its small number of members, it covers the breadth of Canada. It has parishes not only in Ontario but also in Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

The bill before you would constitute the eparch of the eparchy in question as a corporation sole, to be known as the Corporation of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada. A corporation sole, as those senators who are lawyers or who have an understanding of the law will know, is a corporation consisting of one person only, usually a person of high office, who, together with his successors in office, is incorporated by law. In this way the officer obtains the legal capacity and benefits of a corporation, which, as a natural person, he would not otherwise enjoy. One particular advantage is that of the continued existence of the corporation over the lifetime of each successor in office.

It is because the eparchy covers all of Canada that it is desirable that it be incorporated by Canada rather than by one or other of the provinces. As neither of the two federal statutes of a general enabling nature that govern the creation of corporations—being the Canada Corporations Act and the Canada Business Corporations Act—provides for the creation of a corporation sole, it appeared necessary for the eparch to petition Parliament for a private act.

Since this is a private bill, it will be necessary for a Senate committee to examine the allegations of facts set out in the preamble of the bill. I would propose, therefore, if second reading is granted, to ask that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which is the committee of the Senate that normally examines private bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Bosa moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

● (1435)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CERTAIN CLAUSES OF BILLS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, April 20, 1983, moved:

> That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:
>
> "9. REGULATIONS
>
> In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:
>
> (1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.
>
> (2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:
>
> (a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;
>
> (b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;
>
> (c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;
>
> (d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;
>
> (e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;
>
> (f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;
>
> (g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;
>
> (h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulation."; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

He said: Honourable senators, on June 4, 1980, under terms of reference which were supported by both houses of Parliament, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments was empowered, among other things:

> "to conduct a comprehensive study of the means by which Parliament can better oversee the government regulatory process and in particular to enquire into and report upon:
>
> 1. the appropriate principles and practices to be observed,
>
> (a) in the drafting of powers enabling delegates of Parliament to make subordinate laws; . . .
>
> and the manner in which Parliamentary control should be effected in respect of the same."

The committee issued its report on July 17, 1980. The first sentence of paragraph 69 of that report states:

> Your Committee is concerned by the lack of specificity in the enabling powers commonly granted in statutes.

Then the report sets out in detail many of its concerns.

I should like to read all of paragraph 70 of the report. It states:

> Insufficient attention is paid to enabling clauses in Bills before Parliament. They should be the subject of searching scrutiny during the Committee stage. The Regulatory Review Committee—

That is the name we were then proposing to give to this joint committee.

> —is well placed to undertake such scrutiny as it sees week by week the consequences of the powers so readily granted by Parliament in the past. Your Committee, therefore, further recommends that the Regulatory Review Committee be charged with the duty and responsibility of examining and reporting upon all powers in Bills to make subordinate law or to issue, make or establish other instruments. Its reports—

This is important.

—should be made to the appropriate Standing Committees of the Houses having the committee stages of the Bills.

The motion I have proposed, in effect, does not really provide for any report at all. What we are really proposing is that the committee look into those enabling clauses and merely alert the appropriate committee considering the bill. There is no formal reporting. If the committee itself does not get around to that in time, there will not be any hold-up of the bill.

Professor Mallory of McGill University, who was described by the Honourable Eugene Forsey as being one of the most eminent of Canada's political scientists, advised the committee approximately three months ago that he had come across a reference in the House of Commons Hansard in 1972 respecting a directive that the Honourable John Turner, the then Minister of Justice, had issued to the various cabinet ministers.

I referred to that directive in the speeches I gave on February 9 and 10 of this year. That directive, which related to the drafting of enabling clauses, had never been brought to the attention of our committee. We wrote to the Minister of Justice, and almost immediately he sent along a copy of Mr. Turner's directive, as well as a document which I am holding in my hand entitled, "The Preparation of Legislation", which has a whole section on the drafting of enabling powers with respect to regulations. It is that section which I have reproduced in this motion. As I originally drew the motion it contained recitals. I was told that that was out of order, so I simply moved the recitals down into the body of the motion.

● (1440)

Already a directive has gone out that certain things should not be included in enabling powers without specific permission of the cabinet. What we are saying is that all we want to do in our committee is look and see whether or not bills include enabling powers which the cabinet directive says should not be there, and, if they are there, find out whether the cabinet under the provisions of the directive has specifically given permission for those enabling powers to be included, and, if so, why.

As you will notice, the directive says that certain powers are not to be granted unless the memorandum to the cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. It is my submission that any committee of Parliament, either of the Senate or of the House of Commons, is entitled to the same explanation.

As we have pointed out, parliamentarians are, in effect, generalists. There is no way that every individual parliamentarian can go through every piece of legislation with a fine-tooth comb, nor does he have the technical qualifications with respect to every clause in a bill. This was well illustrated in the case of the four tax treaty bills that went through without anybody noticing that the enabling clauses were faulty. When this was brought to the attention of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, that committee made the appropriate amendments. The same amendments, substantially—we did not get everything we wanted—were made in the energy bill that we are all familiar with.

All I am saying, honourable senators, is that if we are to maintain any legislative control whatsoever over enabling powers, the committee, which has two full-time counsel who can look into every detail, ought to have the power to see whether or not the executive branch of the government is following its own directive.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It seems to me that the reasoning of the honourable senator is entirely correct. If the deputy leader is willing to let that motion pass, I have no objections.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is not a matter, really, of deciding now whether I want to let it pass, but rather that I want to adjourn the debate to make some observations on the motion.

Hon. Martial Asselin: It is too difficult to decide right away.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE

MOTION RE SPECIAL INTERESTS OF PROVINCES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, April 20, 1983, moved:

That whenever a bill or the subject-matter of a bill is being considered by a Committee of the Senate in which a province or provinces have a special interest, then as a general policy, the government of such province or provinces where practicable, shall be asked by the Committee as to whether or not they wish to make written and/or verbal representations to the Committee, and any province that replies in the affirmative shall be given a reasonable opportunity to do so.

He said: Honourable senators, I have already referred to this motion in previous speeches. Also, in a long letter which I wrote to committee chairmen—I think it was a year ago February or March—I brought this subject up, but there was a delay in dealing with it. We had a meeting of committee chairmen, but it had to be adjourned before we got to this particular subject.

In order to give the matter some publicity, on June 22 of last year I gave notice of this motion. We had a meeting of committee chairmen on November 4, and the consensus was in favour of this motion and the principle laid down in it. I did not feel at that time that I wanted to press ahead for formal approval of the motion. I thought it better to wait until we had had a sort of trial period during which we could see whether or not the suggestion would be accepted.

I have to say that not every committee chairman in the last few years has accepted the principles contained in this motion. You will recall that I asked Senator Goldenberg about it several times. I remember a particular meeting at which we were considering the Juvenile Offenders Act, and he brought somebody from the Department of Justice to explain how the department had liaised with the provinces and that there was therefore no point in our inviting provincial representatives to appear before us.

There has been general acceptance now, and I think it a good idea to put this sort of matter on the record for the future reference of committee chairmen. That is why I am moving the motion at this time.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 26, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 26, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that Jacques Hébert, Esquire, has been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated:

Hon. Jacques Hébert, of Montreal, Quebec, introduced between Hon. H. A. Olson, P.C., and Hon. Renaude Lapointe.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at three-thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday next, 28th April, 1983, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the motion is put, it would be helpful if the deputy leader could comment on the situation on Wednesday afternoon. I understand that two committees are to meet tomorrow, namely, the Subcommittee on National Defence at 2 o'clock and the Foreign Affairs Committee at 3.30. It appears, though, from the motion that is to follow this one, that the Senate will not be meeting tomorrow afternoon until 5.15. If my honourable friend could confirm that that is the case, it would be helpful in understanding our position. I would also take it that the Senate will not be sitting tomorrow evening. If that could be revealed, I would be glad.

● (2010)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the motion that has just been put, as I understand it, is for that committee to sit at 3.30 p.m. on Thursday, not tomorrow. However, the point raised by Senator Roblin is relevant to a motion I am about to put, so I will piggy-back on the fact that he has raised it on this motion to explain that, as he has suggested, we are continuing with our experiment of sitting on Tuesday evenings, not sitting on Wednesday afternoon to make room for committees, on Wednesday night if necessary, and Thursday afternoon. Because we would like to have Bill C-136 assented to, and also Bill C-142, if it receives third reading this evening, I am suggesting—and I will be putting a motion to this effect in a few moments—that when the Senate adjourns today it reconvenes tomorrow at 5.15 p.m. At that time we can simply adjourn, if honourable senators agree, to await the arrival of the deputy of His Excellency and have Royal Assent at 5.45.

There is a reception offered by His Honour the Speaker tomorrow evening, to which honourable senators have been invited, which will commence shortly after our adjournment. Therefore, although we are, as I say, proceeding with this idea of sitting on Tuesday evening, not sitting on Wednesday afternoon—thus giving committees a chance to meet on Wednesday afternoon—and then sitting on Thursday afternoon, we will sit, if senators agree, tomorrow just in order to have Royal Assent prior to the reception I have referred to. That means, if honourable senators agree, that we will not sit tomorrow evening.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 27, 1983, at 5.15 o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Is the deputy leader aware that the Subcommittee on National Defence is meeting from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock tomorrow afternoon?

Senator Frith: I knew it was meeting at 2 p.m. Before we made this arrangement I asked that the committee chairmen be notified. I was advised that our meeting at 5.15 p.m. would probably present no problem. In this case, in any event, Royal Assent would not take place until 5.45 p.m., so approximately 15 minutes of that subcommittee's time would be involved. I am sorry if I am misinformed on that subject.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, this committee chairman was not informed, but I think the Subcommittee on National Defence can sit from 2 o'clock until 5.45 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Marshall: We will try to finish early.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Olson. Last week, the government brought down a seemingly expansionary budget raising the deficit to $31 billion, which is of great concern to the Canadian people. Since then, the government has announced the launching of projects worth a total of $2.4 billion.

The question that I want to ask this evening is the following: In past years, when a budget was brought down, the budgetary proposals listed the various projects and earmarked funds for such and such an item. Why has the government decided this year that the various ministers would announce the projects to be implemented with those $2.4 billion?

Yesterday, a multimillion-dollar project was announced for Canadair. Apparently, nearly every day during the next few weeks, one minister or another will go before the press to announce that such and such a project will be implemented by the government thanks to those $2.4 billion of tax dollars. I am not suggesting that they will have to pay this money immediately, because I believe that the clever hit of this budget was to say: Let us spend now and pay later; we shall wait until 1984-85 to pay the bill, and the taxpayers will then have to pay in order to reduce the deficit or to pay off the government's debt. Is it a new government policy to have the minister concerned announce every day during the next few weeks another of the projects to be financed under the budgetary proposals submitted to Parliament?

[Senator Marshall.]

• (2015)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not believe Senator Asselin can argue very effectively if he recalls the history he already knows about budgets. In the past there have been many budgets presented with the general outline of economic conditions indicated in the analysis of the Minister of Finance. He goes on to indicate a number of general thrusts of the change in government fiscal and financial planning, and in some respects he spells out even more detail—and, of course, the Minister of Finance did that. It was one of the longest budget speeches in recent history. I believe it took something like one hour and 45 minutes.

It is not without precedent that some further detail and fine-tuning of projects initially announced by the Minister of Finance are spelled out by the minister who is directly responsible for the program, whether it be capital projects or incentives that are handled by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or the Department of Employment and Immigration with respect to direct employment projects, and so on. Therefore, I do not believe it is anything new.

What is important in this budget is that, while some people have described it as a complicated or complex budget, really it is not. There are a number of items in it dealing with stimulative action in a wide variety of areas where it is needed. Therefore, even though the minister made what I consider to be an excellent speech in attempting to deal with all of those things, obviously there are further details. He announced, during the course of his speech on April 19, that the ministers directly responsible for the programs he was announcing, as a change in the fiscal stance of the government, would spell them out when they participated in the budget debate.

I am sure that the honourable senator will also agree that that is the purpose of having a seven-day budget debate, so that ministers and members can participate in that debate. What is new is that there is an inquiry, of which I gave notice last week, that may possibly be dealt with later today, whereby we can have the same kind of participation in this chamber; because it is, as never before, an opportunity for members of this and the other house to try to make as successful as possible the recovery anticipated in the Minister of Finance's budget speech.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary. Is it not true that this new arrangement is intended to reshape the government's image with a certain kind of advertising that will certainly help them? I would ask the Government Leader how many more Ministers in the forthcoming weeks will be seen on television or heard on the radio advertising their respective projects?

Will there be a statement made today, or will the Minister responsible for Economic Development hold a press conference to announce the projects referred to by the Minister of Finance? Are we going to have to listen day in and day out to this kind of radio and TV advertising or propaganda which the Liberal Party now seems bent on using?

[English]

Senator Olson: One of the ways of re-establishing the kind of confidence needed in the investment sector, the business sector, the commercial sector and the economy in general is to give as much publicity as possible to those views throughout the country. I do not know exactly how many more ministers will be participating in the debate, but I think I can safely say that several more will.

This exercise is important to Canadians in all walks of life and in all sectors of the economy because by focusing on this budget for a long period of time we raise the level of confidence of Canadians, which is badly needed.

• (2020)

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: If, in the opinion of the Honourable Leader of the Government this is an appropriate procedure, could he possibly first reveal this information to Members of Parliament? Furthermore, after due consideration, could he possibly table tomorrow a list of all the projects and their names as well as the name of the ministers who will make a public announcement in the weeks to come?

I believe that Members of Parliament should be the first to be informed of government projects. If the minister is sincere when he says the budget should get as much coverage as possible, he should then start by explaining it in some detail to Parliament. Will the minister table tomorrow a list of all the projects as well as the names of the ministers who are going to explain in some detail Mr. Lalonde's budget over the next month?

[English]

Senator Olson: That is exactly why the government and the Minister of Finance along with his colleagues in the other place are following this course of action and this manner of setting out their procedure, so that all these things can be announced and explained in some detail in Parliament first. I cannot give an undertaking that I will bring in a list of all the projects.

Senator Asselin: Why should we not be the first to be informed?

Senator Olson: First of all, it is difficult to be informed and to be informative before all the details are in place. The Minister of Finance said, either in his budget speech or in statements he made immediately afterwards, that there was not enough money to accommodate all the federal projects that had been put before him, including those presented by other cabinet ministers. Therefore, obviously some selection had to be made from the number available, and the minister indicated that probably approximately 100 projects would be accepted.

Senator Asselin: Will you table them?

Senator Olson: We will table them as soon as we have decided which ones are to be accepted.

Senator Asselin: You already know that.

Hon. Jack Marshall: After everybody else knows.

Senator Olson: That will unfold over the next few weeks as things are worked out. I am sure that the last thing Senator Asselin wants me to give him is inaccurate information, so he will have to wait until we are sure which projects will go forward.

THE ECONOMY

PROJECTED DECLINE IN EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Lowell Murray: When the Leader of the Government speaks later this evening will he undertake to explain the fact that in this year of incipient recovery, as Mr. Lalonde sees it, there are 480,000 fewer jobs in our economy than there were in the third quarter of 1981 when Mr. MacEachen kicked off this recession, and that, notwithstanding Mr. Lalonde's brave talk of recovery in 1983-1984, there will be 63,000 fewer jobs this year than last year, and 55,000 fewer jobs in 1984 than there were in 1981. Will the leader undertake to explain how this can be construed by any reasonable person as progress?

Hon. Jack Marshall: What does "incipient" mean?

Hon. H A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is very difficult to answer a question based on an assertion in the preamble to the question that is absolutely wrong. For example, the honourable senator said something to the effect that this recession was kicked off by some previous Canadian minister—

Senator Murray: Mr. MacEachen is his name. Don't you remember him?

Senator Olson: Yes, I heard that—as if he was completely ignorant of the economic factors in play all over the world. It is unfortunate that Senator Murray thinks an intelligent answer can be given to a question based on such a ludicrous preamble.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But you were going to try anyway.

• (2025)

Senator Olson: The point is—and it was made very well by the Minister of Finance—that there is a hoped-for stimulative effect through the acceleration of the government's own capital spending projects, as well as a wide variety of stimulative measures in the private sector, that will make the whole situation in Canada economically better than it would have been without those measures that are in the budget. If Senator Murray cannot understand that kind of logical reasoning, then I have some sympathy for him, but I have to tell him, quite frankly, that the private sector and, indeed, the investment analysts and all of those people who have to take action preceding the actual employment opportunities, wherever they may be, have indicated to us that this is probably the most responsible and reasonable budget dealing with the real world as it exists out there that they have seen in a long time.

[Translation]

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS

Hon. Martial Asselin: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Of the $2.4 billion which the government intends to spend, are there some funds earmarked to assist Quebecair? For almost a year and a half, I have been asking the Government Leader whether the Government has taken any decision concerning the future of Quebecair.

We were told last June that negotiations had been going on with the Quebec Government for a whole year. However, six months ago, I asked this Minister whether the Minister of Transport had come to any decision. Is there at least in the $2.4 billion a small amount earmarked to help Quebecair get over that slump?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The brief answer to the specific question that was put by Senator Asselin is that I cannot recall that the Minister of Finance made any reference to Quebecair.

INDUSTRY

MANUFACTURES BY CROWN CORPORATIONS—CANADIAN CONTENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development with respect to CDIC and its conglomerate of companies which is such a successful drain on Canadian tax funds.

The Prime Minister, in his press conference last Friday, stated that the budget did not provide for a reduction in Canadian taxes because the government could not trust Canadians to spend their money in Canada. Canadair, one of the corporations of the CDIC, purchases the engines for both the Challenger and the CL-215 in the United States which involves spending approximately 50 per cent of the production costs outside Canada. Will the government and the crown corporations adopt the Prime Minister's policy and spend Canadian tax dollars in Canada, whether for jet engines or other purposes.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I do not accept any of the preamble to Senator Phillips' question. Suffice it to say that the objective of the government is at all times to enhance Canadian jobs and Canadian production.

In the case of the Challenger, we have embarked upon a long-term program and, in order to obtain the transfer of technologies such as engine manufacturing, avionics and those relating to communications and navigation, we need to have a commercially successful product to sell. Once we have established a successful product line, then we will be able to create these industries in Canada and will no longer require imports as part of our production unit.

[Senator Olson.]

It is a question of how quickly we can be in a position to maximize Canadian labour, Canadian engineering and Canadian manufacturing. We cannot always do it competitively from the beginning. The Challenger is a high-technology achievement for Canada, as you know, and we have had to obtain some of the technology abroad.

• (2030)

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I understand the concept of a short period of time being required in order to transfer the technology to Canada, but I would remind the honourable minister that $2 billion has gone down the drain. I would ask him how much more is required to go down the drain before that technology and the manufacturing of engines can begin in Canada.

The announcement of the government purchase of four CL-215 water bombers was made with a flourish. I read the announcement with a great deal of interest, but it made no reference to the fact that all the engines were purchased in the United States. Would the minister tell the Senate how the government calculates that the expenditure of Canadian tax dollars in the United States to create American jobs is helping economic recovery?

Senator Austin: Again, if I may dispense with accepting the preamble to Senator Phillips' question, it comes down to his asking the question he has already asked and which I have just answered. It is a matter of Canada, like many other countries, obtaining technology from abroad in order to incorporate it in our manufacturing and in order ultimately to manufacture and use that technology in our own country.

I cannot give Senator Phillips a specific time, but I assure him that we are doing our utmost to establish the manufacturing of Canadair and de Havilland products as quickly as that becomes commercially feasible. We will introduce any technology and industrial activity into this country that can be executed here. That is the whole purpose of the government's industrial and sectoral development program.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, the CL-215 aircraft selected by the government is of 1967 vintage. Even the Department of National Defence does not use aircraft that old. It has a fuel consumption ten times that of modern aircraft, and, consequently, the provinces are reluctant to purchase it, preferring an aircraft with more modern technology and lower fuel consumption. Is the minister in a position to report to the Senate on the negotiations with the provinces?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I do not agree. I think the Canadair water bomber is the best in its field, and I know of no other that even comes close to it.

The reluctance of some of the provinces to move as quickly as the federal government has with respect to the water bomber is regrettable, but perhaps understandable in the current economic environment. Nonetheless, I believe we will have substantial provincial participation in the joint program.

In any event, all of the provinces tell us that the Canadair water bomber is highly desired and that they want more access to it. The question is one of affordability, I suppose, and participation in a joint operating program.

Senator Phillips will know that the Province of Ontario is in the process of acquiring two Canadair water bombers, and they are eminently satisfied. They know its use and advantage. I very much regret that Premier Davis has not yet placed a firm order for a Canadair Challenger, but I believe he will do so when he sees just how attractive that aircraft is.

Senator Phillips: When the Prime Minister starts flying in them.

Senator Austin: The Prime Minister flew in the Challenger to the de Havilland opening a week ago Saturday.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Did he take his St. Christopher medal with him?

Senator Austin: He and any other minister would use the Challenger without any difficulty at all.

I also want to say to honourable senators opposite that they do not serve Canada's interest by being facetious and small-minded about such an important product as the Canadair Challenger.

• (2035)

Honourable senators, I do not want to see you—

Hon. Martial Asselin: You look after the taxpayers!

Senator Austin: I do not want to see you laugh at a Canadian product. If you are very serious about this, I will join in taking issue with you with respect to the quality of the aircraft, but let us not embarrass a highly important industrial program by small partisanship.

Senator Phillips: This is hardly a matter of small partisanship.

Senator Austin: Let us separate the difference between the technology and your concern about the financing.

Honourable senators sitting on your side of the chamber have asked me questions regarding the financing. Senator Roblin asked such a question, and I told him that I would reply to it at the earliest possible moment.

As far as the technology is concerned, let us be very serious; the Canadair Challenger 601 and 600 are excellent aircraft, and we want to market them. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot laugh at the Challenger on the one hand, and on the other say that we cannot sell it. So, please be very clear as to what your position is on the technology.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Who said we laughed?

[Translation]

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SECTION 54—PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, the question I want to ask is directed to the Leader of the Government. It is based on Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which reads as follows:

> Part IV is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequentially upon the repeal of Part IV and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

Part IV of the Constitution Act, 1982, has to do with the constitutional conferences which give the aboriginal peoples the right to be present and take part in the compulsory conference provided for 1982-83 which did take place; it also stipulates that representatives of the Northwest Territories and of the Yukon shall also have the constitutional right to participate in the discussions that directly affect them. Section 54 repeals all that part, therefore those rights of participation of the interested groups in the year following the proclamation. Today is April 26, 1983. Therefore, that part concerning constitutional conferences and other matters I have just raised are repealed. Furthermore, Section 54 itself is repealed only after proclamation. Here is my question: Was the proclamation referred to in Section 54 issued? If so, when was it issued and how will we be informed about it?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I shall take the question as notice and obtain a detailed answer for Senator Tremblay.

THE BUDGET, 1983

WINNIPEG—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CAPITAL PROJECT PLAN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Leader of the Government to clarify an announcement made last week in the city of Winnipeg by the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, Minister of Employment and Immigration, with respect to the intention of the government's capital project plan for that city?

I followed that announcement in the newspapers as best I could, but it remains unclear to me. There was a suggestion that a sum of $400 million is to be invested in some form for the rebuilding of the centre of the city, and then the discussion seemed to break down into various projects, which did not add up to $400 million—far less than that, in fact. One of those projects is the construction of a stadium in the centre of the city. We already have one, but apparently we are to be offered another.

The point I should like the Leader of the Government to clarify consists of two parts: First of all, what did the minister say, and what does the government propose to do; secondly, what parts of this proposal are contingent on—either the City of Winnipeg or the Province of Manitoba, or both, taking part in the projects, and which parts stand solely on their own as federal projects?

• (2040)

I doubt that the minister will be able to answer that off the cuff, but if he could clarify that situation, it would certainly be helpful.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall be glad to take notice of that question and refer it to the minister responsible, but in listening to Senator Roblin and the way he put it, I am not sure that he gave the date of the announcement. If he could give me that additional information, it would be helpful.

Senator Roblin: The discussion in the newspapers took place over several days. The minister was very coy in that he did not make his statement, as far as I know, to the public, but to some officials in the city administration and perhaps in the provincial government. I am not sure what he said to them and how that compares to what was actually made public. The root of my question is to get clarification of those points, and I can only tell the minister that I cannot give him a specific date because it is not available to me.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret the absence of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. I thought this would be a good evening to get into the Crow, but I take it he will not be here this evening.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think he will be here tomorrow. I am not sure if he is going to be here on Thursday, but he probably will be now that Senator Roblin has expressed some interest in that subject.

Senator Roblin: Is my honourable friend inclined to talk about the Crow?

Senator Olson: I do not mind talking about it but, as my honourable friend has already indicated, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board might be able to give greater illumination to the replies.

Senator Roblin: I shall not press my honourable friend on that matter, but I have to admit that I may not be here on Thursday because of a pressing engagement in Winnipeg. If he does not want to get into the game now, I will have to wait until next week. Perhaps at that time we will have some information about the government's plans.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. CUSTOMS PORTS OF ENTRY—PROPOSED REDUCTION IN HOURS OF SERVICE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Molgat. I cannot make the plea that it is a long answer, so I will read it. It is a reply to a question he asked on March 29 concerning what action the Government of Canada has taken with regard to a proposed reduction in hours of service at some ports of entry to the United States.

We understand that the proposal to reduce the hours of service at the U.S. Customs entry points of Baudette and Warroad, Minnesota and Dunseith, North Dakota, has been reviewed and it has been determined that these ports should continue to operate 24 hours a day for the time being.

Officials in the Department of External Affairs are working in liaison with officials from Customs and Excise to monitor the issue. Should at any time a reduction in service at U.S. border points be proposed, we would take action to register Canadian concerns with U.S. authorities.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved the third reading of Bill C-142, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CERTAIN CLAUSES OF BILLS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 21, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Godfrey:

> That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:
>
> "9. REGULATIONS
>
> In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:
>
> (1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.
>
> (2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:

(a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;

(b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;

(c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;

(d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;

(e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;

(f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;

(g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulation."; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is much merit in this motion but I am going to vote against it for reasons I shall outline. The essence of this motion is as follows: As the proposer of the motion has said, there is—and he quoted it—a cabinet decision of long standing that it will pay particular attention and watch carefully for clauses in bills that offend the principles that are enunciated in this motion. In effect, what the proposer is saying is that cabinet, by reason of a memo and a decision, has directed that all legislation meet certain tests with reference to enabling clauses. Therefore, Senator Godfrey's reasoning goes that a joint committee of Parliament should do the job of making sure that the cabinet does what it has told itself it ought to do.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments until now has been essentially concerned with secondary or subordinate law rather than primary legislation. I believe that what it is now asking the Senate to give it the power to do is something that all members of Parliament and all honourable senators will want to do, and I see no reason why this particular committee should be given that responsibility.

The merit of this motion is that it raises a very fundamental question, among others, of, for example, whether draft regulations should be presented simultaneously with draft bills before Parliament.

If I understand correctly, many of the issues that are raised by this motion, and many others that are related to it, were discussed during the Second Commonwealth Conference on Delegated Legislation which was held recently in this chamber and in which Senator Godfrey, the mover of this motion, participated quite extensively. Also, if I am correctly informed, the Minister of Justice has publicly taken the position that he supports a reform of the type proposed in this particular motion. But he prefers that a whole scheme be brought forward relating to reform of legislation—both the primary enabling clauses and subordinate legislation and the relationship between them—which may or may not include this particular motion but will certainly include some of the questions raised by it. So it is not a question of whether something should be done but of who should do it and how.

For that reason I will vote against this motion and ask honourable senators to do likewise while we await a more widespread and more complete plan for dealing with this and similar problems of delegated legislation.

● (2050)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I may crave the indulgence of the Senate, I should like to say a word or two about this subject because I consider it a matter of great public importance. I think we should be grateful to the proposer for having initiated the debate, because it gives us a chance to ventilate the issue and to express some opinions on it, even if we do not go any further than that.

After hearing the words of the house leader with respect to this motion, I realize that it is unlikely that it will be approved by this house. However, that does not prevent any of us talking about it until the time to vote arrives. I think we must all be concerned with the tendency, perhaps the inevitable tendency, in law-making these days to leave so much to regulation. Every bill that passes has extensive clauses conveying to somebody the right to make regulations. Sometimes that right of regulation-making is broad indeed, and that leads to a situation where the legislature is really no longer the law-making body in the way it used to be in former times. It sets the framework of a statute, true enough, and applies certain general principles to its wording, but it leaves to others a great deal of the essential, substantive law-making power and responsibility.

One could make the argument that in these times, with the tremendous expansion of the activities of government and of the technical society in which we live, such a course is hard to avoid. I admit the force of that argument, but I say that it emphasizes all the more the fact that the legislative body should in some way have an opportunity of reviewing what is done.

The mover of the motion provides that the committee would examine the subject matter, when powers are to be bestowed upon some person to make the rules. That would be a useful exercise.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I really am not content to leave it at the point where the leader of the house left it, namely that we need not do anything now because one of these days the government itself will do something. What that would be I cannot imagine, because they have given no hint whatsoever what it might be, unless perhaps it is the idea that regulations should come down at the same time as the bill. Well, that would be splendid, but I think that is the counsel of perfection. I truly doubt that there would be any real prospect of regulations coming down with the substance of the bill so that the legislative body, namely Parliament, could look at the bill and regulations together. As I say, that is the counsel of perfection. If the government proposed to adopt it, I would applaud the government, but my opinion is that it is unlikely that they would be able to give such an undertaking. It is simply not practical.

So we are faced with the situation that, regardless of examining the subject matter of the bill, which perhaps would be a useful exercise, it begs the question because it continues to leave to some party, who is not a member of either chamber of Parliament, the power to make regulations—unless you say that because it is made by the Governor in Council it gets in under the wire. If we are frank, I think we have to admit that these regulations are approved by the Governor in Council. I would like to think they were read by the Governor in Council, but I very much doubt that they are. I am quite sure they come forward in enormous batches and are approved en masse, with a good deal of faith, on the part of the Governor in Council, in the drafting expertise of the bureaucrats who are really doing the work.

So we must face the fact that in this modern situation in which bills contain powers of legislation delegated to others, "the others" are really the bureaucrats. It is the bureaucracy which devises these rules and recommends them to the Governor in Council, and it is in that way these rules become part of the law of the country. I cast no reflection on the bureaucracy. I am sure they do the best they can. However, it is perfectly clear from the experience we have had as public men and women that on a good many occasions regulations do not give perfect satisfaction. We find on many occasions that regulations are imperfectly drafted. Either they trespass too far on the legislative authority or on the rights of individuals, or they really fail to comprehend the nature of the problem they are expected to deal with. That is a common experience and it is to be expected.

What is the answer, then, in this situation, if we wish to try to bring some of these contentious delegated legislative powers and authorities under the rule of Parliament? Well, I was in Australia and so was the deputy leader. We found that the elected Senate in that country has a unique function. The elected Senate in Australia has the power and authority to disallow delegated legislation made by the executive branch. Under certain of its rules and regulations, that house has the power to bring forward for consideration any regulations or delegated legislation, or administrative acts as I believe they are called down there. If it sees fit, the Senate there has the power to disallow them.

That, with a vengeance I think, is bringing the regulation-making power and the law-making power of the bureaucracy under the scrutiny and exercise of the parliamentary authority and under the cover of the parliamentary legislative function. I think that is a splendid idea. That is the kind of idea we might well consider in this country.

[Senator Roblin.]

If you follow my view of the best form the Senate might take in this country, which is that it should be elected, the merit of the argument becomes all the more obvious, namely, that the Senate should exercise its power. But whether it is obvious or not or whether the Senate should be elected or not, this is a function in which we are uniquely competent to serve, because at the time we are dealing with regulations there is not that question of political confrontation that arises in some bodies that I could mention. Here there is a much more detached and objective view, particularly in the committees of this house. I think we should be proud of that. We deal with the merits of the case in our committees to a much greater degree than we deal with the politics of the matter. By its nature, therefore, this chamber of sober second thought is well suited to deal with this question of regulations and it could be fairly entrusted with the power to disallow them, if it felt it necessary.

Senator Frith: The motion suggested a joint committee, not this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I am not making any reference to that, my honourable friend. I am not really supporting the motion in that sense. I may come round to voting for it when we arrive at that point, but actually I am suggesting a different approach to the matter. I do not think a joint committee should be seized of the matter. I think the Senate would do the work well. If it were submitted to a joint committee, I would have some reservations about how well the work would be done.

How well does it work in a second chamber? What is the experience in Australia? Have they disallowed orders in council and sent them back by the bucketful or by the gross? Has it been a matter of great difficulty down there to get obviously desirable regulations through the legislative process? I am happy to say it has not. It has worked quite well there. According to the information given to us, when we were there, over the course of time since the rule was brought in in Australia only seven regulations have actually been disallowed and rejected by the Senate. At first glance that may seem extraordinary. Why on earth should there be only seven—because we know from our experience in this country that there are many regulations we would like to see changed?

The secret would seem to be that because the Senate in Australia has the power to disallow regulations, if it receives one that raises a question it is in a good position to go to the minister concerned and suggest to him that the regulation is not quite what it ought to be and that, if he wants it to have favourable consideration in the Senate, he will have to consider what reasonable changes might be made in advance to meet the objections that are likely to be raised in the Senate.

It seems that because of that common-sense, perhaps typically British approach—if I may put it that way, although the Australians would not approve of my saying so—because of that typically British solution to a difficult problem—in other words, consultation in advance in order to get Senate approval—they have been able to deal with these matters of delegated legislation in an expeditious and practical way without bringing the mechanism of the government to a grinding halt.

I think those members of the Senate who had the privilege I enjoyed of visiting Australia were greatly impressed by that particular system and appreciated the desirability of bringing the regulatory power of government under review by one of the bodies of Parliament.

While I reserve my position with respect to what we should do with the motion Senator Godfrey has presented, I want to tell him that I am grateful to him for his having given us the opportunity to think about this matter. For what it is worth, I make the suggestion I have just placed before the house, that we benefit from the experience in Australia and consider carefully whether we should adopt that system here. There is a necessity, there is a crying need, in my judgment, for Parliament to recapture its law-making powers, which it has now delegated to the faceless bureaucracy, if I can coin a phrase—blessed by order in council, perhaps, but, nevertheless, not really the product of the legislative assembly of the nation.

● (2100)

I put that suggestion before the members of this house and hope that we will find some way to consider it and to see whether it could be usefully adopted in the Parliament of Canada.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline entitled: "Marching to the Beat of the Same Drum: Transportation of Petroleum and Natural Gas North of 60°", which was tabled on March 30, 1983.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, these are the first words I have spoken in this chamber since I was sworn in two or three months ago. I am grateful to Senator Hastings for permitting me to speak to the committee report before he did, because it gives me two opportunities: one, to say a few things I want to say about energy matters in Canada, and two, which is equally important to me, to meet the traditional obligation of making my maiden speech.

I must say that I have approached this point in time with considerable trepidation. I apologize in advance if I break any rules of which I am not aware. I will try to do better later. I was reminded by a couple of my close friends that there is a hockey game on tonight, and I will, therefore, be suitably brief.

If I may stay on a personal note for a short time, however, I would like to advise honourable senators why I approach this matter and this point in time with such trepidation. When I first entered the chamber, I felt the appropriate thing for the junior senator to do was to be quiet, to pay attention, to look at how things go and to see what sort of examples I would have to match, because it is my desire to be not only with the Senate but of the Senate. "With the Senate" I can be by appointment: "of the Senate" is something I am going to have to work at. I would like to tell honourable senators the point I have reached so far.

I have observed our Speaker, the Honourable Senator Marchand, carry out his duties and guide the affairs of this chamber with grace and dignity that have left me overawed and aware that it would be many years before I could meet such an example. My own leader, Senator Flynn, with his Gallic charm, his ability to express himself on issues, has been warm and friendly to me since I have come, but nonetheless I find myself constantly in awe of his presence. Senator Olson is reminiscent, in my mind, of a southern plantation owner—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He cracks the whip!

Senator Kelly: —receiving our questions politely, dealing with them on the spot at times, and, at other times, promising us the delivery of an answer which comes in due course, but he never lets us forget who is in charge. Again, an extremely impressive example. Of Senator Roblin I can say this: If any neophyte senator ever needed to try to reach some understanding of the meaning of "silver-tongued oratory," I think it is to be heard—and we have heard more of it tonight—in the speeches of Senator Roblin. There is substance in his words but absolute poetry in the way they are delivered—an extremely enviable ability. Senator Frith—tall and handsome, articulate—reminds me a little of a retired Guards officer. I could practice in front of the mirror for hours and never be able to assemble all of those characteristics—for one thing, it would hurt my back. I think of Senator Phillips and the sharp-eyed way in which he delivers his questions right to the heart of the issue. I tried that in front of the mirror, Senator Phillips, but I wear trifocals and it just did not work for me.

Honourable senators, I was prepared to wait until about 1990 to deliver my maiden speech, but for an event which occurred a week and a half ago. Suddenly another appointment to the Senate was made and I realized I was no longer the junior senator in terms of seniority. I had the chilling feeling, having read his impressive curriculum vitae, that the new senator would be sworn and, within a week, would make his maiden address, and my cowardice would be there for all to see.

That, honourable senators, brings me to the matter with which I would like to proceed, and I promise that the hockey game will not be far off.

I have chosen to deal with the report of the Northern Pipeline Committee and the overall question of oil self-sufficiency and security of supply in this country, because it is an issue that runs to the very heart of my view of Canada and my view of our common opportunity as Canadians.

My background is a background in the province of Ontario, a province built by industrious individuals who believed in the value of hard work, sound investment, growth and community responsibility, and I feel deeply privileged to be able to be present in this house to speak not only on behalf of my own forebears and the people of the Port Severn area, but also on behalf of all the people of Ontario and Canada who share a common commitment to an enterprise community and to getting on with dealing with those challenges and problems, which we can and must overcome if we are to build an effective, efficient nation that can and will compete to the benefit of all our people.

I must say to you, honourable senators, that I worry when we look at issues such as energy pricing in this country. We become beset by our own internal perspective and lose touch, sometimes, with the international and global implications of our energy circumstances and the situation in which we find ourselves.

I point out to all honourable senators, with great respect, that, while we quibble about east-west pricing, while we fail to address, as the committee's report so eloquently points out, the important issues of energy transportation in the north, some 63 per cent of the world oil inventory is in the hands of the OPEC countries, and another 16 per cent is in the hands of the Communist bloc. In other words, almost 80 per cent of the world's oil is in the hands of countries that are viewed by many as being unstable, and, in some cases, openly hostile.

We have seen very directly how this fact can lead to sudden and severe adjustments to western economies entirely outside their control. We can all recall how, late in 1973, OPEC moved its price for a barrel of oil from $3 to just under $12. Again, in 1979, the price was adjusted from $13 to $24 by the end of 1979, and upward again to $34 by early 1983. Currently, we are seeing the same world prices decline sharply, and we, as a country, have some significant decisions to make as a result.

I say this to you, honourable senators, only because I believe that critical and strategic decisions in the energy area must be made not so much in the context of effective price control—although this is not unimportant—but more clearly in the interest of national security.

Canada, in my view, is a microcosm of the world as far as energy is concerned. We have surplus gas and a shortage of domestic supplies of oil. We have to keep in mind that our existing oil fields are some 65 per cent depleted. We will, therefore, become increasingly dependent upon imports of oil which will, as sure as we are sitting here today, ultimately be in short supply.

Canada is somewhat unique among western nations in that we have substantial opportunities to develop additional oil supplies of our own. These opportunities are tempered because these supplies are high cost. They exist in remote areas such as the Beaufort Sea and North Atlantic waters, and in tar sands, where expensive upgrading is required.

I think we must begin with the premise that, in the longer term, higher prices are not only inevitable but unavoidable as economic recovery picks up pace and as the requirement for energy supplies increase. It would be naive and foolhardy for us not to accept that substantial supply dislocations are quite probable. Who in this house could look dispassionately at Mexico, Venezuela, Nigeria or any of the countries of the Middle East, and say with assurance that political uncertainty, military intervention or internal political difficulty could not produce a substantial and meaningful interruption of supply almost overnight, with no warning at all?

Honourable senators, supply security remains an absolute imperative for this country and for the other industrialized countries of the west, and must be considered whenever we are trying to make economic and political decisions about energy supplies in this world of ours.

I would also ask, as an amateur historian, that we all take a moment to reflect upon the history of this country. Canadians have always been prepared to pay a bit extra for the kinds of institutions and infrastructure that have made the difference between a country that could exist and one that could not. Sir John A. Macdonald did the impossible with the construction of a railroad. In the late 1950s we built major pipelines from west to east across this country, when early market logic would have placed these pipelines from western Canada south into the western United States, and from the southeastern United States northward into central Canada.

• (2110)

When John Diefenbaker, the member for Prince Albert, was Prime Minister of Canada he created the Ottawa valley line, to the west of which central Canadians were asked to purchase domestic crude rather than the far less expensive crude available from Venezuela and points abroad. This higher priced crude was purchased by central Canadians with their dollars, thereby assisting substantially in financing oil industry expansion and growth and the development of new wells and new sources in western Canada. That was an important investment for Canadians to make because without it there would have been no oil industry to give us the competitive edge we have today. We have been prepared in the past to pay more for things that built this country, and I would argue, however unpopular it might be with Ontarians, for example, today, that we in central Canada must continue to be prepared to make that kind of contribution if we are to pull our weight and do our fair share.

In the simplest possible terms, I believe it is essential that we Canadians not be distracted by the current declining world price for oil and soften our commitment to security of supply. In my opinion, in order to maintain the momentum in our own oil and gas exploration development, Canadians may have to be asked to pay as much, or even more, for Canadian oil than the level to which the world price may momentarily descend. If the Iran-Iraq war, for example, should suddenly escalate and those two countries decide to seriously attack each other's oilfields and tanker fleets, the present so-called world oil glut would disappear almost overnight, and within as few as 30 days we could be faced with an oil scarcity equal to the one in 1973.

I might say at this point that I was encouraged by statements made by the Honourable Jean Chrétien last week at the Empire Club in Toronto, where he identified as only one of his options the necessity of maintaining the health and viability of the petroleum-producing industry in Canada as a necessary element to ensure energy security for the future.

I am particularly in support of the report submitted by Senator Hastings and of the genuine thrust which suggests that there must be a fundamental reduction of bureaucratic hazards and roadblocks and obstacles to meaningful progress in the area of the Beaufort Sea, so that we Canadians can get on with that job. It is critical that the regional planning process be expedited in every respect, and that a planning mechanism be inaugurated by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to allow effective participatory regional planning to proceed not endlessly, but toward some resolution and some final decision.

I am particularly proud of the recommendation that calls upon the Government of Canada to upgrade our Arctic response capability, the Canadian Coast Guard, and I would add to that the Canadian navy's capacity to defend our sovereignty and protect life and limb in that part of the world.

Honourable senators, the committee has dealt with a terribly complex and difficult issue with many side issues and implications associated therewith. I believe the committee has dealt with those issues effectively and responsibly, and, moreover, that the propositions we have put forward constitute a meaningful way for the Government of Canada to expedite important energy development. If we are to be consequent with the genuine global situation and the uncertainties we face, getting on with that development is an absolute high priority, and there is no cost, in my opinion, that is too great.

Honourable senators, I am greatly relieved to have my maiden speech behind me. I may not have passed the test, but I feel that at least I have met the obligation.

On motion of Senator Guay, debate adjourned.

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

PROPOSALS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, April 21, 1983:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on April 19, 1983.

He said: Honourable senators, I too want to be brief, for a number of reasons. As Senator Kelly has pointed out there is competition perhaps from a hockey game and other interests, and it is also a little late in the evening.

What I would like to do, however, in beginning a debate that I think will continue from time to time in the Senate, is to set out some of those things that happened in the preparation of the recent budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance. These things are very significant and, I think, precedent-setting.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Like the zoom lens!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators opposite, I know, are going to be constantly and repeatedly interrupting me with something they think is witty criticism. That does not bother me, because I have all kinds of ammunition, if that is the right word, for dealing with the kind of remarks that I anticipate will come from several of them. I do not want to name them, because I do not know who has been designated as leader of that exercise tonight, especially in the absence of Senator Flynn, who is so expert at it. I think there is a very serious side to the budget, and to the economic conditions in Canada that the budget was designed to deal with. The fact is that in all of the 20 years, more or less, that I have been around Parliament Hill I cannot remember a budget the appropriateness and responsibility of which have inspired a higher degree of acceptance throughout a wide cross-section of this country.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Who is going to pay for it?

Hon. Lowell Murray: Compared to what?

Senator Olson: Compared to the 15 or 20 other budgets that I have heard, some of them designed by Liberal ministers of finance, others by Conservative ministers of finance. I was for about 10 years in the very happy position of being somewhat neutral vis-à-vis both the so-called main line parties, so that I could assess these budgets very objectively. My statement still stands. I know of no budget with regard to which there has been so much favourable comment throughout the media, and from spokesmen of many of the sectors that are vital to economic recovery in Canada.

Senator Asselin: Who is going to pay for it?

Senator Olson: I wonder if members opposite would just hold their steam for a moment. If I were to read all of the statements I have just alluded to, including this collection of quotable quotes from the media all across the country that runs to dozens of pages, and quite a few headlines, they would be impressed.

That, however, is not really the point. The point I wanted to make is that there is a reason for all of this. The pre-budget consultative process that the Minister of Finance embarked upon long before he came in with his budget, lasting at least five months, has been a highly successful exercise. There are all kinds of quotes that can be brought forward as proof of this, though I do not want to read them particularly, since I know honourable senators have already read them themselves. Many people, however, having been asked by the Minister of Finance to come to meetings, some held in Ottawa, others in other cities across the country, took the time to analyze the economic situation that they knew the Minister of Finance had to deal with, and, seriously and responsibly, gave him their interpretation of the real economic conditions in their sectors, and made suggestions that would help the situation. It is easy to go to a meeting and ask for more than you expect to get. It is easy to lay out all of the plans that could be made for any particular sector, whether it be fishing, agriculture, mining, manufacturing in all its forms—

• (2120)

Senator Murray: Tourism. Did you hear what they said?

Senator Olson: —tourism, or whatever. It is easy to do that. One thing I learned a long time ago, long before I got into government, was that if you wanted to get the right response from a minister, you should make sure that his advisers gave him the right advice.

Senator Asselin: Was it the same with MacEachen?

Senator Olson: It means that if you want to get a positive reaction to those things that you really believe should come from changes in government policy, then you have to give a minister, and indeed a lot of ministers, advice they can take, because obviously a minister cannot accommodate all of the suggestions that are going to be made by any particular sector.

So I want to start out by reminding honourable senators, particularly those members of the opposition, that one of the reasons for the high acceptability—the "high level of acceptance" is perhaps the better way of putting it—of this budget is primarily because of the consultative process that went on before it was brought in.

Of course, it was known by everyone in the country, including the Minister of Finance, that unemployment was painfully high. We acknowledge that. We know that the business sector is in difficulty. It is also known that some problems, such as the debt-to-equity ratio, in a number of businesses across this country, are disturbing factors in terms of how one can now expect them to move to make plans for more investment, to actually do the financing for the investment that they plan, so that we can reach the point where there is a higher level of economic activity.

Unfortunately most people across this country also understood that productivity growth has been unsatisfactory, to put it mildly. Others would say that it has been dismal in relation to some of the competition that we have to meet in the international market. We are also aware—and so were the people who gave the Minister of Finance advice at those consultative meetings—that the federal deficit is very large.

But I believe it is also fair to say, in looking at this budget, now that we have had a few days of retrospective analysis, if I can put it that way, that major progress has been made in reducing inflation and interest rates. Business and consumer confidence has improved substantially in the last few weeks, and I believe particularly since the budget came down. As the Minister of Finance pointed out, one of the main thrusts of the budget was to increase that business and consumer confidence so that in this country at least, and to the extent that we have the capability to influence economic conditions, we can accept that fact.

The strategy is, of course, centred around economic recovery. It has been called a recovery budget. It has also been called a number of other things, but in this case it is different from the past, in that most of the things it has been called are complimentary. That is something that I have not heard in all the years I have been here. I understand that members opposite are trying to belittle it, but that is their job. I understand that. However, headlines in the press, such as the Financial Post, say: "'Return to sanity,' says small business"; "Big boost for projects"; "R&D tax incentives giving big break to small firms". I turn to another page and find that it says: "Fine tuning makes jobs programs look brighter".

In case honourable gentlemen opposite missed reading those articles, they can be found in the Financial Post of April 23. This is just one paper. They can pick up almost any paper across the country and read similar headlines. Here it says: "RHOSP changes to help 'stability' of housing". It also says: "Help for small business looks good on paper . . .", and then they put in a "but".

Senator Murray: What paper are you reading?

Senator Olson: The Financial Post of April 23, 1983. Here is another headline that says: "Manufacturers approve of focus of the budget". Those are the kinds of things that appear in that paper.

Hon. Jack Marshall: A return to insanity.

Senator Olson: Some of that insanity was, of course, created between 1979 and 1980. I am sure that Senator Marshall will acknowledge that.

An Hon. Senator: You should also acknowledge—

Senator Olson: I really would like to follow the train of thought that I had designed for my speech. However, I was prepared for some interruption, and some of the things that I am about to say will no doubt generate more of the reaction that we are beginning to see manifest itself.

The budget strategy is centred on economic recovery, as I said a few moments ago before I was interrupted while giving the views of businessmen across the country. One general goal is to make sure that the recent stirrings of growth, that are now showing up in the economy in certain sectors, pervade the whole economy as quickly as possible. That is why the stimulation is there. The second general goal of the thrust is to make the recovery a durable one by beginning immediately to create the conditions required for sustained growth and development during the rest of the 1980s.

One can be even more specific about those goals. One could describe them as providing additional stimulus this year, and I am sure everyone in this chamber agrees that it is needed. It also has the effect—although honourable senators opposite will never admit this; but if they really analyze what is in the budget, and we are successful in stimulating further growth in an economy that now appears to be picking up, they will recognize this—of reducing the deficit in later years. If we are going to continue the very substantial and highly satisfactory social net that we have set up in this country, then it is absolutely essential that we get some more economic activity going now. And I tell my honourable friends opposite that I believe most sincerely that by getting this stimulation in place now it will, in fact, reduce the deficit over the longer term, for the balance of this decade.

Senator Murray: Would the minister permit a question?

Senator Olson: I will permit any question as soon as I am finished—and that will not be long. As a matter of fact, I am taking longer than I had expected because of the amount of heckling that arises once in a while.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Carry on. You are doing fine.

Senator Olson: There are a few general thrusts that should be discussed in this budget, so that my honourable friends opposite, when they participate in the debate, can make a more focused and intelligent comment on some of the detail that they were complaining about earlier tonight during Question Period. If they understand that, they will do a better job in the debate.

Let me get to my next point. The budget is to provide additional short-term support through job creation; it is to improve the financial health of the business sector, and to encourage equity investment. We spent a long time discussing that one item alone, and it is extremely important, from the point of view of the government. Then, of course, there are other measures to promote improved productivity and competitiveness.

We believe—and the Minister of Finance pointed this out—that the private sector, for the kind of recovery that we need in this country, will be the primary engine of growth. I believe it is a long time since there has been so much emphasis on those sectors of the economy which have been the primary engine of growth in our economy in the past, and they are now encouraged by the amendments that have been made.

Secondly, Canada must position itself in such a way that it can take advantage of the world recovery when it comes, and, of course, in many ways we are tied directly to the United States. No one argues that fact. But we also have very important business connections, trade relations, and so on, with many other countries around the world. It seems to me that we have to be in a good position, particularly from a competitive point of view—and this, of course, gets down to cost competitiveness—in that highly competitive international market. We have to be ready to participate in the recovery, if and when it comes. But even if the recovery is a long while coming, we also have an obligation, considering the kind of resources we have—and I am referring not only to our vast natural resources, which are probably greater than those of any other country in the world, but also to the high levels of technology and skills within our workforce—to make use of all those resources. Therefore, we should be able to do a little better in the recovery than the rest of the world, which is one of the themes set out in the budget. This means that we must make adjustments in technology and in many other factors which will lead to better cost competitiveness so that we may participate in the recovery at a higher level.

● (2130)

The deficit is not a problem in the short term but it could become a problem in the medium term if it is not reduced. The point made by the Minister of Finance—and I am sure that members opposite will agree that it is a valid one—is that when the industrial and commercial sectors have backed out of the financial markets to some extent—and there is evidence that that is so—

Senator Murray: No wonder.

Senator Olson: —not only last year but in their investment intentions for 1983—then it is appropriate for the government to move in and make—

Senator Murray: Come on!

Senator Olson: —those kinds of capital investments now. What it means is that we accelerate and bring forward some of the capital investments which the federal government was planning for later in this decade in any event.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Exactly!

Senator Olson: All of these potential investments cannot be moved up. Then, on the other side, if and when—and we would rather say "when"—the private sector of the economy is speeded up to such an extent that it will make greater demands on the financial market, the federal government can then back out even more because we will have made many of the essential infrastructure improvements and, in some cases, renovations that are absolutely essential to the economic well-being of this country.

We went through a long period—during the 1970's and later—when capital projects, particularly those which are the responsibility of the federal government, were postponed because of the size of the deficit and because of other demands that were being made. As a result we have a plant, if you want to call the Canadian economy a plant, in which some investments should have been made some time ago. Now we have an excellent opportunity to do so. By following the kind of reasoning the Minister of Finance has relied upon in his budget and which I gave a few minutes ago, there are times when it is more appropriate for the federal government to accelerate capital infrastructure programs that keep that "plant" modernized. I think that insofar as capital markets are concerned, competition in the private sector is an area we should look at very carefully. The Minister of Finance has looked at this area, and that is why $2.4 billion have been allocated for capital projects which will be brought on sooner rather than some time later.

There is a number of details in this budget that I should talk about, such as the special recovery program, the improved business financial strength, which has received funding of more than $2 billion, and the very important support given to the housing sector through enhancing the rules by liberalizing them and through the funding which has been announced. Five programs in the housing sector, involving rather significant amounts of funding, were announced by the minister. Then there is direct support for employment amounting to about $700 million. There are special programs for young people, a group in which there is a high level of unemployment, particularly young people under 25 years of age. There is a number of programs with respect to improved child benefit systems. There are programs for those who need help the most and programs involving productivity and competitiveness. However, I shall not go into these subjects tonight because each one of them needs a short, detailed explanation.

I notice that during Question Period members of the opposition are constantly asking for more detailed information. It seems to me that it would be useful were we to adjourn the debate on this inquiry now, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak tonight. If it is agreeable to honourable senators, I will agree to giving honourable senators, particularly the Leader of the Opposition or the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, the opportunity to participate in this debate under the inquiry more than once. In other words, I would not attempt to stick to the rule allowing each senator to make only one intervention.

Senator Marshall: You can't change the rules.

Senator Olson: I am suggesting that we relax the rules in this case so that members of the opposition, particularly the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, can enter into the debate for short periods of time after a minister directly responsible for a program has made a more detailed presentation of the program, so that they may make some comments on what has been done. I hope honourable senators will accept my suggestion as a reasonably good idea and will allow the rules to be relaxed accordingly. I realize we will have to ask for leave each time. I am not going to move a motion now but, as far as I am concerned, if members opposite want to participate more than once in the debate I will not refuse the leave they need to do so.

I was attempting to go into the detail of the federal capital works programs announced yesterday by the Minister of State for Economic Development in the other place, but I am sure that much of the detail has been presented through the media. However, more such announcements will be made during the balance of the budget debate and perhaps afterwards. So perhaps we should leave the inquiry on the Order Paper so that members can participate from time to time as particular sections of the total budget thrust come up for discussion.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not intend to continue the discussion the honourable minister initiated tonight; I want to say a word on the point of order he has raised.

To begin with, I agree with him that, so far, he has not said enough to convince any reasonable person that the budget should be supported, so there is much more to be said if it is to receive the affirmation of this chamber. I also agree with him that members of the opposition—I am not so sure about myself, but others—will wish to take part in the debate. But if the minister really wants to pursue his idea that we should have a more informal exchange, there is no need to change the rules. He can simply introduce the matter in Committee of the Whole. In that way we can deal with this matter as informally as we please. I would have some reservations about changing the rules of debate in the house for this particular inquiry. I do not think it is a very good idea. But the committee-of-the-whole procedure exists and if the minister wishes to refer the subject matter for discussion in Committee of the Whole, there is nothing to prevent his doing so.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I rise on the point of order. Perhaps we gave the wrong impression. There is no suggestion that we amend the rules. What we have done here is bring the budget into the chamber for debate by means of an inquiry which in itself is unusual but, I think, very desirable. As a matter of fact, Senator Roblin himself pointed out that one of the problems of bringing the budget before the chamber in the form of an inquiry is that under the rules honourable senators would only be able to speak once.

● (2140)

Because of the nature of this budget and because of the plan to have individual ministers responsible for its various aspects speak on the budget in the other place, it might be that we would want to give honourable senators the chance to speak more than once. All we are saying is that it seems to us a way of solving that problem. We wanted to have it understood, without any resolution, that, as far as we are concerned, we will certainly vote for leave being granted if honourable senators want to speak more than once on this budget because of its new dimensions arising either in the public domain, as Senator Olson has said, or in the other place.

The suggestion about the Committee of the Whole is another possibility, and perhaps we should look at that.

Senator Roblin: I must say, off the top of my head, that I am not very favourably disposed to considering a change in our procedure of the nature recommended by the minister. I see the point he is making. I think it can be accommodated very simply. All that is required is to have the Leader of the Government move that the resolution be referred to Committee of the Whole for discussion, and we on this side could probably undertake to support such a resolution. If that procedure is followed, it provides a reasonable opportunity to discuss the matter in all its aspects within the rules of the house. We do not have to make special changes; we have a mechanism open and available to us if my friends care to use it.

Senator Frith: As I said, honourable senators, there is no need to change any rules. Leave is quite within the rules. However, that does not alter the fact that we should look at this other suggestion as an alternative, and we will do so.

Senator Murray: The minister agreed to take a question, and I would ask him, therefore, if he would obtain for us the following information: What does the government expect will be the impact, in terms of real GNP growth, of the stimulative measures that are being taken in the budget, in each of the next four years?

Senator Olson: I think what Senator Murray is asking for is the impact as a percentage.

Senator Murray: What is the difference?

Senator Olson: What would be the impact because of the budgetary measures?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Olson: I do have some information which may be useful to Senator Murray, in that we do expect the real GNE to be up by 2.3 per cent in 1983, or 6.5 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982. We are then expecting a real GNE increase of 5.2 per cent in 1984.

However, that does not entirely cover the question Senator Murray has asked. He is talking about the difference, and this would be from all the factors involved.

Senator Murray: Since the minister is pursuing this line at the moment—that is, the real GNE forecast for 1983-84—can he give me the government's forecast for 1985-86? I have been unable to find any forecasts in the budget, but there must be some, since I notice that his colleague, the Minister of Finance, is projecting revenues and expenditures and the size of the deficits in those years, so he must be basing it on some forecast of GNE growth.

Senator Olson: I do not have that answer right in front of me, but I do have some information which might be helpful to Senator Murray. Total outlays of the government, as a percentage of GNP, will drop from 23.6 per cent in 1983-84 to 21.3 per cent in 1986-87.

Senator Murray: Then the minister will be able to calculate back what the projected growth in GNP is in 1986-87 and will be able to furnish us with that figure, presumably.

Senator Olson: That is very likely. It is probably in the budget papers somewhere, but it is not right at my finger-tips at the moment. However, I will refer to the Minister of Finance the exact question that Senator Murray has asked.

Senator Murray: Will the minister also obtain from his colleague an answer to the first question I asked, which is: What is the difference; what is the impact of the stimulative measures on real GNP? The minister may be aware that some of the financial houses and other economic forecasters and analysts have made their own calculations. I would like to hear what the government's calculations are.

Senator Olson: I will put that question to the minister and if there are some financial houses that have made some other calculations that Senator Murray might be interested in, I will be glad to bring them as well, especially where there is a very positive impact. It is, of course, somewhat difficult to measure precisely the impact that may come about because of the positive psychological influence that this budget has had on business generally across the country.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, may I add a word on the discussion of order, and on the suggestion that has been made by the Leader of the Government and the further discussion of it by the two deputy leaders?

There is ample precedent in the Senate for the procedure suggested by the Leader of the Government. There have been occasions when something of extraordinary circumstance has come before the Senate and the Senate has given permission for honourable senators to speak two, three, four times. In particular, I recollect instances when Senator Grosart was the financial critic and when he spoke to a motion more than once, as did senators on the government side of the house.

Perhaps when the two deputy leaders consider the question of what the Senate should do in this case, they might care to look at those precedents which are relatively numerous.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 5:15 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 27, 1983

The Senate met at 5.15 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

April 27, 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of April, 1983, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting Small Business Investment Grants.

An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

• (1725)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may I have leave to dispense with all items on the Order Paper down to "Orders of the Day"?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Why stop there? Why not include "Orders of the Day"?

Senator Frith: Because I did not want to assume that any order standing in the name of an honourable senator opposite would stand. I was about to say that all orders stand, so far as I am aware, subject to Senator Macdonald's agreement.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Agreed.

Senator Frith: And the inquiry standing in the name of Senator Molgat also stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 28, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Godfrey be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Molgat on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 10, 1983, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: Before the question is put, by way of explanation to honourable senators present and for the record, I would say that the information I have received is that the budget debate will continue in the other place certainly for all of next week, and that there will be no legislation ready for the Senate to consider next week. However, I understand that some committees of the Senate will be meeting next week, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate will not be sitting.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us if on the order paper in the other place there will be only the bills that have been introduced during the current long session, or whether the government is going to bring in legislation other than legislation flowing directly from the budget proposals?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in making inquiries yesterday I was told that some four or five new bills would appear on the Commons order paper, but I do not know their nature. I assume, and my informant assumed, that they would be bills flowing from the budget, but we will know when we receive tomorrow's Commons order paper.

Senator Flynn: Would the deputy leader inquire of the house leader in the other place as to the bills on the order paper the government has given up hope of passing during the current session? Some of us are prepared to deal with legislation such as the bankruptcy bill, which was introduced over three years ago. We do not know whether the government is still considering pushing this legislation through. Nothing has been done about it. There are many other bills of that type, and it would be very useful for us to know which bills have been given up on by the government.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it would be very uncharacteristic of this government to give up hope on any subject, but I shall draw to the attention of the government leader in the other place the observations made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and see if he has any information for us as a result.

Hon. Jack Marshall: In view of the fact that it appears that the House of Commons cannot keep up with us with regard to legislation—they are so far behind—I wonder if any consideration might be given to changing the order of reference concerning the Special Joint Committee on Reform of the Senate so as to refer to Senate and House of Commons reform.

Senator Frith: Just in case any member of the other place does not read every word of Debates of the Senate, I will see that that is drawn to the attention of the leadership in the other place.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TEMPORARY ENLISTMENT OF YOUNG CANADIANS IN ARMED FORCES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My question concerns the program whereby 5,000 individuals between the ages of 17 and 25 will be given a year's training with the armed forces. I am wondering if any details are available with regard to quotas across the country, where the training will take place, who will be responsible for the training, and other matters affecting that interesting program.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is some detail available with regard to the program, but I think that in order to answer Senator Marshall's question fully I need to get an up-date from the Minister of National Defence, who will be administering the program. As to who will be responsible for it, it will be the Department of National Defence.

The indication in the budget was that 5,000 additional spaces would become available within the Department of National Defence for people who wish to apply for some military and some technical trade training for up to a year each, or in some cases, I believe, up to two years.

I should like Senator Marshall and other senators to know also that this is in addition to an announcement made on March 3 or 4, if my memory serves me correctly, that a significant number of additional spaces was being provided, and that the funding for those spaces would be available within the military reserves, in the context of the cadet corps and the militia. I believe also that there were 16,000 spaces added at that time among the various cadet corps and militia units. Therefore, quite a lot of detail has been given, although I am not sure if in that detail was included the allocation of particular numbers of opportunities in certain regions; but the program was to be applicable and available to all districts across Canada.

There is one other thing the honourable senator should know. I think I am correct in saying that 6,300 of those additional spaces were provided in the militia units across the country.

Senator Marshall: I recognize that the program will come under the Department of National Defence; but what I am wondering is whether these recruits will be taken into regular armed forces camps, or whether they will be trained in armouries across the country. My concern is that, as so often happens, the rural areas will be left out. I would like to be sure that people in rural and isolated areas will be given the same opportunities as those in centres where there are facilities.

Senator Olson: I think they will indeed, honourable senators. The 5,000 that the honourable senator identified as the number added is for the regular armed forces. I will get a more detailed and precise answer, but I anticipate that they will be taken into the facilities the armed forces now have, wherever they are. I will make a note regarding whether or not training can be made available in some of the rural areas. I want to make it clear that it is not the intention to build facilities for these new recruits, but rather to use up training spaces that are now available.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Has it not already been announced that the 5,000 will come from the approximately 8,000 who have already applied for recruitment into the forces; that they will be given first consideration?

• (1410)

Senator Olson: As honourable senators who have taken an interest in this in the past will know, the number of applications for recruitment into the armed forces has been running a long way ahead of the authorized numbers that the armed forces could take. Certainly, those applications that are already in will be given consideration, and I expect such applications will receive priority treatment.

[Senator Olson.]

SPORT

TORONTO—PROPOSED DOMED STADIUM

Hon. Lowell Murray: Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether a decision has been made by the government with regard to federal government financing of the proposed $100 million domed stadium in Toronto? If so, can he tell us what the decision is? If not, can he tell us what the status of this project is?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to make some inquiries about that. I do not believe that any decision has been announced with respect to it.

Senator Murray: My question to the Leader of the Government was whether a decision had been taken.

Senator Olson: Members of the opposition, both in this house and the other house, constantly attempt to get ministers to reply before the government is ready to make an announcement, and we know some of the problems we have encountered in the past.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Do you?

Senator Olson: That is why I specifically used the word "announced," because Senator Murray and Senator Flynn know full well that there are certain discussions that all cabinet ministers have or are a party to, but they are not authorized to make announcements before the minister directly responsible for a specific program is ready to make an announcement. I hope that Senator Murray will not try to take me down that road, because obviously I will not go that route.

Senator Murray: The minister has already gone far enough down the road. It appears that the decision has been made, but the announcement has not yet been made.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator cannot arrive at that conclusion as a valid one.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Nice try!

Senator Murray: Can the minister indicate when the announcement of this decision will be forthcoming?

Senator Olson: Senator Frith was giving me some good advice, and I missed part of the question. Would the honourable senator repeat the last part?

Senator Murray: Can the minister indicate when the announcement of this decision will be made?

Senator Olson: I shall make inquiries about two aspects of it: first, not only when but if an announcement is to be made; and, secondly, if the minister is willing to give some advance notice of when a number of people may or may not make up their minds. The honourable senator will understand that that is a rather tenuous basis on which to reply to the question.

Senator Flynn: It changes from one minister to the other.

Senator Murray: Can the minister say whether any negotiations are under way with other levels of government on this matter, particularly with the Province of Ontario or the City of Toronto?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall include that in the inquiry I make of the minister or ministers. I am not sure whether this matter involves one or several ministers.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE ARCTIC—SUBMARINE ACTIVITY IN CANADIAN WATERS

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government, which I appreciate he will no doubt have to take as notice. Does the Government of Canada have any knowledge of any unauthorized submarine penetration of the sovereign waters of Canada in the Arctic?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know of none recently. It depends on how far back in history the honourable senator wishes to go. I repeat, I know of none recently; nevertheless, I shall make inquiries.

Senator Hastings: In making those inquiries, would the minister be kind enough to ascertain whether the Department of National Defence has the capability of detecting any unauthorized penetration?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Department of National Defence, with some of the new aircraft which have recently come into operation—when I say "recently," I mean in the past few months—has some very modern and highly sophisticated equipment for this type of detection; but as to whether it is impossible for any movement within Canadian waters to go undetected, I do not believe anyone can make that categorical statement.

● (1415)

THE BUDGET

DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION TO SENATORS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Would the Leader of the Government ensure that honourable senators are included on the distribution list with regard to all programs announced in the budget? I ask this question because there seems to be a vacuum in some departments in that senators are not on the list for receiving information as to the various districts across Canada. Would he ensure that senators are included on the list?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am constantly trying to make sure, sometimes in response to questions asked by Senator Marshall and for the information of senators in general, that we are kept up to date. I do not believe that it is a matter of senators not being informed or not receiving press releases. If there are any such cases in that regard, they can be corrected immediately. I think that what Senator Marshall is looking for is early notification, and I shall try to do something to meet that request.

THE CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister recently indicated in the other place that, subject to certain conditions, he is prepared to introduce legislation in this session to entrench property rights in the Constitution.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise the house whether or not it is the government's intention to proceed with such legislation before Parliament adjourns for the summer, and, if so, has that legislation been prepared and is it available to members of the house?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take the question as notice. I can confirm that an offer was made to the opposition parties in the other place that if they would pass the legislation within, I believe, 24 hours, such legislation—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Resolution.

Senator Olson: —or resolution would be brought forward. I have not heard whether both opposition parties have complied with that offer, or at what stage the process is, so I shall take the question as notice.

INDUSTRY

MASSEY-FERGUSON LIMITED—TORONTO PLANT LAY-OFFS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Social Development.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Senator Austin, wake up!

Senator Haidasz: Has the minister been informed of the impending loss of 1,000 jobs at the Massey-Ferguson plant in Toronto? Massey-Ferguson announced, in conjunction with the lay-offs that they would be moving the entire Toronto plant to Brantford, Ontario.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, first of all, I apologize to Senator Haidasz for not responding directly, as I was in conversation with Senator Hastings about gating, a subject that is very much on his mind, as honourable senators know.

With respect to the announcement by Massey-Ferguson, I am not aware of it, and I am sorry to say that if such an announcement has been made public, I have not seen it. However, I do want to remind honourable senators that Massey-Ferguson is a listed company in which the federal government is a very small shareholder. Undoubtedly, what they are doing is, in their view, within their commercial decision-making authority and is not a question of government policy from the point of view of my role as a minor shareholder in that company.

[Translation]

REFORM OF THE SENATE OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—FEMALE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. Last week, on reading the list of senators who will sit on the Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate, I was somewhat surprised, as were a number of other senators, that the list did not include female representation.

Here is my question: would you keep in mind, whenever a substitution is eventually made, that a lady senator could very well be appointed to that committee?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, another of our colleagues has already drawn my attention to the fact that ladies are not represented on that committee. I thank my colleagues for that suggestion, and I fully agree that the solution lies in our power to make substitutions.

[English]

VISITOR IN GALLERY

THE VERY REVEREND TADEUSZ ZASEPA, DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF EXTERNAL RELATIONS, CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF LUBLIN, POLAND

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to draw to your attention the presence in the visitors' gallery this afternoon of the Very Reverend Doctor Tadeusz Zasepa, Director-General of External Relations of the Catholic University of Lublin, Poland. He is accompanied by a representative of the student body, a Canadian student from Ottawa, Mademoiselle Caroline Lussier, and members of the executive of the Canadian Association of Friends of the Catholic University of Poland. I am sure that honourable senators would like to join with me in wishing the Very Reverend Father Zasepa a successful and enjoyable visit to Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1420)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I ask leave of the Senate to withdraw this motion. I have already sent a memorandum to all honourable senators explaining that, because of information I received from the Australian delegation during the Second Commonwealth Conference on Delegated Legislation, I have come to the conclusion it would be more appropriate that "the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs" be substituted for "the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments." Senator Neiman, the chairman of that committee, who originally seconded my motion, agrees with that. It was decided that, rather than amend the original motion, it would be procedurally simpler if I withdrew this motion. Senator Neiman will give notice of a new motion at the next sitting. That motion will be the same as the present motion except for the substitution of "the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs" for "the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments."

In making this suggestion I am somewhat reminded of Genghis Khan, who used to ride into battle with a woman in front of him. I am conscious of the fact that any motion proposed by Senator Neiman will have a considerably better chance of being adopted by this house than one I propose.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since the deputy leader is the one in charge of saying yes or no to these questions, if we can get his assurance that he will support the motion by Senator Neiman, I think I will give leave right away. Otherwise, I think we should wait and see what the position of the government will be on Senator Neiman's motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we shall have to wait and see.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 10, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 10, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEW INSTALLATIONS FOR FISHING INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PROGRAM

On the presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Would the Leader of the Government indicate why he has not tabled details of the fisheries plan announced in St. John's, Newfoundland, a few days ago, and why we did not get the benefit of reading the good news of that program?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot give a specific answer to that although there probably is one. It may be the fault of my office that we did not bring forward documents tabled in the other place, or even press information, relative to this subject matter. I have learned that Senator Marshall likes to have those presented to him by way of a tabling process, so I will do that in future.

If the honourable senator will give me an hour or two, I will try to answer his question more fully.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government reels off a list of programs and reports, and it seems ridiculous that, in the case of an industry which is so vital to all of Canada, honourable senators from eastern and western Canada should not receive the same benefits as the members in the other place did and not be informed of what is going on in this important industry.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Marshall may be starting an argument about being slighted—

Senator Marshall: You are starting the argument.

Senator Olson: Not at all. There is probably an elaborate press and public information kit available, and it may have even gone to the honourable senator's office, as far as I know. However, I said I would try to find out. I will say that the importance of the report or the action is in no way diminished simply because I did not this evening table a document relating to it.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Stollery be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Riley on the list of senators serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until next Thursday, May 12, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF VANCOUVER ISLAND PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a question that I should have liked to address to Senator Austin, but he is not in his place this evening. One can only presume that he is absent on public business. I certainly hope that that is the case.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): That is a good assumption.

Senator Donahoe: In any event, he is not here. The question I am about to ask would more properly have been directed to him, but it would also be within the knowledge of other persons who serve in the cabinet. Therefore, I will ask the Leader of the Opposition—

Some Hon. Senators: You mean the Leader of the Government.

Senator Donahoe: —if he can supply an answer. I might tell him that I have asked similar questions relating to a project on the east coast, but that was a completely futile exercise. I received no information from him. It was only due to the lapse of time that I eventually received the information I sought.

With respect to this inquiry, however, the time has not yet elapsed. My question has to do with something that is transpiring on the west coast, and I hope I shall get an answer. We have learned that since November 1980 the government has talked about giving financial assistance for the construction of a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. One does not have to be particularly astute to realize that that project has the sympathy and support of Senator Austin. He has made public statements to that effect, and thus we learn that he certainly supports the construction.

● (2010)

My question is a very simple one. May we assume, by reason of that support, that the project is likely to be accelerated, or are we likely to have to wait another two-and-a-half years before witnessing any sign of progress?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will refer that question to the appropriate minister. While I know that Senator Austin has a deep interest in this, for obvious reasons, the Minister of Energy, of course, will be the one directly involved in the negotiations that are presently going on respecting this matter. I will try to obtain further details as to the status of those negotiations.

The honourable senator's preliminary observations were addressed to the Leader of the Opposition, and I think they were appropriate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You are always in opposition to someone.

THE BUDGET, 1983

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As reported at page 24664 of the House of Commons Debates, in his budget speech on April 19 last, the Minister of Finance said:

Fifth, I am allocating $30 million more to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which should be sufficient to extend this program until about the end of May.

By May 4, the Minister of Public Works was quoting his officials as saying it is doubtful we will have enough funds to meet all the demands.

Why, on April 19, did the Minister of Finance announce that the program would be extended until about the end of May, when he, in fact, was adding funds that would only last for about two weeks?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, including Senator Asselin, will understand that there was a very significant increase—I think, beyond anyone's expectations—in the number of applications that came in during the latter part of April. If the servicing of those applications had gone on at about the same pace as before the budget speech, or even at an increased pace, $30 million might have been enough money to accommodate all the applications until the end of May. The facts of the matter, however, are different. There was that very significant increase in applications all across the country. Therefore, it is now apparent that the additional allocation of funding is somewhat less than what the total number of applications would require.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary. The Minister ought to know that the statement made by the Minister of Finance raised high hopes among Canadians who wanted to build or purchase new homes. Even if the Minister of Finance was out to make some political capital, does the Government not feel some degree of responsibility for the fact that people have been let down, are going to lose money and may not be able to finalize their purchase because they are $3,000 short?

When the Minister of Finance realized that funding would not be sufficient, would it not have been preferable to take at least part of the $200 million he added on the night or the night before he brought his budget down so that he could keep his job as a Minister? Would it not have been in the best interests of Canadians if the Minister had kept his promise and provided funding until the end of May, instead of creating a panic among Canadians who had already paid amounts towards the purchase of a new home?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, none of Senator Asselin's comments detract from the validity of the answer that I gave a few minutes before, so I will not repeat it, but I think—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If you say so.

Senator Olson: Well, I say so because I have the facts to back up what I say. I do not have the precise figures, but what I said, in general, is exactly the way things are. The number of applications that came in was far in excess of what was anticipated—

Senator Flynn: So what?

Senator Olson: We ran out of money for the allocation of funding. That is what happened. In any event, the Minister of Public Works indicated earlier today that he will look into it, because we realize that some people are in the situation that Senator Asselin described—indeed, not only individuals—

● (2015)

Senator Asselin: You don't care about them.

Senator Olson: We care more than the honourable senator can describe.

Senator Asselin: You don't care.

Senator Olson: The minister said he would look into it to see if anything could be done to accommodate that situation. In the meantime, I repeat the answer that I gave a few moments ago, that the amount of funding has indeed been taken up very rapidly by an increased number of applications, far sooner than the Minister of Finance anticipated in his budget speech.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: The Leader of the Government may decide to take my question as notice, about the additional $30 million that was supposed to be available until the end of May. Could he perhaps ask the Minister of Finance what sums of money were spent between the date of the announcement until April 19, and could he table this information in the Senate, so that we can see how the $30 million was spent by Canadians who applied for grants under the program announced by the Minister of Finance? Could he obtain these figures and table them in the Senate?

[English]

Senator Olson: Yes, I will take the honourable senator's question as notice. I should advise him that a number of people brought this problem to the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance long before Senator Asselin raised it.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: People are calling us and asking what will happen, because their applications were made the day after this policy was announced by the Minister of Finance. What are we supposed to answer? Should we say that the Minister of Finance is going to reconsider the question and that they can still expect to receive the grants? What are we supposed to answer?

Senator Flynn: They have been had, once again.

[English]

Senator Olson: I have already indicated to Senator Asselin that I will take his question as notice and obtain an answer for him. I have already told him that the Minister of Public Works indicated earlier today that he is looking into it to find a solution to the problem mentioned. The honourable senator is now asking me the same question and wants me to answer the question before I obtain the answer, but I am sure he will not like that because he wants me to obtain the answer from those who are directly responsible for the program.

[Translation]

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS

Hon. Martial Asselin: I would like to get back to a question I put to the Minister two weeks ago when I said that Ministers were travelling across Canada to announce local projects. It is almost like the loaves and the fishes. Some Members go so far as to announce grants of up to $1 million in the Quebec City area. Some Ministers went on the South Shore, at Matane, to announce that millions would be spent over a period of five years. Could the Ministers perhaps observe parliamentary practice and table in advance any announcements of funding for various purposes across Canada, so that we at least will be the first to know, instead of having to find this out from the newspapers and television?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Senator Asselin has it all mixed up.

Senator Asselin: I am not mixed up; you are mixed up.

Senator Olson: The tradition has been followed precisely. The Minister of Finance made a statement respecting the overall budgetary considerations. The following Monday the Minister of State for Economic Development made a statement on the national allocation of funding in the categories where the funding was allocated; and now for each locality where it is important there are ministers and sectoral and regional members of Parliament who are making more specific announcements; and that is exactly the pattern that has been followed in the past.

Senator Asselin: Patronage.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It is a political play!

Senator Asselin: Loaves and fishes!

[English]

WINNIPEG—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CAPITAL PROJECT PLAN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask another question along the line of that introduced by my honourable friend, Senator Asselin, with respect to the announcements that ministers are making about these recovery projects. The Honourable the Leader of the Government will recall that about ten days ago I asked a question about the $400 million development proposal with respect to the city of Winnipeg. He may have the answers to those questions here tonight. If so, he might be kind enough to let me have them.

• (2020)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I do not have them with me.

Senator Roblin: Then there are some other reports the minister could clarify for me while looking into this question. First of all, I think 10 days is ample time to answer the first two questions because if they are not answered in reasonable time they lose their merit and the information is not fresh.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He knows that.

Senator Roblin: However, I should like the Leader of the Government to tell us, because it is not clear from the information the Minister of Employment and Immigration gave in Winnipeg, what conditions he is attaching to the proposal for a $400 million development in that city. In particular, what conditions is he requesting the City of Winnipeg to accept and what conditions is he expecting the Province of Manitoba to accept?

My initial impression was that this was a federal government project and federal in total application. Now it appears that the project is conditional upon other people playing ball, just as the water bombers were conditional on other people playing ball, so we really do not know how good the promise is until we know the conditions.

The second thing I would like him to check into for me is the fact that when the original announcement was made the names of a number of organizations were linked with the proposal and the impression was left, at first reading, that these organizations were part of the operation that was being promoted by the minister. Now it appears that they were not consulted. So I wonder if the minister could establish for me what the facts are in that regard. Were these other organizations consulted, and, if so, what sort of proposition was put to them? The particular organizations I am referring to are Hyatt International Hotels, the Toronto Dominion Bank, the YMCA, the Winnipeg School Division, and the University of Winnipeg. They have all been mentioned in the press releases that have been coming out on this project, with the implication that they are part of the project. Now it appears from their statements that they were not consulted. I wonder if the minister could explain what happened.

A large part of this project consists of a new hotel—and whether or not the feasibility studies will support it, I do not know—more high-rise office accommodation in a city that at the present time has a 11 per cent vacancy rate—and we hope that it will not always be that way—and other projects the economic viability of which are questionable. When you add the fact that we as yet have no economic assessment or, indeed, any social assessment on a project of $400 million—which is large for the City of Winnipeg—one wonders what the basis of this proposal is. After all, you cannot build a pipeline across a quarter-section these days without a social impact study being made. Perhaps I am exaggerating for the sake of emphasis, but the leader understands my point. What studies, town-planning and otherwise, are behind this proposal? What is the justification for this operation?

I am sure that in general terms it is easy to understand that there is a sad situation of inner-city decay in Winnipeg and that people are anxious to do something about it. To that extent we are all in favour of some action, but we want to make sure that the action being proposed is wise and sensible. It would be very reassuring to the public in my city if my honourable friend would answer some of those questions to establish the factual basis of this proposal—what it encompasses, what people are expected to participate, what the terms and conditions of the participation are—so that it can be conveyed to the citizens of Winnipeg.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall take the specific points of the honourable senator's question as notice, add them to the questions asked some days ago and refer them to the minister involved.

● (2025)

However, I think Senator Roblin has at least partly answered his own question, because he wants the citizens of Winnipeg, who will be directly affected by this project to have a grasp of all the details, making sure that they have been worked out with the authorities—in other words, the City of Winnipeg, the Province of Manitoba and whoever is involved from the commercial and private sector.

In any case, it was perfectly normal for the federal government to have had some preliminary discussions with the province and, no doubt, with the citizens of Winnipeg, and then to have come forward with a proposal as to the magnitude of the project and, indeed, some of the criteria for funding by the federal treasury. It is not unreasonable for them to do that without disclosing the detailed negotiations that are obviously required in a matter so large and complex—one that obviously requires time for the negotiations to be worked out without involving a public forum or the media, if I may put it that way.

I say again that that is a perfectly normal process, but Senator Roblin may be in a hurry to get in on the various positions of the people who will be party to the overall project. All I can say is that, until an agreement is reached, it is normal for all parties to insist, more or less, on confining their positions to the negotiating, and I am sure that the reason for the lack of publicity, the reason for not providing all of those details, is precisely that they have not yet been negotiated to a satisfactory conclusion.

Senator Roblin: I only wish that a person as reasonable as my honourable friend was conducting the negotiations because, when this matter first surfaced publicly, it was made quite clear that a sine qua non of the whole project would be the agreement of the city to accept a new arena in the area. I don't know whether that is still the case. Perhaps the minister concerned has given up that particular demand, but he made it at the beginning according to the reports that reached me.

The second point is that he asked the City of Winnipeg to reply within 14 days, or some such short period of time. The city officials were being asked to commit themselves, and to commit their city's taxpayers, to this proposition within that period of time and with the condition that the arena was an essential element. That brought the matter to my notice as something that ought to be looked into.

I hope the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is in charge of this project, has altered his negotiating stance so that he no longer insists on the arena, because, although it may be a good thing in itself, it may not be all that good if it has pre-conditions. Moreover, I hope the minister will give the parties concerned a little more time to consider the matter.

But, apart from all of that, will my honourable friend not agree that at the earliest stage the people concerned ought to know something about the project? Surely, if there is to be some consideration of environmental and social matters, which there will certainly have to be, the sooner the matter becomes public the better.

Just a little while ago the same minister went into the same area with the same kind of proposition. He wanted to put in an industrial park, but he had not gone through the preliminary work of finding out what the people wanted. The fact is that there will not be any industrial park there now. It was necessary for him to formulate a new plan because he discovered that he had not taken the necessary steps to secure the assent of the people concerned. This proposition could well meet the same kind of fate, if it is not handled with care.

If my honourable friend were handling the matter I might feel a little bit better about it but, regardless of that, I believe the facts I have asked for are reasonable and should be available, and I hope they will be forthcoming from the minister without much delay.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, as I have indicated, I will add those additional inquiries to those previously made. However, I cannot help but remark that I am sure the minister directly responsible is handling the matter with all possible care, and has in mind some of the things I reminded Senator Roblin of a few minutes ago.

Senator Roblin: I regret that my honourable friend's rosy opinion will not be shared by the citizens of my city.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM—NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning projects under the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. My question has to do with an announcement by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in St. John's a few days ago indicating the spending of certain amounts of money for various projects. I would ask the Leader of the Government to provide us with a breakdown of the allocation of funds by district within the province of Newfoundland and the amounts of money allocated within the different districts to the various programs mentioned. These projects include the improvement of small craft harbours; the provision of new bait freezing and fish loading installations; the improvement of transportation and the commencement of a new policy for product standardization within the industry, aimed at saving costs. Perhaps the Leader of the Government could provide this information, which I am sure is available, since we in the Senate seem to be the last to receive it.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): It will not be possible to give this information tomorrow because we will not be sitting tomorrow. However, we will be sitting on Thursday, and perhaps I can obtain the information for Senator Marshall by then.

• (2030)

In any event, I am not sure that Senator Marshall's question can be answered precisely in the manner in which he posed it. He has asked for a breakdown by district. What may be available is a breakdown by project, as has been identified by the minister. However, I will try to obtain some specific information on that subject.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN PEACE INITIATIVES

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding the tremendously important discussions which are taking place with respect to the tensions in the Middle East. I would ask the honourable minister whether Canadian diplomats are involved in any way in the discussions with Syria and with the PLO.

Despite the fact that we do not have direct relations with Syria, I am aware that we have a far more open relationship with the PLO than do the Americans, and I am asking what part, if any, Canadian diplomats are playing in terms of consultation with the PLO and the Syrians with a view to the implementation of the Reagan plan. Although I am convinced that this plan is not by any means an adequate solution to the Middle East situation, it seems to me at the moment to be the best offering in terms of peace in the Middle East.

Thirty years ago, Canada played a part in the creation of the State of Israel and, therefore, was one of the creators of the situation in the Middle East. Perhaps the minister could tell this chamber and the country what Canada is doing, through its very able diplomats, to bring about an accomodation, an agreement and a continuation of the dialogue to bring peace to this very troubled area of the world.

• (2035)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as Senator Macquarrie knows from his long experience in following the activities of the Department of External Affairs and our diplomats, we have consistently and quietly attempted to be helpful in those situations. Inasmuch as at the moment the situation in that part of the world is extremely tense, perhaps critical—although that might be too strong a word to use—I shall take as notice the rest of the question as to the more specific details and provide an answer either on Thursday or as soon as possible thereafter.

YUKON TERRITORY

GULF OIL APPLICATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a rather lengthy delayed answer to a question raised by Senator Molgat, regarding the Yukon North Slope and the application of Gulf Oil for the Stokes Point site. Although Senator Molgat is not present this evening, I think he would agree to having it taken as read.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Implicit approval.

Senator Olson: That sounds good.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

> On April 22, the Hon. John Munro, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, announced that consideration of an application by Gulf Canada Resources Inc. for a land use permit to construct exploration facilities at Stokes Point, Yukon has been extended. Mr. Munro explained that section 25(1)(c) of the Territorial Land Use Regulations requires a decision be made within 42 days of receipt of an application, which in Gulf's case was March 11, 1983. The extension was granted, as Mr. Munro believed that it would be impossible to reach a decision within the 42-day time frame, given that the consultative process regarding alternative sites along the Beaufort Sea coast is still underway. The minister also indicated that the extension will provide him with additional time for more thorough discussions with the Ministers of Environment and of Energy, Mines and Resources. The extension will also allow more time for DIAND officials to seek the views of territorial governments, appropriate local communities, and native and environmental organizations.

Mr. Munro made a special point of acknowledging the public concerns that have been expressed about locating facilities at Stokes Point. He also recognized Gulf's legitimate operational requirements during the exploration phase of its activities, and it is for these reasons that such effort has been taken to seek the views of interested groups and such rigorous analysis has been undertaken.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SECTION 54—PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Tremblay on April 26, 1983 regarding section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982, as it relates to Proclamation by the Governor General. This is also a long answer, and I would hope that it could be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

When the U.K. Parliament finally adopted the Canada Act, 1982, Canada's newest piece of constitutional legislation came into existence as the Constitution Act, 1982. It was intended that the purely temporary provisions of this act relating to the calling of the first Constitutional Conference should be removed once they were spent and subsequent sections should be renumbered.

This process has already commenced. Part IV (i.e. Section 37) of the Constitution Act, 1982 was repealed automatically on 17 April, 1983 by virtue of the terms of section 54. The consequential repeal of section 54 and renumbering of the sections following section 37 are optional measures which can be carried out by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

The proclamation has not yet been issued, and it may not be opportune to issue one for some time. Indeed the action taken by the first ministers in March to introduce further temporary provisions on constitutional conferences could render the reading of the Constitution Act unnecessarily confusing to some, if the renumbering occured now. Thus the very purpose of the proclamation could be defeated. The matter is being carefully considered.

Honourable senators will note that the proclamation, whenever issued, will be published in the Canada Gazette.

THE CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The third reply I have this evening, honourable senators, is to a question asked by Senator Manning on April 28 last concerning the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution.

It was the intention of the government to proceed with the introduction of a resolution which would entrench property rights in the Constitution. However, the Progressive Conservative Party introduced the resolution as part of a non-confidence motion in the other place which the government was forced to defeat.

Under the rules of the other place, a resolution covering the same subject matter may not be brought forward again during the same session without unanimous consent.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is better than here.

Senator Olson: The New Democratic Party has refused to give its consent to the introduction of the resolution. Therefore, there seems to be no hope of proceeding with the entrenchment of property rights before the next session of Parliament, no matter how willing or anxious the government is.

Senator Flynn: Are you happy you found an excuse!

PRONOUNCEMENT OF ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, April 28, 1983:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills.

He said: Honourable senators, by way of a parenthetical introduction, I might say that I am aware of another event of national importance taking place this evening, an event which will be televised. Although the arcane and esoteric practices and history of Royal Assent can hardly be called a competing national sport or national interest in this country, honourable senators, I propose to put much of the history and research on this subject on the record this evening.

● (2040)

Honourable senators, outside of the parenthetical introduction, might I point out that the subject is before us by way of an inquiry, and that means we have the opportunity to share senators' opinions on all aspects of this question of Royal Assent. Whether or not any changes are made by way of a bill, resolution, or otherwise, I hope those changes will be as a result of the interventions and opinions of honourable senators on the subject.

Secondly, and still by way of introduction, I want to underline that the inquiry speaks of an alternative procedure. The proposal is for a procedure for Royal Assent in addition to the traditional procedures now in use and not instead of those traditional procedures. So the central question in this inquiry is: Is there any need for an additional and simpler procedure, and, if so, what form should it take and what method should we adopt for implementing the alternative or additional simpler method?

As setting for this central question with its several parts, I want to share with honourable senators some of the research that was done for me on this subject. I propose to examine the experience of other parliaments with Royal Assent, and then to examine some of the legal and constitutional alternatives for implementation. In doing so, I propose to share with honourable senators some information, first, from the Mother of Parliaments, the United Kingdom, and, secondly, from a sister or brother Commonwealth and federal parliamentary system, that of Australia, with a note also of how they compare to the system in Canada.

Royal Assent in Great Britain, of course, is of long history. It marks the formal process by which bills become laws. Once a bill has duly passed both houses of Parliament, it must be presented to the sovereign for his or her assent, since neither house of Parliament possesses legislative power independent of the Crown.

The history of Royal Assent in the United Kingdom divides itself into three basic periods: before 1541, after 1541, and since 1967.

Until 1541, Royal Assent was granted by the sovereign in person. However, in that year in order to spare the king the indignity of assenting in person to the Bill of Attainder which levied punishment for high treason against Queen Katherine, assent was accorded for the first time by royal commission. The 31st Henry VIII c. xxi stated:

> Be it declared by Authority of this present Parliament, That the King's Royal Assent by his Letters Pattent under his Great Seal, and signed with his Hand, and declared and notified in his Absence to the Lords spiritual and temporal, and to the Commons, assembled together in the high House, is and ever was of as good Strength and Force, as though the King's Person had been there personally present, and had assented openly and publickly to the same.

That practice of appointing Lords Commissioners to grant assent on behalf of the Sovereign invariably became more common, to the extent that today it is the normal procedure. Indeed, the last occasion on which Royal Assent was granted by the monarch in person in England was on August 12, 1854, when Queen Victoria personally assented to several bills before proroguing Parliament.

While the granting of Royal Assent is an undeniable right of the Crown, it is now generally conceded that the Crown cannot refuse its assent to bills which have duly passed both houses of Parliament. Indeed, the right to withhold assent has not been exercised since 1707, when Queen Anne refused to proclaim in force the Scotch Militia Bill.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: That was not a brand of whisky!

The granting of Royal Assent is, therefore, now largely a perfunctory phase in the legislative process. I think it is best expressed by the author Redlich:

> Royal Assent is still a necessary formality and is at the same time nothing more than a formality.

Since 1541 and until recently, the normal procedure for the granting of Royal Assent was by commission with three Lords Commissioners acting on behalf of the Sovereign. Attired in ceremonial robes and three-cornered hats and seated on a "form" between the Throne and the Woolsack in the House of Lords, the Lords Commissioners command the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod—the Royal Messenger—to summon the Commons to the House of Peers to hear the commission read. The door of the Commons chamber being barred, Black Rod ceremoniously raps three times before being allowed to enter. This symbolic ceremony is designed to demonstrate the right of the Commons to close their doors and deliberations against all comers if they so wish. Once inside the House, an usher cries "Black Rod," at which time the Speaker alone rises to receive the message of the Royal Messenger. Advancing slowly to the table and bowing three times, Black Rod announces: "The Lords Commissioners desire the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the House of Peers."

His message delivered, Black Rod retires backwards to the Bar of the House, bowing as he goes, and awaits the Speaker whom, followed by ministers and MPs, he duly escorts to the Bar of the House of Lords. The Letters Patent are then read by the Reading Clerk. After the reading of the commission, the Clerk of the Crown then reads the title of each bill to which the Royal Assent is declared by the Clerk of the Parliaments in Norman French, and duly entered in the Lords journals.

A supply bill carried up by the Clerk of the House of Commons and handed to the Clerk of the Parliaments by the Speaker receives Royal Assent before all other bills. Assent is granted by the words: "La Reyne (Le Roy) remercie ses bons sujets, accepte leur bénévolence, et ainsi le veult." For all other public and private bills the words "La Reyne (Le Roy) le veult" are used. For personal acts, the words "Soit fait comme il est désiré" are used. The last time assent was refused by Queen Anne in 1707, the words used were: "La Reyne s'avisera."

When assent has been granted and the Commons have returned from the House of Lords, the Speaker formally announces this to the Commons. This procedure is duly recorded in Hansard and the House Votes and Proceedings.

This traditional means of granting Royal Assent was altered by the Royal Assent Act (1967), however, as a result of two serious incidents stemming from the untimely arrival of Black Rod at the Commons, which was obliged to suspend whatever business it happened to be engaged in at the time in order to participate in the procession to the House of Peers.

● (2050)

The first incident occurred on April 13, 1960. Black Rod arrived at the House of Commons with his summons at a moment when an extremely heated debate was in progress on the government's announcement of the abandonment of the Blue Streak missile. Members protested very strongly against the interruption, and Black Rod was unable to make his voice heard above the tumult. The opposition, with the exception of their leader and chief whip, remained in their places as the procession made its way to the House of Lords as an expression of their indignation. On the return of the other members, points of order were immediately raised as to the right of Black Rod to enter the Commons chamber without the consent of the house, and the Speaker undertook to seek advice as to the constitutional position.

A further protest was registered on August 5, 1965, when Black Rod arrived to deliver his summons to the House of Commons some 20 minutes before Parliament was due to rise for the summer recess—that sounds familiar.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is bad timing.

Senator Frith: A group of members not only remained in the chamber but continued to debate the issue under discussion, notwithstanding the Speaker having left the chair, as a demonstration against what one of the members, Sir Geoffrey de Freitas, described as a "ludicrous exercise."

The Royal Assent Act of 1967, assented to, of course, by the traditional means on May 10, 1967, sought to prevent similar unfortunate incidents from occurring. This act effectively outlines two alternate means for the granting of Royal Assent.

In the first place, the act confirms the legitimacy of the traditional means of granting assent via the Lords Commissioners "in the presence of both Houses in the House of Lords in the form and manner customary before the passing of this Act." Yet the act declares, alternatively, that the Royal Assent may be "notified to each House of Parliament, sitting separately, by the Speaker of that House or in the case of his absence by the person acting as such Speaker."

In the case of this latter practice, Royal Assent is granted by the Lords Commissioners on Her Majesty's behalf, usually at Buckingham Palace, and notified by the Speaker or acting Speaker at a time convenient to each house during the course of that day's business. In the House of Lords, Royal Assent may be notified at any convenient time during a sitting. In the Commons, Royal Assent may be notified immediately after prayers, at the commencement of public business, between Orders of the Day, between speeches in a debate, and between amendments at the consideration stage of a bill. The Commons has also ruled that the house should not be adjourned until notice of Royal Assent is given. The words used by the Speakers of the respective houses to notify assent are the following:

> I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act, 1967 that the Queen has signified her Royal Assent to the following Acts—

Which he then lists.

It is now usual that the Royal Assent be notified to each house sitting separately, although the traditional ceremony is observed at prorogation when Commissioners are directed by Letters Patent of the Sovereign to prorogue Parliament and to grant the Royal Assent to any outstanding bills.

That, honourable senators, is the picture in the United Kingdom.

As most honourable senators know, the practice in Canada is the subject of section 55 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which states:

> Where a Bill passed by the Houses of the Parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's Assent, he shall declare, according to his Discretion, but subject to the Provisions of this Act and to Her Majesty's Instructions, either that he assents thereto in the Queen's Name, or that he withholds the Queen's Assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the Signification of the Queen's Pleasure.

Honourable senators will note that under section 55 the active person and institution in Canada is the Governor General.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Does the Act you are referring to also mention the ceremony itself? You just said that when a Bill is enacted, it must receive the assent of the Governor General. The article you quoted does not prescribe a specific ceremony. The proceedings can take place at the Governor General's residence as well as right here.

Senator Frith: We have already pointed out that it is the Governor General who grants assent, but the manner in which he does so is not specified.

Senator Deschatelets: That is what I wanted to know.

Senator Frith: My dear colleague, we could not have rehearsed it better. What you are asking is in fact the subject of my enquiry. You have made a very good point.

[English]

The procedure by which Royal Assent is granted in Canada is similar in many respects to that of the British Parliament, although, as Senator Deschatelets has underlined, important differences remain. That is the procedure, but the procedure itself is not set out in section 55. That will be important in the second part of the proposals I will be making, that is, what method of legal implementation should be chosen.

In Canada, the Speaker of the Senate, as we know, directs the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons to summon the members of that house according to the will of the Governor General or his deputy, as follows:

> It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that they attend him/her immediately in the Senate Chamber.

After bowing to the Deputy Governor General, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod proceeds to the House of Commons and, following the same ceremony as at Westminster, delivers the following message to the Speaker:

> Madam (Mister) Speaker: It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this Honourable House attend him/her immediately in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

The procession of Black Rod, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, clerks and members of the House of Commons then makes its way to the Bar of the Senate where Black Rod takes up a position to the left of the Deputy Governor General.

If it is the first time a newly appointed Deputy Governor General grants the Royal Assent, the commission is read by the Clerk of the Senate. The Clerk Assistant then reads the titles of the bills presented for the Royal Assent. Assent is then pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate as follows:

> In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

As honourable senators know, if a supply bill is to be assented to, the Speaker of the House of Commons addresses the Deputy Governor General as follows:

> May it please Your Honour:
>
> The Commons of Canada have voted supplies to enable the Government to defray certain expenses of the public service.
>
> In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following Bill:
>
> An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March 1983,
>
> To which Bill I humbly request Your Honour's Assent.

● (2100)

The Clerk Assistant then proceeds to the Bar of the Senate to receive the supply bill from the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Clerk Assistant then reads the title of the bill in both English and French, to which the Royal Assent is declared by the Clerk:

> In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to this Bill.

The Speaker and Members of the House of Commons withdraw from the Senate to return to the lower house, where the Speaker reports that the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to certains bills. The Deputy Governor General leaves the Senate chamber preceded by Black Rod and followed by the ministers of the Crown and the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

There are, however, important differences between the British and Canadian versions of the procedure for granting Royal Assent. Most obvious is the fact that the Royal Assent in Canada is normally granted by a justice of the Supreme Court acting as Deputy Governor General, although the Governor General is usually personally present to grant his assent at least once in each session. This practice dates back to 1885 and stems from a provision of the Constitution Act, 1867, section 14 of which states:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, if Her Majesty thinks fit, to authorize the Governor General from Time to Time to appoint any Person or any Persons jointly or severally to be his Deputy or Deputies within any Part or Parts of Canada, and in that Capacity to exercise during the Pleasure of the Governor General such of the Powers, Authorities, and Functions of the Governor General as the Governor General deems it necessary or expedient to assign to him or them, subject to any Limitations or Directions expressed or given by the Queen; but the Appointment of such a Deputy or Deputies shall not affect the Exercise by the Governor General himself of any Power, Authority, or Function.

It also finds expression in the Letters Patent Constituting the Office of Governor General of Canada, 1947. Section VII of the Letters Patent reads, in part:

> Now We do hereby authorize and empower Our Governor General, subject to such limitations and directions, to appoint any person or persons, jointly or severally, to be His Deputy or Deputies within any part or parts of Canada, and in that capacity to exercise, during His pleasure, such of His powers, functions, and authorities as He may deem it necessary or expedient to assign to him or them—

Section VIII further declares, in part:

> And We do hereby declare Our pleasure to be that, in the event of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence of Our Governor General out of Canada, all and every of the powers and authorities herein granted to him shall, until Our further pleasure is signified therein, be vested in Our Chief Justice for the time being of Canada . . . or, in the case of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence out of Canada of Our Chief Justice, then in the Senior Judge for the time being of the Supreme Court of Canada, then residing in Canada and not under incapacity—

Since Section VIII indicates that, in the event of the death, removal or incapacity of the Governor General, the latter's authority would immediately devolve upon the Chief Justice of Canada, whose responsibilities as Deputy Governor General, in the event of his death, removal or incapacity, would be assumed by the senior judge of the Supreme Court. A clear legal chain of command is thus established. It would seem, then, that since Section VII empowers the Governor General to delegate his authority to whomever he wishes, a logical proxy would be the Chief Justice of Canada, or a senior judge, who already enjoys recognition under Section VIII. Given the heavy time constraints placed upon the Chief Justice by virtue of his position, it is not surprising that the largely perfunctory and ceremonial task of granting Royal Assent has devolved upon other members of the court. Indeed, while early Deputy Governors General were normally chief justices, by 1889 the formal task of assenting to bills had already been redelegated to a puisne judge of the court. This, of course, is now the accepted practice.

While it may, on the surface, appear puzzling that members of the judiciary should perform what is, essentially, an executive function, it seems likely that this arrangement represents a pragmatic response to the formal necessity of granting Royal Assent. Since it is impractical that the Governor General should be personally present to assent to each and every bill in view of his other responsibilities, it seems a reasonable compromise that other high officials, particularly members of the High Court—who enjoy impartiality and respectability—should exercise this function on his behalf.

Honourable senators, that is the picture in Canada. I realize that most of the procedures I have described were already known to honourable senators, but I have elaborated some of the chain of authority for those practices.

I now turn to Royal Assent in Australia. Provision for Royal Assent in Australia is contained in section 58 of the Constitution Act (1900). It provides that:

> When a proposed law passed by both Houses of the Parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's assent, he shall declare, according to his discretion, but subject to the Constitution, that he assents in the Queen's name, or that he withholds assent, or that he reserves the law for the Queen's pleasure.

The formal means by which the Royal Assent is granted to bills in Australia closely resembles the practice of the British and Canadian Parliaments. The Governor General directs the Usher of the Black Rod to inform the members of the House of Representatives that their attendance in the Senate chamber is desired forthwith. The Clerk of the Parliaments receives at the Bar, from the hands of the Speaker, the acts to which the Royal Assent is to be granted. Through the Clerk of the Parliaments, the Governor General then notifies his assent in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty.

Recourse to this formal procedure for granting Royal Assent is rare, however. Indeed, this formal ceremony has not been utilized since the formative years of the Australian Commonwealth, which was established, as we know, in 1900. Rather, the Australian Parliament has dispensed with much of the formality surrounding the Royal Assent. Currently, the usual practice is for a clerk of the house which initiated the bill to bring it to the residence of the Governor General, where, in an informal setting, the Governor General affixes his signature. The Governor General's assent is then usually made known by messages to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, who notify the respective houses that the Royal Assent has been duly granted.

Although Standing Order 372 of the Australian Senate provides that a message from the Governor General shall immediately suspend the business before the house in order that it may be read forthwith, Standing Order 376 declares that such a message may not be presented during a debate, or so as to interrupt a senator who is speaking.

So, honourable senators, while the formal means by which the Royal Assent is granted in Great Britain, Australia, and Canada are similar, given their common origins, it is clear that each country has seen fit to modify the procedure according to its particular situation. The British Parliament follows the formal procedure of granting the Royal Assent in the Lords in the presence of both houses by means of the Lords Commissioners only at prorogation. At other times, following the provisions of the Royal Assent Act, 1967, the Royal Assent is notified to each house sitting separately.

Australia, on the other hand, has opted to dispense altogether with the formalities surrounding Royal Assent. Bills are normally simply assented to informally by the Governor General in the presence of a clerk of the house sponsoring the bill and each house is then notified separately via Governor General messages.

Senator Deschatelets: Could the honourable senator tell us how the change was brought about in Australia? I believe he said that there has been no formal ceremony since 1900. Was this change brought about by a decision of the government?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, apparently it was not. It was simply a practice that grew up.

According to my research, recourse to the formal procedure for granting Royal Assent is rare. The formal ceremony has not been utilized since the formative years of the Australian Commonwealth, and the other practice grew up as a custom of the Constitution. There was no decision made. That question is relevant to what I propose now to deal with, namely: What are the legal alternatives for us at this stage, considering that we have continuously, since Confederation, used the traditional method?

• (2110)

Senator Deschatelets: Except that, if my memory serves me correctly—and I may be wrong—when we adopted the new Constitution, both Speakers went to the Governor General's residence to present the bill, which was accepted by the Governor General.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): There is nothing in what was the B.N.A. Act.

Senator Deschatelets: I am just talking about the facts. When we adopted the Constitution both Speakers, instead of having Royal Assent here, went to the Governor General's residence in the evening.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am coming to the question of the Constitution, but Senator Deschatelet's perception of that procedure is not mine. As I understand the steps in that case, the Constitution was amended, and it was amended by the British Parliament as a result of a resolution of both houses of the Canadian Parliament. It is that resolution that was presented to the Governor General, not the act. The act itself was finally signed by the Queen herself, and I will have something to say about that with regard to its having some bearing on what legal or constitutional method we should select.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I am interested in what he is saying, and I would like to know if, in his opinion, the resolution passed by the Parliament of Canada would have been legal without its being presented to the Governor General by the Speakers of the two houses, or by anybody?

Senator Frith: I have no idea, and it is not really relevant to what I am talking about tonight. In any event, I do not think my opinion as to whether it would be legal or not counts for anything tonight, but I am sure the proper procedure was followed by presenting both those resolutions to the Governor General. I say that because if we are talking about legality in the sense of custom, there seems to be no doubt that the legislation that followed had to be the result of an Address of both houses. The Address of both houses was to the Queen, and the Queen's representative in Canada is the Governor General.

Senator Donahoe: Would the honourable senator permit a supplementary question?

Senator Frith: I would rather not, until the end of my intervention, because I consider the question of the procedures under the Constitution to be a digression. It is an intriguing digression, but I would like to finish my comments on the subject of Royal Assent, and not the question of the amendment of the Constitution, although one of the alternative methods of changing our procedures with regard to Royal Assent would be by constitutional amendment. I will deal with that, but that matter does not have anything to do with the procedures adopted to amend the Constitution. In other words, what I will have to say about the Constitution is based on the assumption that the new Constitution is legally in effect in Canada.

Honourable senators, returning to the summary of these procedures in other parliaments, compared to that in Canada, we find that among the British, Australian and Canadian parliaments only the Canadian Parliament re-enacts the traditional ceremony in toto each time bills are to be presented for Royal Assent. Although certain innovations have evolved in Canada, including the granting of Royal Assent by Deputy Governors General, the placing of the decision to initiate the assent proceedings in the hands of the government leader in the House of Commons, and the holding of the assent ceremony sometimes at the least convenient time, remains, with the resultant controversy as to whether the existing assent procedure should be preserved as the only one or whether that is an anachronism in need of reform.

In the United Kingdom reform came about as a result of the inconvenience caused by the Black Rod arriving at the door of the House of Commons to summon members in Her Majesty's name at an inopportune time. That is known to have happened in Canada, and it is likely to be one of the motives for reform.

Another motive is to allow the members of one house of Parliament—usually the House of Commons—to disperse to their constituencies once their work is done without having to return for Royal Assent. There is the additional benefit of allowing members of the other house, the Senate, to take their time in examining the legislation before them, as they would not be inconveniencing the members of the other place by requiring them to stay simply for Royal Assent.

There is another dimension that was hinted at with reference to the Constitution and the procedures then taken. For lawyers there is the attraction of having Royal Assent expressed in the written word. The Queen brought the new Constitution into effect by signing a proclamation. Perhaps as a social phenomenon this is how Canadians would want and expect their laws to come into effect.

Recently, a perhaps more bizarre reason for an alternative or additional method of granting Royal Assent arose when a newspaper, as a result of our taking the trouble last week, or the week before, to convene simply for Royal Assent, suggested we were being paid something like $900 a minute, in view of the time it took us to convene simply for that ceremony.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We get paid anyway.

Senator Frith: Yes, quite so.

Honourable senators might misunderstand why I referred to that. I referred to it as one of the more bizarre reasons for considering the change, but there are so many other good reasons that there is no point in underlining that one any further.

Honourable senators, I passed on the research that I have just shared with you to our Clerk, and I want to advise you of his reaction. I told him that of the three methods studied, the most attractive to me was the Australian system, or some form thereof. Our Clerk wrote to me in reply as follows:

[Translation]

> Instead of sending to the Governor General the Clerk of the House that originated the Bill, I suggest we should always send both Clerks or at least the "Clerk of the Parliaments"—

—who is Clerk of the Senate—

> —in his capacity of official guardian of the records of State.
>
> I suggest this variant, because I am afraid that otherwise the Commons, which originates most bills, would in fact exclude us, and at least as long as we do not have an elected Senate.
>
> Even if the Commons does originate a vast majority of our legislation, I believe that the Senate ought to demonstrate its presence throughout the legislative process. The Senate in Australia, being elected, may not have the same concerns.

● (2120)

[English]

Honourable senators, that brings me to the second and final aspect of my intervention, the legal and constitutional dimension of the question. I begin by underlining, or perhaps by putting in more relief, the nature of Royal Assent in Canada from the legal point of view. The description of the function is perhaps misleading, so let us begin by considering the true nature of the function.

The source is section 4(1) of the Interpretation Act, 1970, chapter I-23, which provides as follows:

> The enacting clause of an Act may be in the following form:
>
> "Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:"—

—et cetera.

It is subsection 4(1), rather than the term "Royal Assent", that gives an insight into the nature of the function. In proper constitutional theory, Her Majesty enacts the laws of the land with the consent of the Senate and the House of Commons. In that sense, Royal Assent is the actual enactment of the law.

The source of the requirement that Her Majesty enact the laws of Canada by Royal Assent is to be found in section 17 of the Constitution Act, 1867, as expanded by the preamble to the act:

> There shall be One Parliament for Canada, consisting of the Queen, an Upper House styled the Senate, and the House of Commons.

The preamble I referred to says:

> Whereas the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have expressed their desire to be federally united into One Dominion under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland—

And I underline:

> —with a Constitution similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom:—

Section 17 provides that the Queen is part of Parliament. The act is silent as to her role in Parliament, but the preamble makes it clear that that role is to be the same one that she traditionally enjoys in the United Kingdom. Again, the words are:

> —with a Constitution similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom:—

Sections 55 to 57 inclusive of the act, by dealing with the problem of effecting Royal Assent through the office of the Governor General, also imply a requirement that laws be enacted in this way.

As to the constitutional limits on amendment, in theory, an amendment to the procedure of Royal Assent could be implemented in one of several ways. An amendment to Royal Assent that would amount to an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the office of the Queen would have to be implemented in accordance with the provisions of section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Honourable senators will recall that section 41 is the one that appears with the words "Unanimity. Amendment by unanimous consent". We know the other amending formula for the House of Commons, the Senate and seven of the provinces with more than 50 per cent of the population; but this, I suggest, would fall under section 41:

> An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

And the subjects are:

> (a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;
>
> (b) the right of a province to a number of members—

And so on.

I am talking about the theoretical possibilities of changing our system by adding an additional method for Royal Assent. One theoretical way would be by amendment to the Constitution itself, which, I suggest, would have to be under section 41. But, as Senator Deschatelets clarified in his question, the present Constitution says nothing about the procedure. It says who has to do it, but not how it has to be done. So that raises the question as to whether it is necessary to go that far—that is, to amend the Constitution—since we would be adding something rather than changing something already there.

A second possibility is to amend the Royal Assent procedure by the passage of an act as contemplated by section 44 of the Constitution Act, 1982. However, an amendment in such a manner could not touch the substance of Royal Assent, but only its procedure, for the reasons given in the alternative one. Although it is done once in a while, usually because of a larger context, it is generally considered undesirable if not improper to impose or amend parliamentary procedure by statute. In any event, it is certainly considered more proper to amend parliamentary procedure by resolution.

That brings me to a third possibility, amendment by resolution—that is, a joint resolution of the houses, and by return message from Her Majesty. Amendment in that manner has the advantage of requiring only one passage in each house. Also, amendment in that manner has the advantage of making it clear that no attempt is being made to change the office of Her Majesty or the substance of Royal Assent. By adopting the procedure usually used for procedural reform—that is, a resolution—it is clear that what is intended is procedural reform only.

A fourth possibility is amendment to the procedure of Royal Assent by simply changing the practice without recourse even to a resolution.

If my research regarding Australia is correct, some encouragement for that option comes from the Australian practice. As we know, in Australia there is an alternative informal procedure for Royal Assent evolving by practice dating back to the formative years of the Commonwealth. The argument against that procedure is that, as the practice in Canada has now been established for almost the same length of time, it might be argued that it is too late for that option. But the essential features of the Australian practice—first, assent is not given in Parliament assembled but usually at Government House; second, assent is given by signature; third, assent is then communicated to the houses by message—are three features, it seems to me, that we should consider borrowing, or at least consider using as an inspiration for change or addition to our system.

In the United Kingdom the procedure for Royal Assent, as we know, was amended in 1967 by statute, and it is an adaptation of a long-standing procedure by the three Lords Commissioners.

Sections 55 to 57 of the Constitution Act, 1867—the provisions that deal with the granting, withholding or reserving of Royal Assent by the Governor General in the Queen's name—contain provisions for communications to the houses of Parliament where, for example, assent is given by Her Majesty to a bill reserved by the Governor General. Perhaps we may take sections 55 to 57 as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Sections 55 to 57 of the Constitution Act, 1867 follow:)

55. Where a Bill passed by the Houses of Parliament is presented to the Governor General for the Queen's Assent, he shall declare, according to his Discretion, but subject to the Provisions of this Act and to Her Majesty's Instructions, either that he assents thereto in the Queen's Name, or that he withholds the Queen's Assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the Signification of the Queen's Pleasure.

56. Where the Governor General assents to a Bill in the Queen's Name, he shall by the first convenient Opportunity send an authentic Copy of the Act to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and if the Queen in Council within Two Years after Receipt thereof by the Secretary of State thinks fit to disallow the Act, such Disallowance (with a Certificate of the Secretary of State of the Day on which the Act was received by him) being signified by the Governor General, by Speech or Message to each of the Houses of the Parliament or by Proclamation, shall annul the Act from and after the Day of such Signification.

57. A Bill reserved for the Signification of the Queen's Pleasure shall not have any force unless and until within Two Years from the Day on which it was presented to the Governor General for the Queen's Assent, the Governor General signifies, by Speech or Message to each of the Houses of the Parliament or by Proclamation, that it has received the Assent of the Queen in Council.

An Entry of every such Speech, Message, or Proclamation shall be made in the Journal of each House, and a Duplicate thereof duly attested shall be delivered to the proper Officer to be kept among the Records of Canada.

Senator Frith: I add a note as to supply bills. They have a special place in our constitutional history. It is through its power and willingness to supply the Crown over the centuries that the House of Commons gained its power. Because supply bills are the sole gift of the House of Commons, in the case of a supply bill the Speaker of the House of Commons addresses Her Majesty with words drafted to remind the Crown of that fact. So we should not lose sight of the special status of supply bills in the history of Parliament—or so some honourable senators might feel. The Speaker's message is as relevant today as it ever was, and for that reason honourable senators may want to propose something giving special status to supply bills.

Honourable senators, I now come to what I consider to be the most appropriate form for us to adopt. It is by an amendment of the Interpretation Act, which falls somewhere between these other alternatives. Taking one extreme, we could amend the Constitution. I have already suggested why I do not not feel we need to go that far. Again, it is a corollary to the question of Senator Deschatelets. The Constitution Act, 1867, provides who shall give Royal Assent and who must give Royal Assent, but does not say how it should be done. Therefore, it seems to be a sort of pavé de l'ours to try to amend the Constitution to add a practice that is not even provided for in the Constitution Act, 1867.

• (2130)

We have talked about statute and resolution as possible means which brings us to perhaps the simplest of all possible forms but perhaps the riskiest, and that is to simply change the procedure. We can simply say, "Look, the Governor General can, under the Constitution, carry out Royal Assent in any way he wants to." But simply to change the practice may be dangerous because of the length of time present procedures have existed and it might give rise to questions as to the validity and legal effect of the statutes assented to. My suggestion is that we make the change, and I will tell you how I think we should do it. Of course, I am interested in the views of others and my mind can be changed, as it often is by the eloquence of my colleagues here, but as at present advised I believe we should adopt the Australian system as amended or modified by the suggestion of the Clerk, namely, to have both Clerks or their representatives attend upon the Governor General simply for signature. Once this event has taken place a message will be sent to the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons to that effect and they announce the event at any time during a sitting in accordance with the will of the house. That is the answer to the first part of the question.

How shall we institute such a system? My suggestion is that we look to an act, a Senate bill if necessary, to amend the Interpretation Act. It would read as follows—I am putting these words on the record for the same reason that I put on the record the research and background I have undertaken. They can be used either as a source for agreement or a target to shoot at during interventions by other senators. My suggested amendment reads:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

The Interpretation Act, 1967-68, is amended by adding at the end of section 2(1) the following—

And before there can be any sense to the amendment you will want to know what goes before it. Section 2(1) of the Interpretation Act reads, in part, as follows:

In this Act

"Act" means an Act of the Parliament of Canada;

"enact" includes to issue, make or establish;

"enactment" means an Act or regulation or any portion of an Act or regulation;

"public officer" includes any person in the public service of Canada—

And it goes on to deal with the question of repeal and the whole question of enactment and how laws take effect. I have already referred to Section 4 which gives the form that an enacting clause of an act may take. I suggest that the following be added to the provisions of Section 2 to deal with enactment:

"Royal Assent" means the instruction to the Clerk of the Parliaments or his or her Deputy by the Queen or the Governor General or His or Her Deputy that Her Majesty has assented to a Bill provided that such instruction may be given in person before both Houses of Parliament or by written instrument and the Royal Assent shall be deemed to have taken effect at the time that such instruction is given.

For an even bigger target and more complete precision, I add an explanatory note, as often seen in bills. I am not presenting this as a private bill but simply as the form and wording that the bill should take. The explanatory note could read:

Explanatory Note: This Bill would make it possible for the granting of the Royal Assent without wasting the time of both Houses of Parliament while retaining the opportunity of using the traditional ceremonial method of confirming the Constitutional right of Her Majesty or Her representative to give the Royal Assent personally.

Honourable senators, as I began so shall I end—by inviting you to participate in the debate on the inquiry, to make your own concrete or general suggestions. After the inquiry has been fully debated, I hope we can produce something more concrete by way of change because, in my opinion, we do definitely need, on the basis of our experience, a method or tool to proclaim and enact Royal Assent additional or optional to the long and formal procedure that is our only present method. I thank Senator Flynn for inspiring this study and honourable senators for their patient attention to this long intervention.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, May 12, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 12, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

INCIDENT AT UNITED STATES CONSULATE GENERAL, WINNIPEG

On the tabling of:

Diplomatic Note from the Department of External Affairs to the Embassy of the United States of America, dated April 7, 1983, concerning the incident which took place at the Consulate General of the United States of America at Winnipeg on March 23, 1983.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask my honourable friend whether the first item on his list of documents referred to the flag burning incident in Winnipeg?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have the details, but I can repeat the description that I gave. It is: "Diplomatic Note from the Department of External Affairs to the Embassy of the United States of America, dated April 7, 1983, concerning the incident which took place at the Consulate General of the United States of America at Winnipeg on March 23, 1983."

Senator Roblin: That is the incident, all right. I should like to ask my honourable friend if there is any material in that presentation from the Province of Manitoba.

Senator Olson: I cannot answer that without looking at the content of the document that was tabled, and I have to say that I have not done that yet.

Senator Roblin: Do you have an extra copy of it?

Senator Olson: I think a copy can be obtained rather quickly. Perhaps someone who is capable of doing that will do it for Senator Roblin.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fifteenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix, p. 5624)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SIXTH REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Lowell Murray, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, presented the following report:

Tuesday, May 10, 1983

SIXTH REPORT

In accordance with its Orders of Reference in the Senate dated Tuesday, May 27, 1980, Thursday, April 23, 1981, Tuesday, May 11, 1982, and Tuesday, March 22, 1983 and its Orders of Reference in the House of Commons dated Friday, May 23, 1980, Thursday, April 23, 1981, Thursday, May 6, 1982 and Tuesday, March 22, 1983, the Committee has considered the annual reports of the Commissioner of Official Languages for 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981 and 1982.

Your Committee recommends:

"That the government instruct Petro-Canada, as a Crown Corporation created as an instrument of government policy, to comply with the Official Languages Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by erecting bilingual signs in all locations where there is a clientele requiring services in both official languages."

Respectfully submitted,

LOWELL MURRAY
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

EPARCH OF THE EPARCHY OF SAINTS CYRIL AND METHODIUS OF SLOVAKS OF THE BYZANTINE RITE IN CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 12, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-35, intituled: "An Act to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, April 21, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 24, 1983, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, according to my information there will be no legislation coming to us from the other place next week. Senate committee meetings are scheduled, but after looking at our Order Paper and considering anticipated legislation I suggest there is no need for the Senate to sit. Therefore, I propose that the Senate adjourn until the week after next, until Tuesday, May 24, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if the deputy leader has any information as to whether, when we return on May 24, we will have some legislation to deal with? It seems to me that none is likely to have been passed by that time.

I ask this question because, when the Senate is not scheduled to sit, it becomes difficult for honourable senators to decide whether they are going to attend only for committee meetings. It seems to me that, when we decide not to sit, we should arrange for few committee meetings. As I have said, I do not see that we are likely to receive any legislation from the other place even for the week of May 24.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I will not argue about the word "likely." There will be meetings of the house leaders of the other place in the usual course, and we'll see. The only bill I can foresee our getting is the borrowing authority bill, and that would depend on agreement in the other place.

Senator Flynn: Or on closure.

Senator Frith: Yes, there will have to be agreement or allocation of time. For that reason, I suggest that we adjourn until the week following next, because even if we were to resume next week I do not think that the amount of time necessary under Commons Standing Orders for allocation of time notice is available.

• (1410)

As for committees, our view is, at least on a continuing experimental basis, that we should encourage committees to meet when the Senate is not sitting. Of course, our committees are always active even though there is no legislation before the Senate. I leave it to the committee chairmen to consider the viewpoint put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, but for the present we are encouraging committees to meet even though the Senate is not sitting.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SECTION 54—PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, my question arises from the answer the Leader of the Government gave to a question I asked on April 26 of this year, and I would, of course, like to thank him for answering as promptly as he did.

Since the answer was tabled without being read, I did not have a chance to ask for clarification right away. Therefore, with the permission of the Leader of the Government, here is the question I would have asked if his answer had been given orally.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Could Senator Tremblay identify the page on which the answer appears?

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I can also give the reference for the question. The question put on April 26 appears on page 5587 of Hansard, while Senator Olson's answer appears on page 5608 of Tuesday's Hansard, that is, the day before yesterday, May 10. I am of course referring to the French version. Perhaps the numbering is not quite the same, because occasionally, the pages do not coincide.

The question is about the proclamation provided under Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982. My supplementary question refers to the third paragraph of the answer Senator Olson gave on Tuesday. He explained that the proclamation had not yet been issued and it might not be opportune to issue one for some time. Indeed, the action taken by the First Ministers—in the French version it says: "des provinces", which intrigued me, and I wondered whether in the circumstances, the reference was only to the provincial First Ministers; to check on this, I referred to the English version, which reads: "first ministers' conference". That means the Prime Minister was there as well. I would like to draw the Senate's attention to what I believe is a mistranslation in the French version.

According to Senator Olson's answer, the action taken by the First Ministers in March would mean that they introduced further temporary provisions on constitutional conferences. My question is as follows: Where did they introduce those new provisions? If I understand correctly, the fact that they introduced new provisions in the Constitution is being used as an excuse for the fact that the sections of the Constitution have not been numbered. Obviously, even if agreement was reached in March to have further constitutional conferences, such agreements are not constitutional provisions, and I fail to understand why that is being used as a reason to delay proclamation and the numbering to which I referred just now. It is that issue that I would like to see clarified by the Leader of the Government.

● (1415)

[English]

Senator Olson: I understand the honourable senator's request, and I will take it as an additional inquiry. Quite obviously, the honourable senator is not satisfied with the answer given on May 10. Therefore I will refer the matter back to the people who prepared the reply. If Senator Tremblay is satisfied that his question is now complete, I shall endeavour to bring in a further reply.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: In a spirit of co-operation, I should like to add this: I think that there is no reason not to proceed with the proclamation provided for in clause 54 and that the text of the Constitution Act, 1982, which is now in effect, is not the same for everyone, because if we keep the provisions repealed under clause 54, one will be under the impression, for instance, that there is still a constitutional conference while it no longer exists. The decision arrived at during a federal-provincial conference cannot be considered as constitutional amendments and cannot warrant the inclusion of the agreements thus concluded in the Constitution. This would imply a constitutional amendment.

On this specific point—and if I am mistaken I stand to be corrected—I think that we should still have a proclamation so that the situation will be clear and explicit, even as far as the text of the Constitution is concerned, the one which is circulated on request, published and re-issued. The editions distributed after April 17, 1983 should be authentic.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will ensure that the honourable senator's comments are referred to those who will prepare the reply for him.

NEWFOUNDLAND

SECONDARY ROADS PROGRAM—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COST SHARING

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning the secondary roads program in the province of Newfoundland.

The provincial Minister of Transportation and Communications was in touch with the federal minister suggesting that they should meet to discuss cost-sharing of the secondary roads program, which is so necessary to Newfoundland, as well as the scheduling and selection of projects.

I am wondering why it has taken so long and whether the matter can be brought to the attention of the federal Minister of Transport, because it is of vital concern to Newfoundland.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, contained in Senator Marshall's question is the assumption that it has taken an unreasonable length of time. I do not wish to disagree or agree with that. I am not sure whether that is accurate or whether others, including the Government of Newfoundland, would agree with that interpretation. Nevertheless, I know that the Minister of Transport is keenly aware of the importance of the matter, and I shall draw it to his attention.

Senator Marshall: I do not believe there is any question about the funding; I believe it is in place. The concern is the lateness in the season. It is imperative that they get together and decide on the projects so that they can go ahead.

AIR CANADA

MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES—SPECIAL ALLOWANCE TO CERTAIN QUEBEC EMPLOYEES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question concerning an aspect of transportation that was reported in the news recently.

As a result of the recent visit of Air Canada executives to California for medical examinations, is it the intention of the government to congratulate Air Canada for setting an example to Canadians, as a matter of national pride, to vacation in Canada rather than in the United States; for its support of the nation's "buy Canadian" concept; for its faith in the Canadian medical profession and medicare plan; and to assure Air Canada that we will continue to support our national airline?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not believe that any of those assumptions can be made either with validity or accuracy, but if the honourable senator is putting it forward as a serious question, then I will refer it to the Minister of Transport who, in turn, is responsible to Parliament for Air Canada.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to that asked by Senator Marshall. There is a rule in politics that one never asks for anything for oneself or for the group of which one is a member, but it is quite all right to ask on behalf of somebody else. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government, on behalf of the Quebec members of Parliament of the other place and the Quebec senators in this chamber, whether the government is prepared to give them the same consideration in paying their income tax as the officials of Air Canada received.

● (1420)

Senator Olson: I am not sure that I can answer the honourable senator's question. From the information given so far, I am not even sure what the question is because I cannot accept the assumption Senator Phillips injected in his preamble.

[Translation]

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport, Senator Perrault. In December, 1982, I was drawing to the attention of the honourable senator a complaint lodged with the minister by francophones outside Quebec, to the effect that it was almost impossible for them to obtain services in French from the minister's department.

Last week, representatives of amateur sport in Quebec lodged a similar complaint. Particularly, they stated that it was impossible for francophone Quebecers to obtain services in French or even to communicate in French with the National Amateur Sport Corporation and especially with the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport for which my honourable friend is responsible.

In December, 1982, the minister, in a long statement which we have accepted and taken good note of, stated that he had met with Mrs. Séguin, from the Federation of Francophones Outside Quebec, and apparently an agreement had been struck by the minister and Mrs. Séguin. In this statement, the minister added that he had directed officers responsible for amateur sport in Canada to comply with the Official Languages Act passed by this Parliament. The minister was supposed to give us a more detailed statement.

Did the minister forget to make this statement? Could he inquire about the progress or remedial action taken by his department in reaction to the complaints and objections expressed by francophones working in the field of amateur sport in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I welcome Senator Asselin's inquiry. May I say at the outset that the criticisms purporting to represent the views of the provincial sports associations in the province of Quebec which appeared last week were voiced without any communication or consultation with my department or me. Therefore, I question the motives of those who are criticizing the federal government's program to extend bilingualism in my area of responsibility. It is incredible to me that any organization would issue such complaints without checking the facts by contacting the minister or the department.

The fact is that we have made considerable progress in the area of encouraging and extending bilingualism in the various sports bodies which we fund in part. We have excellent communication with the organization of francophones outside Quebec through Madame Séguin and her associates. We have excellent communication with the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Max Yalden, who recently expressed his satisfaction with the progress of the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport in extending bilingualism in certain of its activities.

May I say, furthermore, that I find it rather remarkable that anyone could consider or conceive making serious criticisms of the department of the type which appeared in certain newspapers last week—criticisms made without contacting Fitness and Amateur Sport in order to determine what progress was being made. If the representatives of this Quebec sports organization are interested in getting the facts and advancing sports bilingualism in Canada, I invite them to contact me or my officials and I will quickly put them in possession of the facts.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: The minister seems to be quite aggressive in his answer. The fact remains that the problem was recognized in this Chamber in December 1982. The minister admitted that Mrs. Séguin, the President of the Federation of Francophones outside the province of Quebec, met with him in order to put to him the grievances of the francophones outside Quebec. Last week, the Association of Amateur Sport of the Province of Quebec raised the same concern with the minister. The representatives of the Association may not have communicated directly with the minister, for it is quite difficult to meet face to face with someone as important as Senator Perrault and to secure a meeting in order to discuss that important issue. Anyway, the fact remains that the minister had promised to this Chamber that he would make a clear and specific official statement in order to inform us of the measures taken by the minister with regard to the use of French in amateur sport in Canada, of the progress made in that regard and of the persons responsible for the administration of the program. The minister has remained silent since December 1982. I asked him on December 22, 1982, to make a statement before Christmas. At the time, he said to me that he was unable to do so. Yet he undertook to make such a statement in the following weeks. We are now in the month of May and we are still waiting for that statement. The minister is wrong when he states that people who are responsible for amateur sport in the province of Quebec have not complained or have not met with the minister in order to verify the accuracy of those allegations. The minister should have taken the initiative and kept the promise he made to this Chamber to make a clear statement on his policy regarding the application of the Official Languages Act in amateur sport in Canada. He has not made such a statement. May I ask the minister when he intends to make that clear statement on behalf of the Canadian government?

[English]

● (1425)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a record of keeping my promises, and this promise will be kept.

Senator Asselin: No.

Senator Perrault: Very shortly a report will be presented to the Senate. As a result of work now being done by members of my department in cooperation with the organization representing francophones outside the province of Quebec, we have established a working committee to look at all facets of our operation. However, let me suggest to you that when that report is produced it will not be politically inspired nonsense of the kind reported last week.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The minister is very aggressive today.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, by way of supplementary, may I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to appear before the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages to discuss the action his department has taken to follow up recommendations made in several reports by the Commissioner of Official Languages?

Senator Perrault: Certainly, consideration will be given to that request because we have nothing to hide in the department. Progress has been made. Of course, more action is necessary, but since I assumed my responsibilities progress has been made to extend the bounds of bilingualism in sport.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Can the Minister tell us whether it is indeed true that some francophones cannot be served in French by his Department? Can he tell us whether this is actually true? Is that a fact or not?

[English]

Senator Perrault: There is no problem in getting services from my department in a bilingual fashion. Certain sports organizations which we fund in part have not as yet achieved the level of bilingualism we believe they must achieve. There are certain organizations which do not have an adequate French-speaking capability. I believe there are other organizations which do not have an adequate English-speaking capability, but so far as the department is concerned we can certainly meet the test on any score.

HONOURABLE HEATH MACQUARRIE

CORRECTION OF POSSIBLE MISUNDERSTANDING

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, whom I have always regarded as well informed, articulate and eloquent, albeit on political matters still quite ill-informed. I would like him to tell me, as a gentleman, if he feels he may not in fact have done me a disservice as a member of this chamber.

● (1430)

On May 10, he was discussing the fact that Queen Anne refused to proclaim in force the Scotch Militia Bill, and I, as a Scot who thinks we made a great mistake in joining the English 200 odd years ago, said, "Hear, hear!" The deputy leader then replied, "That was not a brand of whisky!"

I resent the fact that he is suggesting to Canada, and especially to my former constituents, when I was a member of the House of Commons, and the people I now represent as the senator from Hillsborough, that I am a whisky drinker. I resent that very much, despite the fact that I am heading for Scotland within the next two hours. I would like him to know that I am a rum drinker. As a smart-aleck professor, I was for some years one who embibed scotch and thought it was the thing to do, until at the age of 35 I learned that my dear father, who was a Presbyterian, had been a member of the Royal Canadian Navy in the first war. Senator Langlois will recall the traditions, although he is far too young to have been in the service at that time. I hope that Senator Frith will correct any impression there might be among the people of Prince Edward Island that I am a snob because, in fact, I am a rum drinker.

Robert Burns, who was the greatest poet that God ever created, tried twice to go to the West Indies. Had he gone there, he would have come back as devoted a rum drinker as I am.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first let me explain what I had in mind when I made that comment on Senator Macquarrie's encouraging exclamation about Queen Anne's having refused to proclaim in force the Scotch Militia Bill. I have an image of Senator Macquarrie as the classic country parson. When he speaks in the Senate, his eloquence and style recall a church in England or an Anglican church in Canada, with the sun streaming in through the windows—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It fits very well in the Senate.

Senator Frith: It fits, as Senator Flynn has said, some days very well in the Senate. When I heard Senator Macquarrie say, "Hear, hear!" it was that image that came to my mind. I thought he was speaking not as a rum drinker, but as a temperance advocate, applauding the fact that Queen Anne had refused to proclaim in force the Scotch Militia Bill; that he might think it to be a brand of Scotch whisky.

Now I find that any insult there might be had nothing to do with temperance but with the implication that perhaps he was a scotch drinker. I willingly withdraw any suggestion that someone with impeccable naval antecedents, and who now represents the good terracotta sod of Prince Edward Island, would ever think of putting on such side as to suggest he would drink scotch rather than rum.

• (1435)

Senator Macquarrie: The Deputy Leader of the Government has proven himself to be very articulate. I rest my case by saying I am a Scotch drinker of rum.

Senator Frith: Then there are those who might be called rum drinkers of scotch.

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On April 20 of this year I asked the Leader of the Government to tell us what the Minister of Finance had in mind with respect to the $200 million he added to the Special Recovery Program simply to hide the budget leak. The Leader of the Government reluctantly said at that time that he would take the question as notice and bring in an explanation from the Minister of Finance.

I wonder if the leader has obtained that information, and, if not, whether he hopes to obtain it soon.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that explanation was given several days ago in the other place by the Minister of Finance. I say that because it seems to me that the operative part of the question was as to what programs would be increased.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Olson: At least, that is what I understood.

That explanation can be found in statements made by the Minister of Finance because I am sure that that question was asked of him several times. If the Leader of the Opposition has not seen it, I will look it up and repeat it to him.

Senator Flynn: I want the explanation to be put on the record of this house. My question relates to the additional $200 million for the Special Recovery Program. I want to know what was in the minister's mind when he added that amount to the Special Recovery Program.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think we are talking about the same thing. As I said, there is a full and complete explanation on the record of the other place.

Senator Flynn: Then put it on the record of this house.

Senator Olson: If the Leader of the Opposition wants that placed on the record of this house as well, that will be done later today or at the next sitting of the Senate. I will ensure that it is put on the record of this house as well.

[Translation]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT

APPOINTMENT OF RETURNING OFFICERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Deputy Government Leader. On February 9, when we discussed the Bill changing to Dauphin-Swan River the name of the Dauphin constituency, I asked the Deputy Leader about the status of the court actions initiated by the returning officers who had been replaced on the grounds that the change in names had created a new constituency and allowed the Government to replace a returning officer appointed by the Clark administration with a dedicated henchman of the Liberal Party.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Senator Denis never said that.

Senator Flynn: The Deputy Leader suggested he would look into this, because the Federal Court had ruled that a change in names was not to be construed as a change in constituencies and did not warrant the appointment of a new returning officer. I asked whether this might be appealed. Since then I obtained an answer, to the extent that the Government has appealed the ruling. At the same time, I asked him whether it was the Government's intention in actual fact to interpret such name changes as allowing them to extend their well-known patronage. I would like to know, aside from the fact that this ruling has been appealed, whether the Government intend to go on changing names for the purpose of changing returning officers.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Never.

Senator Flynn: Pardon me?

Senator Frith: Never. The Government has never intended using a name change in a constituency in order to extend its patronage.

Senator Flynn: The facts are clear. If such is actually the case, will the Deputy Leader tell me why the Government has appealed a judgment rendered by Mr. Justice Rouleau, of the Federal Court?

Senator Frith: The appeal was based on its legal merit.

Senator Flynn: The government was probably seeking a guideline to carry on with its outright pork-barreling.

Senator Frith: It is a fact that a new director of elections was appointed following the change of name. As for the reason or intent, it is a matter of interpretation.

Senator Asselin: Senator Denis never said that.

Hon. Azellus Denis: I rise on a question of privilege, honourable senators. Whenever Senator Asselin refers to me, he seems to imply that I have never said anything in the house. I wonder where he got his information as to what I have said.

Senator Asselin: To reply to the question of privilege raised by Senator Denis, I will say that when he introduced the two bills in question and other similar bills, I asked him what was the rationale for the change. He has never acknowledged that point.

Senator Denis: I have never acknowledged anything but I explained the reason why the name of the riding was changed.

Senator Asselin: That was not the true reason.

Senator Denis: We meant to please the electorate of that riding who had asked their elected representative in the other place to do just that.

Senator Asselin: That was not the true reason why you wanted to change the name of that riding.

Senator Denis: My honourable colleague is free to play politics to his heart's content.

Senator Flynn: You are in no position to lecture me on that.

Senator Asselin: Patronage is one of Senator Denis' fortes.

• (1440)

[English]

SPORT

1984 CANADA WINTER GAMES

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the sporting minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport. Is he in a position to provide honourable senators with information regarding the locale of the next Canada Winter Games? Also, can he give us an overview of the latest developments regarding the Winter Games and the possibility that they will be held in the east where all wise men come from?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, of course Senator Muir knows that there are outstanding offers from four regions in Nova Scotia to host the next Canada Winter Games. All of those communities would host those games very successfully. I have been advised by the Site Evaluation Committee that they will be visiting those locations in the first week of June and that a report will be made to the minister following that evaluation which should take approximately one week.

We have expressed our agreement with their plan to spend precisely the same amount of time in each of the proposed localities to ensure that consideration of the various proposals is fair and equitable. We know that all four communities would do a splendid job of hosting the games and, indeed, the entire province of Nova Scotia will be an outstanding host.

TORONTO—PROPOSED DOMED STADIUM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Murray on April 28, 1983 concerning the government's intentions to finance the proposed domed stadium in Toronto.

There is absolutely no commitment or involvement by the federal government in the domed stadium proposal. In fact, the federal cabinet has not yet considered such involvement.

At present, everyone is awaiting a feasibility report being prepared by the Metro Council Chairman, Paul Godfrey.

There have not been negotiations with other levels of government.

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM—NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on May 10, 1983, concerning the announcement by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of federal funds for fisheries infrastructure and harbour development.

Is it agreed that the news release be tabled rather than having it printed in Hansard, because it consists of several pages and I believe it has already been sent to Senator Marshall and other honourable senators' offices?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Then, honourable senators, I table:

> News release dated May 9, 1983, concerning the announcement by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of federal funds for fisheries infrastructure and harbour development, being a reply to Senator Marshall's question of May 10, 1983. (English text).

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 24, 1983, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5617)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Thursday, May 5, 1983

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its Fifteenth Report as follows:

(Statutory Instruments No. 19)

1. In accordance with its permanent reference, Section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, your Committee draws to the special attention of both Houses the statutory instruments listed in Annex A to this Report.

2. Your Committee wishes to acknowledge that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has advised your Committee that he has been acting in conformity with a legal opinion of the Department of Justice. However, the proclamations under Report are, in the opinion of your Committee, ultra vires the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-6. Your Committee also considers that their making amounts to an unusual and unexpected use of the enabling power found in Section 4(2) of the Indian Act.

These proclamations either purport to suspend the application of Section 12(1)(a)(iv) of the Act or that of Section 12(1)(b), a portion of Section 14 and the word "male" in Section 11(1)(d)(i). Sections 12(1)(a)(iv) and 12(1)(b) prescribe circumstances in which persons entitled to registration as Indians under Section 11 of the Act lose that entitlement, and the purpose of the proclamations is to permit these persons to retain that status notwithstanding the statutory exclusions.

Section 11(1)(d)(i) grants the legitimate children of a male Indian the right to be registered as Indians. The present wording of this Section precludes any legitimate child of a marriage between an Indian woman and a non-Indian from being registered under Section 11 as he is not the legitimate child of a male Indian. By suspending the application of the word "male", the proclamations purport to allow the registration of these children as Indians pursuant to the Act.

The proclamations under Report are issued in reliance on Section 4(2) of the Indian Act which provides that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, declare that the Act or any portion thereof, except Sections 37 to 41, shall not apply to any Indians or any group or band of Indians.[1] This power, or a similarly worded power, has been granted the Governor in Council as early as 1876, S.C. 1876, c. 18, and its purpose, in your Committee's view, was to provide a mechanism to reduce the scope of application of the Act. As the proclamations under Report have the effect of increasing the number of persons who will be subject to the Indian Act, your Committee believes their making to be contrary to the intent of Section 4(2).

Your Committee also considers that, in issuing these proclamations, the Governor in Council is amending the Act rather than suspending the application of a portion thereof in accordance with Section 4(2). In Section 2 of the Act an Indian is defined as:

> ..... a person who pursuant to this Act is registered as an Indian or is entitled to be registered as an Indian.

Sections 11 and 12 of the Act, found under the heading "Definition and Registration of Indians", are the two Sections which govern entitlement to registration. As these two Sections are referentially incorporated in the Section 2 definition of 'Indian', the proclamations, by declaring that certain portions of Sections 11 and 12 do not apply to certain persons, effectively modify the Section 2 definition of Indian. Your Committee does not believe this result to be contemplated by Section 4(2) of the Act.

The powers of the Governor in Council under this latter Section may only be exercised in respect of Indians, as defined in the Act. In amending the definition of Indian in the manner explained above, the Governor in Council is also redefining the scope of his own jurisdiction under Section 4(2). Your Committee regards this result as highly unusual and incompatible with the intent of the enabling provision. It also confirms the Committee in its view that the proclamations go beyond the mere suspension of portions of the Act and effectively amount to a modification of the statutory definition of Indian.

3. Your Committee notes that the reason for the suspension of the word 'male' in Section 11(1)(d)(i) is to permit the legitimate children of Indian women who marry non-Indians to acquire a status they would not otherwise have. It is clear to your Committee that, insofar as the proclamations purport to grant non-Indians a right to register, they cannot be said to declare a portion of the Act inapplicable to an Indian or a group or band of Indians.

For these reasons, your Committee concludes that the proclamations under Report, insofar as they suspend the application of Sections 12(1)(a)(iv), 12(1)(b) and of the word 'male' in Section 11(1)(d)(i) of the Indian Act, are ultra vires the powers of the Governor in Council under Section 4(2) of the Indian Act.

[1] The text of Section 4(2) appears as Annex "B" to this Report.

4. Even if the proclamation under Report were to be found intra vires the Act, your Committee questions whether they are legally effective as currently drafted. To be considered a "status" Indian, a person not only must not come within any of the Section 12 exclusions but must also retain a positive right to registration under Section 11 of the Act. The right conferred by this last Section, however, is expressly stated to be subject to Section 12 and your Committee considers this qualifying clause refers to Section 12 as it is found in the statute. Thus, a person to whom a Section 12 exclusion applies loses the very right to register granted by Section 11 of the Act and, in the opinion of your Committee, the fact that a given provision of Section 12 has been declared not to apply to that person cannot change the direct result of the statutory language. For the proclamations to have the effect they purport to have, it would be necessary to suspend the application of the words "subject to Section 12" in Section 11 of the Act.

5. Your Committee also entertains strong doubts that Section 4(2) of the Act contemplates the suspension of a single word in a Section, as in the case of Section 11(1)(d)(i). Section 4(2), it is true, authorizes the issue of proclamations suspending the application of a 'portion' of the Act. Your Committee considers this authority was meant to be used in order to declare substantive parts of the Indian Act not to apply to Indians or in respect of certain reserves, rather than for the suspension of a single word as in the case of Section 11(1)(d)(i). It strikes your Committee that this latter use of the Section 4(2) power involves a strained construction of the word "portion", and is more akin to a process of amendment than to a proper exercise of the enabling power.

6. Your Committee is greatly disturbed by the use made of the authority conferred by Section 4(2) of the Indian Act. While in full agreement with the need to remove the discriminatory features of the Act, your Committee cannot accept the attempt to do so by means of subordinate law rather than by direct legislative enactment. Your Committee considers that the proclamations under Report infringe on Parliament's sole and undoubted prerogative to make or amend the statute law.

7. In accordance with Standing Order 69(13) of the House of Commons, your Committee requests the government to table a comprehensive response to this Report.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN M. GODFREY,
Joint Chairman.

ANNEX "A"

PROCLAMATIONS ISSUED PURSUANT TO SECTION 4(2) OF THE INDIAN ACT

A) Instruments suspending the application of Section 12(1)(a) (iv), and registered as:

SOR/80-395
SOR/80-556
SOR/81-43
SOR/81-44
SOR/81-45
SOR/81-80
SOR/81-114
SOR/81-300
SOR/81-301
SOR/81-302
SOR/81-303
SOR/81-304
SOR/81-368
SOR/81-369
SOR/81-370
SOR/81-371
SOR/81-372
SOR/81-373
SOR/81-763
SOR/81-764
SOR/81-765
SOR/81-766
SOR/81-767
SOR/81-768
SOR/81-769
SOR/81-770
SOR/81-771
SOR/81-772
SOR/81-773
SOR/81-774
SOR/81-775
SOR/81-776
SOR/81-777
SOR/81-778
SOR/81-779
SOR/81-893
SOR/81-894
SOR/81-895
SOR/81-896
SOR/81-897
SOR/81-900
SOR/81-901
SOR/81-902
SOR/81-903
SOR/82-61
SOR/82-62
SOR/82-63
SOR/82-64
SOR/82-65
SOR/82-66
SOR/82-67
SOR/82-68
SOR/82-70
SOR/82-71
SOR/82-72
SOR/82-73
SOR/82-74
SOR/82-75
SOR/82-76
SOR/82-77
SOR/82-78
SOR/82-79
SOR/82-80
SOR/82-81
SOR/82-82
SOR/82-83
SOR/82-84
SOR/82-85
SOR/82-136
SOR/82-137
SOR/82-138
SOR/82-139
SOR/82-140
SOR/82-141
SOR/82-142
SOR/82-310
SOR/82-311
SOR/82-312
SOR/82-313
SOR/82-314
SOR/82-315
SOR/82-513
SOR/82-515
SOR/82-516
SOR/82-517
SOR/82-518
SOR/82-519
SOR/82-585
SOR/82-586
SOR/82-587
SOR/82-588
SOR/82-606
SOR/82-607
SOR/82-608
SOR/82-609
SOR/82-610
SOR/82-690
SOR/82-691
SOR/82-886
SOR/82-891
SOR/82-897
SOR/83-184
SOR/83-314
SOR/83-315
SOR/83-316

B) Instruments suspending the application of Section 12(1)(b), a portion of Section 14 and the word "male" in Section 11(1)(d)(i), and registered as:

SOR/81-679
SOR/82-60
SOR/82-69
SOR/82-161
SOR/82-162
SOR/82-163
SOR/82-164
SOR/82-165
SOR/82-166
SOR/82-167
SOR/82-172
SOR/82-173
SOR/82-174
SOR/82-175
SOR/82-176
SOR/82-198
SOR/82-199
SOR/82-316
SOR/82-317
SOR/82-353
SOR/82-354
SOR/82-355
SOR/82-356
SOR/82-443
SOR/82-514
SOR/82-688
SOR/82-689
SOR/82-883
SOR/82-884
SOR/82-885
SOR/82-887
SOR/82-888
SOR/82-889
SOR/82-890
SOR/82-957
SOR/82-958
SOR/82-959
SOR/83-185
SOR/83-311
SOR/83-312
SOR/83-313

ANNEX "B"

INDIAN ACT, R.S.C. 1970, C. I-6

4.(1) (...)

(2) The Governor in Council may by proclamation declare that this Act or any portion thereof, except sections 37 to 41, shall not apply to

(a) any Indians or any group or band of Indians, or

(b) any reserve or any surrendered lands or any part thereof, and may by proclamation revoke any such declaration.

(3) (...)

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 24, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Steuart be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Bonnell on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES, 1983-84

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e):

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-156

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e):

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-156, intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3)", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is permission granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is any explanation to be offered for this motion?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Bill C-156 would amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, certain provisions of which automatically expire on June 3 or 4. In order that there not be a lapse in the application of the statute, it is necessary that this bill be passed, and in order to facilitate that it is proposed that the Senate committee do a pre-study.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I understand the merits of the case. Perhaps this is a convenient opportunity to ask my honourable friend to give some consideration to related matters, namely, the list of bills that are scheduled for passage by the House of Commons before the end of June. It seems to me from the way things are going that there is a good possibility we might have the proverbial log jam at the end of June in respect of these bills. Unless the Senate is to sit beyond June 30, I think it would be useful to consider our position now.

Would the honourable deputy leader provide a list of the bills that come within the category I have described? Perhaps he could say which of them he thinks might be eligible for this advance treatment. I think particularly of the Crow bill, for example. It seems to me that we would be ill-advised to wait until June 30 before we tackle that one, if we are expected to deal with it in very short order.

Therefore, this might be a good opportunity for the deputy leader to provide us with the government's program respecting these bills, and to tell us what he intends to do about them.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is indeed a good time to consider the questions raised by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

The motion now before the house is one which should apply to other bills, including, for example, Bill C-147, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. That bill falls into the same category, in the sense that it requires an extension of the date. The same applies to Bill C-148, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and Bill C-149, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act. The borrowing authority bill we have already discussed in earlier sittings; I know that my friend is aware of it. It has reached the stage of second reading in the House of Commons.

Bills C-147, C-148 and C-149 have received first reading in the House of Commons. The next bill, in terms of numbers, is Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, which is the Crow bill, on which second reading debate has begun in the Commons. By Thursday we hope to have a motion to authorize the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to prestudy that bill. Some consultations have to take place in the meantime, and I shall consult my honourable friend on that tomorrow and advise him of the progress we are making.

• (2010)

There is then the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, which is the one referred to in the motion now before us, and there will probably be two supply bills to be introduced before the end of June.

The others that I have noted include a bill, which has not yet been introduced but of which notice has been given, dealing with the tax court of Canada. There is the resolution establishing the privacy and information commissioners, that I think my friend and his colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, and I have discussed.

That is the list I have, that I believe there will be substantial interest in, of bills we hope to have passed before June 30, the date mentioned by my friend.

But I know there are other bills that the government would also like to have passed. There is the Canagrex bill; an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act, Bill C-91; the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act, Bill C-95; an Act to amend the Export Development Act, which is before a Commons committee; Bill C-150, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977; the Government Organization Act, 1983, Bill C-152, which has received first reading in the Commons; an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act (Crown Corporations), Bill C-153, which has received first reading; and an Act to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act (No. 2), Bill C-154, which has received first reading.

In case honourable senators have been keeping a record of the numbers, we had previously discussed Bill C-123, the Government Organization Act, 1982. It now consists of the three bills I have just mentioned, C-152, C-153 and C-154. So the subjects have been divided for easier handling.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps I could make a comment on that statement. That is a formidable list, and it is getting close to the end of May, so I think it would be very helpful if we could have a solid list of the bills the government hopes to pass through the House of Commons by the end of June, which would indicate which of them will probably reach us here. Based on that solid list, I should be glad to know the government's scheduling for prestudying, because, as I say, it is a formidable list, and if we are to give the subject matter due consideration a certain amount of planning would be very helpful. I hope that by the end of the week we may have that program nailed down.

Senator Frith: Yes, we will try to do that, honourable senators.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, in light of what the Deputy Leader of the Government has just told us about the proceedings in the other place, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether it would be constitutionally in order for me to give notice of a motion that we abolish the Commons.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Riley and I spent quite a lot of time in the House of Commons, and I know that very often you would move a motion and make the argument before its propriety was challenged, and by doing so you would accomplish your purpose.

If there is one shred of seriousness in Senator Riley's question, I have to say that I know of no constitutional right that the Senate has to deal with such a motion.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question related to the earlier discussion between the Deputy Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Has consideration been given to prestudying the measure to set up a new security organization in Canada, which measure is now before the other place for first reading? Has consideration been given to having a prestudy of that bill by the Senate, bearing in mind that it seems to be a particularly appropriate bill for consideration because of the lengthy, detailed study it will require, and bearing in mind that the committee that examines it will require several weeks for the task?

• (2015)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the short answer to the question is: Yes, some consideration has been given to a prestudy at some stage and perhaps before the bill receives second reading in the other place. At this stage, while it is under consideration, I would not like to speculate on what action may be taken, but I hope to be able to advise honourable senators reasonably soon.

Senator Roblin: I should like to remind the Leader of the Government that we have a draft bill before us respecting the indexed securities investment plan which was introduced as part of the budget papers by the Minister of Finance. At the same time he produced a copy of his bill, together with other material that goes with it. At that time the government stated that it was going to solicit input into this bill so that amendments to the draft could be considered, and some public hearings are going to be held in that respect.

It occurred to me that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce would be an excellent body to give the government some advice with respect to this bill. It would be far better to give that advice before the bill comes to us in official form, when it is cast in concrete and all we can do is enter our faint protest if we do not like something about it.

Would the Leader of the Government give consideration to asking the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to take this matter in hand and see what recommendations it would make prior to the finalization of government policy, so that the representations which the government asks for could at least be forthcoming from this body?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that too is a good suggestion. Certainly, not only could the committee do that but I believe it has established an excellent reputation over the years for examining and making recommendations or commenting on that type of bill.

However, I should draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that there are a number of budget bills that no doubt will be brought in before long but which were not included in the list that the Deputy Leader of the Government gave a few moments ago. It means, of course, that by attaching the bill, or a suggested type of bill that could be introduced in the other place at some given time, the Minister of Finance has now given it the light of day or put it into the public domain for discussion. So those affected or involved in that proposed piece of legislation are now in possession of a draft of that bill to enable them to comment on it.

Senator Roblin: That is not my point. I agree that they are in possession of it. I am simply asking why the Senate cannot study this bill in advance. We might then be able to offer more useful suggested changes to the bill than is likely to be the case after the government's mind has been made up.

Senator Olson: I understood that, and I thought I had accommodated that view in my reply. We on both sides of the house must consider those things which that committee and the other committees which have legislation or prestudies before them must consider. For example, I refer to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science and the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, among others. Also, there is the matter of sufficient membership to attend these meetings, and support staff. All these things must be taken into account, but it is certainly a suggestion that we ought to consider.

● (2020)

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, May 26, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I apologize for being persistent in my observations, but this motion provides me with the opportunity to ask why, if the Senate is not sitting on Wednesday afternoon, we have two committees meeting, one at 2 p.m. and one at 2.30 p.m., which causes an overlap in personnel. I appreciate the point made recently with regard to the staffing of these committees, so it does not make it any easier if their meetings overlap. The two committees are the Committee on Agriculture and the Subcommittee on National Defence. Would it be possible for the deputy leader to consult with the chairmen of those committees to determine whether they can stagger their meetings so that senators who are members of both committees may have a chance to attend both meetings?

While I am on my feet, I am presuming from the motion that we have before us that there is little likelihood of our receiving from the House of Commons any bills to consider this week.

Senator Frith: On the first point, I did advise Senator Lafond, who has been "quarterbacking" these Senate committee meetings, that the Senate would not be sitting tomorrow in order to give the committee an opportunity to meet. I do not know how this overlap occurred. I know that there is a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs at 3 o'clock. I see that Senator Lafond is present, and I am sure that he has heard the observations of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition and will take them into account and solve the problem, if possible.

On the second point, it is correct that I do not anticipate our receiving any legislation this week.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE SENATE

REFORM—PREPARATION OF GREEN PAPER—ANNOUNCEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. The purpose of my question is to obtain some clarification on the intentions of the present government and its desire to introduce changes in this institution, our Senate.

The subject seems to be very much in the news these days. I was looking at last Saturday's Toronto Star, which contained an article under the heading:

[English]

"Support of Senate Reform is Growing." Senator Frith is reported as having said in this article:

> —the Senate needs more muscle to fulfill its duty to represent the regions of the country.

[Translation]

There are also reports that the purpose of Senator Olson's promotion was to ensure that he would be Leader of the Government when these changes were made.

Since then, Parliament has formed a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to examine the changes to be made in this institution.

I am not objecting to certain changes. However, I would like to know whether the government has made a decision with respect to these changes and whether the principal parties concerned, including senators, will soon be informed about these changes.

Let me explain. Not long ago, the Prime Minister announced to reporters, with a lot of publicity fanfare, that the government was preparing a working paper, a green paper on Senate reform.

The Prime Minister added that the reform ought to be made before the next election if possible, which means within about two years.

In his statement, the Prime Minister also said that after studying the question the Cabinet would come to the conclusion that this institution—the Senate—should become a directly or an indirectly elected body.

Here is my first question: How is it that through its leaders here in the Senate—Senator Olson and Senator Frith—the government has decided to strike a joint Senate and House of Commons parliamentary committee to study the changes that might be made to this institution and, as we have hardly begun our joint committee work, the Prime Minister suddenly announces that the government has unilaterally decided that changes will indeed be made to the Senate and that our institution will become an indirectly or a directly elected body?

How can the Leader of the Government explain the fact that the Prime Minister's statement prematurely encroaches on the work of the Senate and House of Commons joint committee? Would it not be more reasonable for the government to table immediately its green paper or working document on changes to be made to the Senate and to have that document referred to the Senate and House of Commons joint committee for study instead of barging in and anticipating the conclusions of a Senate and House of Commons joint committee? The Prime Minister is saying that if the committee is unanimous in its conclusions, the government will proceed with the changes to make the Senate an indirectly or a directly elected institution.

Is the government not acting unadvisedly when it prematurely encroaches on the work of a committee, prejudges the issue and almost orders the committee to make such and such a decision?

[English]

● (2025)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know that Senator Asselin knows the definition of "a green paper."

Senator Asselin: Oh, yes, of course. I have known that for a long time.

Senator Olson: It is significantly different from a white paper. If he were not aware of the difference in definition, I could go to some length to explain it to him. In any event, I believe he has answered his own question by pointing out that the Prime Minister said that a green paper was being prepared. Surely he would not want it tabled before it was prepared.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Can the Leader of the Government assure us that the working paper mentioned by the Prime Minister will be tabled as soon as possible? This could mean within a week, so that the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons may read it before its findings are made public.

[English]

[Senator Asselin.]

● (2030)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should remind Senator Asselin that positive action has been taken in moving to establish the joint committee—I think with some initiative, for which he has quite properly given credit. The committee has been provided with terms of reference that are familiar to him, with certain emphasis on a number of activities of the Senate, particularly regional representation or region-to-region responsibilities. There is also an indication in those terms of reference that the committee should comment on the method of appointment or election, and, of course, those are constitutional matters. All of these things have been provided so that there can be a wide-ranging study of some of the reports and submissions that have been made up until now.

To become more specific in my reply to Senator Asselin regarding tabling the green paper within a week, I would say that in the preparation of green papers, which are statements of some of the background and options, it is a good question as to when they reach the stage at which you are ready to make public those kinds of submissions and statements. They may be all written out, but you may want to think about them for a while, so it is hard to put a specific date on when this one will be ready.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary question. In the minister's opinion, is it normal and appropriate for the government to try and influence a committee set up by the Parliament of Canada?

[English]

Senator Olson: I think the government is just trying to be helpful, as I am sure are Senator Frith, Senator Roblin and half a dozen others, including Senator Asselin and me, who have made public comments regarding some improvements that could be brought about by Senate reform.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: The minister refuses to understand. I am not saying that we are against some changes to this institution. On the other hand, what we find improper is that while a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons has been set up especially to consider this issue, and although we have not yet begun to sit or hear witnesses, the government is already telling us what it is expecting from the committee. That is what I find abnormal.

[English]

Senator Olson: That may be Senator Asselin's opinion, but for him to say that the work on Senate reform has not begun, I think, is ignoring a great deal of useful work that has been done by this house.

That opinion is not even accurate if you apply it to the joint committee, because I know that they have already had several meetings. They have already begun and they will decide what they will set out for their agenda. No doubt they will take into consideration several reports that have already been made, and all of that will go into their consideration when they come to the recommendations at the completion of their report.

Senator Asselin: I would like to know if the minister can tell the Senate when this green paper is going to be tabled in Parliament?

Senator Olson: No, I cannot.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think that several facts have been established by the interchange that has just taken place. The first is that the government is going to produce a green paper giving some material with respect to Senate reform. The second thing that has been established is the clear expression of opinion by the Prime Minister that Senate reform, if he has his way, will take place before the next election. I presume he means that only insofar as the federal Parliament is concerned, because even he would probably hesitate to speak for seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population.

• (2035)

The point made by my honourable friend, Senator Asselin, I think remains important. What is this green paper all about, and when are we to have it?

The joint committee has indeed met, and has indeed issued an invitation to people to submit their views on Senate reform. I want to know from the Leader of the Government whether the government will respond to that invitation, which has been issued to the government as well as to others, in terms of the green paper, because if the committee proceeds along its merry way into the future, and then the green paper is published, that will certainly make the issue a fairly confused one.

I urge my honourable friend to tell us when the green paper will be produced and to assure us that it will be produced in good time so that the government will have submitted its own views and so that we have all the cards on the table at the same time.

Senator Olson: I know what Senator Roblin and Senator Asselin are attempting to do, and that is to get me to predict a date, and preferably an early date, as to when the green paper the Prime Minister referred to will be tabled. I do not have a precise answer.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that Senator Asselin is trying to predict anything; I am sure I am not. We are trying to extract a little information, and that is the problem—extracting information.

My honourable friend would satisfy me if he says he will do his best to find out when the green paper will come down. I do not expect him to have the answer in the back of his head, but to tell us that he does not know, and to leave the impression that he, furthermore, does not intend to find out, is a little too much. I think that he ought to tell us frankly that he will find out when the green paper is going to come down.

He must satisfy us on this point soon, because he must remember that it is now almost June 1, and the joint committee has been given to the end of this year to make its report. If that joint committee is to give full consideration to all matters, the green paper should be tabled now and not in September.

Senator Olson: I suppose other people could make the same argument, and demand that Senator Roblin, because he has an interest, make his views public ahead of any other submissions that might be sent to that joint committee.

Regardless of all the sound and fury being expressed here, the answer I gave a few minutes ago completely answers the question as far as I am concerned. I am sure that both honourable gentlemen will feel that way if they re-examine what I said.

Senator Roblin: The leader has to admit that the green paper before that committee, and indeed before the public, is going to carry a great deal more weight than any submissions made by us or members of the public.

Senator Olson: Don't degrade yourself.

Senator Roblin: I am not degrading myself; I am simply conscious of the weight of numbers. I know where the power lies in this country, as does my honourable friend.

The leader has not told us when the green paper will be tabled. He has admitted there is going to be one, but he has not told us that he will ask when it is going to be tabled. I do not think that that is too much to expect.

I do not expect my honourable friend to write it; I do not want his opinion on the subject, although no doubt it is a valuable one. I simply want to know when the green paper is going to be tabled. He has it within his power to ask about that, and I should like him to do so.

Senator Olson: As I said a moment ago, as Senator Roblin is aware, it will be tabled when it is ready, and I do not know when that will be.

Hon. R. James Balfour: That is a quick-witted reply.

Senator Olson: You do not understand a simple answer.

Senator Roblin: We understand it too well.

Senator Asselin: I should like to know if the leader is a member of the committee of the cabinet drafting the green paper.

Senator Olson: I do not think we discuss in either house of Parliament, or in public, the agenda of any cabinet committee meeting.

Senator Balfour: He does not know on what committee he sits.

Hon. Robert Muir: May I ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question?

The Leader of the Government can correct me if I am wrong—and I have been wrong on occasion—but am I correct in thinking that one of the terms of reference of the Macdonald royal commission is to deal with "Senate reform"? Is that not correct?

Senator Olson: That is not quite right. That is an interpretation of the terms of reference of the Macdonald royal commission that I would not make. What the terms of reference say, in simple and abbreviated terms, is that the commission is to look at the institutions of Canada, the Senate being one of those institutions, in terms of the economic future of this country.

● (2040)

Senator Muir: My supplementary is: Was not the phrase "institutional reform" used in the terms of reference?

Senator Olson: I think so, but I have already referred to that in the reply I gave a minute ago.

Senator Muir: Then, my supplementary is: Since the government has also commissioned this green paper, what is going to have precedence when the last trumpet blows? Will it be this famous Committee on Reform of the Senate of Canada, the Macdonald royal commission or the green paper sponsored by the government?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it may be that we are getting around to a description of the process of Senate reform, particularly as it involves constitutional reform. I would expect that the committee will analyze all the arguments that are placed before it, following which they will come up with recommendations respecting what they deem in their wisdom to be the best kind of institution, known as the Senate, as one of the major institutions in this country. I do not think that I can give an indication, or that it would be proper for me to give one, as to what weight they will put on any recommendations, despite Senator Roblin's argument. I think that the committee will do it on the basis—

Senator Roblin: Which committee are you talking about now?

Senator Olson: I am talking about your suggestion of a few minutes ago—

Senator Asselin: You're joking, Bud.

Senator Olson: —when you seemed to place a lot of weight on this so-called green paper relative to other submissions that are made. Of course, following that, I think it requires something tantamount to a joint address by both houses and the federal government, and it goes to a conference of first ministers where the formula is now known, and so on. That is the process, and I do not think it is very useful for me to try to describe with the kind of precision that Senator Muir has just requested the weight the committee or, indeed, any one of the other stages, would put on the various submissions that are made.

Senator Muir: I have a further supplementary. May I ask the honourable gentleman what bearing spokesmen on behalf of the government will have on what may be in the future, particularly those spokesmen who are deputy leaders of government who write under their own name—great scribes—and who have become authors and are publishing their works? Are they speaking now for the government?

Senator Olson: I could answer that question by asking another one, because the Deputy Leader of the Government in this chamber is not the only one who has expressed personal views.

Senator Muir: A best seller!

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES—SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government or the Minister of State for Social Development. It flows from the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada of May 17 that the ingenious procedure which had been adopted by the National Parole Board, and eagerly supported by the Solicitor General, was contrary to the laws passed by Parliament, laws adopted for the benefit and in the interest of every one of Her Majesty's subjects, even the inmates of our institutions.

My question is very simple. Will the government now make an ex gratia payment to the 12 Canadian citizens who were illegally denied their freedom by this board and subjected to this cruel and unusual treatment?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to take that question as notice. I am sure that Senator Hastings understands some of the complications that are involved in that decision. His interpretation agrees with what I have seen written insofar as the Supreme Court's ruling is concerned, but, as he mentioned, it happened only a week ago, so I shall refer his question to the appropriate minister who, I think, is the Solicitor General.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

NEW BRUNSWICK—PROVINCIAL BUDGET—IMPACT ON POOR AND AGED

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development.

There is much talk these days about regional representation in the Senate. Coming from New Brunswick and having had an interest in social programs throughout my lifetime, I am very disheartened by the latest budget of the Government of New Brunswick. I was pleased to read in the press a couple of weeks ago that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had said that she was going to make some inquiries as to whether or not the new budget presented by the Government of New Brunswick would infringe on the eligibility of the poor and aged of my province for health and social services.

Perhaps the minister would take my question as notice, unless he can respond now, since he is the minister responsible for social programs in this country, and advise us of the results of the inquiries mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If he cannot provide that information immediately, could he stress to the Minister of National Health and Welfare the importance of getting that information out as soon as possible so that at least the people of my province and the members of the legislature there, who do not seem to be able to get that information, will have it on hand before this budget is passed in New Brunswick, a budget that will discriminate against the poor and aged people of my province?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, Senator Thériault is raising one of the most cogent and fundamental issues of social policy before Canadians today. There is a regrettable tendency on the part of some provincial governments to depart from the concept—one which I support—of universal access to medical care in this country. By "universal access" I mean the kind of access that is not dependent upon ability to pay. As honourable senators know, the present scheme is based on tax funding which is a progressive form of support of the medicare system. There are discussions under way between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and her opposite number in the Province of New Brunswick and in the Province of Alberta to see whether there is common ground or a common accord possible with respect to questions that are known as "user-pay" matters under the medicare program.

● (2050)

I am certain that none of us in this chamber wishes to see a two-tier medicare system: one for those who can afford to pay for it; and a means test for those who cannot. I am sure that honourable senators, many of whom participated in the debate preceding the setting up of the programs now under discussion, will not want to see a variation in the universal quality which has given Canada the most outstanding health care system in the world.

I will inquire of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to the matter of timing Senator Thériault specifically asked of me. I thank him for the opportunity to say a few words on this important issue.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I notice that the minister mentioned medicare. That is one aspect, but what disturbs me more about what is about to happen in New Brunswick, beginning July 1, if I understand what is being proposed, is the user fee for hospital care.

As the minister has said, for some of us in society, $6 a day, for every day in hospital, may not be a very important matter, but, unfortunately, there is still a number of people in my province and, I think, across this country who cannot afford to pay $6 a day for any length of time.

Even worse, as I understand it, people who are in receipt of financial assistance from governments are being asked to contribute $3 a day for their stay in hospital. In 1983, I find this to be an almost incredible situation.

I beg the minister to insist that the Minister of National Health and Welfare find a way and means to avoid this situation.

Senator Asselin: Put your question.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I sat quietly when my colleague talked at length about Senate reform.

Senator Donahoe: I have a question.

Senator Thériault: I know it bothers the honourable senator that some are still concerned about the poor people of this country. I am one of those; I am not a Tory reactionary who does not care about those people.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I want Senator Thériault to be clear that, when I refer to medicare, I am referring to payments to doctors and payments to hospitals. Both policies are part of the medicare system.

I share Senator Thériault's concern for the poor people of this country who are caught up in the day-to-day costs of sustaining life and who find illness an unbearable taxation. The medicare system is designed to ensure that the lower income people of this country feel equally free to seek medical care and attention. Essentially the "user-pay" concept is one which puts a tax on illness and is a very heavy tax on poor people.

As I said previously, I shall seek a sense of timing from the Minister of National Health and Welfare and shall advise this chamber as soon as I can.

Senator Thériault: Thank you.

MEDICARE—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question and preface it by saying that I was the Minister of Welfare in the Province of Nova Scotia for 15 years, and that while I was the Minister of Public Health we introduced the hospital insurance plan and the medical insurance plan, both of which have been lauded as being as good as or better than any other medical plan of a similar nature in Canada.

I should like to say to all my colleagues here that I have as much sympathy for the poor people of this country, for the poor people of my province or of any other province, as Senator Austin or Senator Thériault can have, and I object to any suggestion otherwise.

I now come to the question I wanted to ask. My question is based on the speech Senator Austin made in reply to the originally framed question. He said that he was very reluctant to see people make changes in the medical insurance plan and in the hospital insurance plan. My question is an honest and very simple one. Does the federal government today pay its share of the costs of medicare and hospital insurance on exactly the same basis as it agreed to pay them when the plans began?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, it does not.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I am not able to grasp the specific question, but I would tell the honourable senator that the federal government makes payments of a very substantial nature from its budgets. Close to 50 per cent of all medicare costs in this country are paid by the federal government in the form of a block fund.

If Senator Donahoe suggests, on the one hand, that we should pay, without any control over medicare costs—in other words, that we should not be responsible for the taxpayers' money held by the federal government—and, on the other hand, criticizes us for uncontrolled spending, then I suppose that is the sort of double standard that we will hear argued from time to time.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, the phrase "double standard" brings me to my feet because I was one of those who, along with Senator Donahoe, had some intimate knowledge of the hospital and medicare plans that were brought into this country some time ago. I can state categorically, in answer to the question raised by Senator Donahoe, that the federal government does not support medical and health insurance on the terms originally agreed to.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Go on.

Senator Roblin: That is correct.

Senator Thériault: It is not.

Senator Roblin: That is absolutely correct. They have gone into different methods of financing which have had the effect—

Senator Thériault: They are more generous.

Senator Roblin: They are certainly not in my part of the world. It had the effect of reducing the effective support of the federal government.

I am not going to debate the issue as to whether that is good or bad, on the issue of whether the federal government correctly deemed that it should abandon the previous system in the interests of economizing on the federal treasury, because that is what has happened. Other senators here can argue this and make their case if they wish. I would point out that the original terms with respect to the sharing of these costs are not the terms that are in place today.

There is a long story about demands for block grants and all that type of thing, and I do not want to overlook that and minimize it because it is there. All I am saying is that the basis of financing has undoubtedly changed.

Senator Thériault: It is more generous.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I may well be wrong, but I express my opinion that the result of that change has been to put more pressure on provincial treasuries in paying for the costs of these services because the link between the cost and the federal contribution has been broken; that is the difference. Formerly it was there; it has now been broken, and, as a result, we have this difference of opinion as to where the costs are now falling.

It seems to me that the true fact of the matter is that the link between the costs and the formula has been broken. That was not in the original plan, and the result is that the provinces make the claim—and I believe they made it before a committee of the House of Commons recently—that they are now being asked to pay a greater share under this new system than they were asked to pay before.

Honourable senators, that is my opinion, for what it is worth. I think, without trying to allocate blame or to point the finger—because I think it requires much more study than we can give it by a short comment in this house to come to grips with the fact that, fundamentally, Senator Donahoe's question is a good one—the link between costs and federal payments has been broken.

• (2100)

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have had some acquaintance with medicare. I was here when it was passed. The change that was made in financing came at the request of the provincial governments. I opposed it on the floor of this house. In my view, it was a mistake to make this change. At that time, however, the government said it would accede to the request of the provincial governments. As it turned out, the money was, perhaps, used for some other purposes, but the federal government did not initiate that.

While the Minister of State for Social Development is looking into the actions of Alberta and New Brunswick, perhaps I could ask him to take a good look at British Columbia as well; it is not too clean, either, in this respect.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I want to respond to Senator Roblin's observations, and, before doing so, to thank Senator Croll for his helpful intervention.

The problem I have with Senator Donahoe's question is its inarticulate premise that somehow the way it started was perfection and perfection for all of the parties, and that in some way the federal government backed away from an obligation. That was not the case. There have been no variations in the principles of the agreement which was originally entered into between the federal and the provincial governments—the principles of accessibility and of universality.

As regards funding, Senator Croll has correctly said that the provinces sought the block funding system so that they would have full control without the previous quality of federal supervision over the way in which these funds were expended. At the same time, the federal government sought a form of cap on the costs of the medical care system. The cap is based on a formula which is indexed to the consumer price index, I believe. In clear terms, then, federal spending has continued to rise in this area on an indexed formula.

I do not want to enter into a debate with Senator Roblin over the medicare system as a result of a question originally asked by Senator Thériault, but I do want to say that the administration of the costs of medical care in the provinces—the fee schedules for doctors, costs of hospital care and so on—are the responsibility of the provinces. They clearly expected this responsibility when they entered into the block funding system. Therefore, when Senator Roblin says that the link between costs and federal payments has been broken, indeed it has, in part because the provinces sought a larger say in the way in which funds in this area were to be administered.

The system, however, is now being tested again by the desire of some provinces to seek revenues from users. That, it seems to me, crosses the bounds of the principles that Senator Roblin and Senator Donahoe had participated in at the stage of early development of these particular medicare policies. I, for one, am not willing to see the universal access which is afforded to Canadians eroded, in substance, by proposed changes.

In any event, this house will have the opportunity, at an appropriate time later this year, to involve itself thoroughly and feistily in this issue.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, if I may, I want to make one additional statement in response to what Senator Croll has said.

It is not correct, honourable senators, to say that the change to block funding was made at the request of the provinces. It was made at the request of three of the provinces; namely, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. I, too, had some small part to play in those social welfare programs as Minister of Health for my province. I wanted to point out that my colleague, the Honourable Senator Donahoe, also had a part to play in this. I believe he was still Minister of Health—I could be wrong, he might have lost an election at that time—when this matter first appeared on the scene at the Federal-Provincial Conference of Ministers of Health. The Province of Nova Scotia as well as the Province of New Brunswick opposed this block funding.

I also wanted to say that when the hospitalization and medical care services were installed in Nova Scotia under the Minister of Health, the Honourable Senator Donahoe, that province had, like New Brunswick, a good program.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to ask one question of the minister who has just spoken, and it is simply this: Was he aware that, at the time when medicare was being introduced and when universality and all of those other things were being created, the dangers were indicated to the federal government? At that time, the federal government was told that if it insisted on all of those requirements it also ran the risk that the costs would escalate to the point where the government would find it difficult to meet them. The response of the federal government was: "You need have no worry; we are always there. No matter what the costs are, we will bear half of them." Was that not said by the federal government?

Senator Roblin: Exactly!

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I do not have the advantage of Senator Donahoe's age and participation in the travaux préparatoires of this issue, but I will state that the commitment that I believe was then paramount—and that which, so far as I am concerned, is paramount today—was the commitment to the Canadian people to ensure that they have the finest health care system in the world and that it is a system to which they have equal access, whether they are rich or poor.

[Translation]

SPORT

SOCCER—1986 WORLD CUP COMPETITION

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question, or rather my comments, are directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Last week I was watching television, and I saw Senator Perrault in black tie announce to the Canadian Soccer Committee that he was trying to get the international soccer competition for Canada.

Unfortunately, this did not happen. We subsequently were informed that Mexico was selected over Canada and the United States. This upset many Canadians, and in the Senate, Senator Bosa especially was almost outraged at this decision. He was not blaming Senator Perrault and his efforts to obtain the international competition, but he was upset that Canada was not chosen and that Mexico got the games.

I am not criticizing the Minister, because he has shown great dedication in defending this cause, but perhaps the Minister could tell us, in a few words, what the determining factors were in selecting Mexico over Canada.

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Asselin for his question. I have just returned from Stockholm, and I can say that, naturally, we are disappointed that Canada will not host the World Football Championship in 1986. We had hoped to be favourably considered by the so-called cabinet of world football known as the FIFA Executive Committee.

The decision to proceed with a Canadian bid was not taken lightly. Indeed, I should like to take this opportunity to thank the many individuals and organizations from coast to coast who, realizing that Canada was in a less favoured position to win the bid than was Mexico, nonetheless gave the Canadian Soccer Association and the government their support. This support crossed party lines and it was very heartening indeed to have it.

Honourable senators, the unanimous view was that, despite the fact that we were not in a favoured position to successfully bid for the 1986 World Cup, nevertheless we should proceed to Stockholm to make as effective a bid submission there as was possible so that, even if we were not successful this time, at least the Canadian submission would help a future bid in 1990 or 1994. Despite the odds against Canada, we proceeded to make our presentation in Stockholm.

• (2110)

A number of alleged adverse factors were cited by our opponents, such as the minimum size of stadiums required for first round matches—a requirement for 40,000 seating capacity. We stated at the FIFA presentation that we would improve certain Canadian stadiums to bring them to that minimum seating requirement. There was a requirement for the World Cup final for a stadium of 80,000 seats, and, of course, even the Olympic Stadium in Montreal does not have that number of seats. Frankly, we did not consider that FIFA's requirement for certain minimum seating capacities was a problem. The fact is that, while certain stadiums proposed for the World Cup in Canada do not at the moment meet the full technical requirements of FIFA even without additional seats, the financial return per seat in these structures would have been as high as or higher than that in the other bidding countries. There would have been satisfactory levels of revenue for world football, revenue for FIFA and revenue for the development of football in Canada.

My main regret and point of criticism is that the technical committee of FIFA proceeded to make their decision without a personal inspection, an on-the-spot inspection, of the facilities we were offering in Canada. I think that was a serious mistake for FIFA to make, and I told the executive that in so many words during the FIFA meeting in Stockholm just a few days ago.

In eastern Canada, for example, they would have found in the Olympic Stadium in Montreal one of the great stadiums in this world—ideal for World Cup football. And we were prepared to install grass, in a new form described as palletization, for the games. We offered two locations in Toronto, Exhibition Stadium and Varsity Stadium; we offered Jarry Park as an auxiliary playing site in Montreal, which would make an excellent location for first round matches; we offered the Ivor Wynne Stadium in Hamilton; we offered Lansdowne Park in Ottawa; we offered locations in Winnipeg and Taylor Field in Regina, and two locations in Edmonton and one in Calgary, and, of course, the superb new stadium in Vancouver, together with Empire Stadium there if necessary. In the view of the bidding committee, it was a serious mistake for world football not to have visited Canada and the United States to see at first hand the splendid way in which these two countries, particularly—and I admit my prejudices—Canada, could have accommodated the event.

Another alleged problem cited by some was the fact that Canada is a large country. Some contended that because Canada is a huge country, it would be difficult for the soccer players to move from playing point to playing point. Yet, if one accepts the specious argument that large countries present travel problems, Canada, the Soviet Union, Brazil, the United States and other large countries will never host this premier world sporting event, and they might as well forget it. I said to the world soccer representatives at this meeting, "Do not measure Canada's size in terms of its geography. Consider the fact that Canadians have conquered the geography of the country by establishing one of the world's finest transportation systems. In the world tournament played in Spain, the travel time between Barcelona and Madrid was 16 hours by bus. In Canada one can travel in supreme comfort from Halifax to Vancouver and back to Halifax in 16 hours, with a side trip to Quebec City, and there would still be time to spare. Canadian travel by modern jet is much preferable to travelling 16 hours by bus between two points, even though other countries may be smaller geographically.

What I am saying, without labouring the point—I fear I am already doing that—is that Canada's bidding committee believes FIFA made an incorrect decision. While we congratulate Mexico on their success and wish them well, we believe there was an unparallelled opportunity for FIFA to extend the bounds of world football to the North American continent and make this a truly world sport. The day FIFA makes soccer football an authentic world event is the day they decide to site a World Cup in North America—hopefully Canada—regardless of what such a decision may mean in revising previous traditions, prejudices and rules. We have to keep on working at this task of selling the advantages of our country as a World Cup host. Canada would have been s superb site for the World Cup in 1986.

I should like to remind honourable senators, just as we reminded FIFA at the meetings in Stockholm last week, that Canada has hosted more international sports events in the past 10 years than the United States of America. When one looks at the record of this country in hosting world spectacles—athletic and otherwise—and when we consider that Calgary will be the site of the Winter Olympics in 1988, and Edmonton the site of the University Games this year beginning on July 1—and I hope all members of the Senate will attend—it can be said that Canada has a record in the world unparallelled in its ability to host successfully major international events.

All of us remember Expo '67, the Montreal Olympics, the Commonwealth Games and the Pan American Games—all great successes. When Canada is called upon to host the World Cup of soccer there will be no finer hosting task undertaken by any country in the world.

I hope in a news conference later this week to explain in greater detail some of the goals that we attempted to achieve in Stockholm, and some of the events there.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

PROPOSED SALE OF ST. LOUIS BLUES FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON BUSINESS INTERESTS

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I too should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

I know that there was very wide disappointment that the World Cup soccer championships were denied to Canada, but, Mr. Minister, I can tell you that that disappointment fades into insignificance compared with the disappointment and disillusionment that has taken place in Saskatchewan, especially in Saskatoon, at the announcement last week by the governors of the National Hockey League of the rejection of the application of Saskatoon for a team in that league.

I am well aware that a few weeks ago, in response to a question of mine, Mr. Minister, you indicated the support of your department for such an application, and I appreciate what you did, because I know from further confirmation the very real participation of your department in trying to move the governors of the National Hockey League in a direction that would have favoured Saskatoon.

I know the people here in eastern Canada find it somewhat incomprehensible that Saskatoon can support such a team, but

I can assure honourable senators that the issue is a very real one back home. Questions of Senate reform, social services and medicare, and all the things we have talked about tonight, do not rate in the press out there compared with what is going on in that city because of the pre-emptive action of the governors of the National Hockey League. The mayor, a minister of the Saskatchewan government and other dignitaries went to New York, and they really feel that, although they were well prepared, the decision was made long before they even arrived—and that has been been publicly announced.

I am sorry if I have followed Senator Asselin's example and made a speech, because I have not come to my question yet.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): A good speech.

Hon. Martial Asselin: I would not think of stopping you.

Senator Buckwold: I was waiting for Senator Asselin to say, "Time for the question," which it is.

Mr. Minister, while I appreciate all you have done, is there something more your department might do? This issue is not dead. The owners of the St. Louis Blues, Ralston Purina Company, have now embarked on a court action against the National Hockey League claiming $60 million in damages. I understand—and perhaps you may be able to help us a little in this regard—that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, utilizing its role as a protector against restrictive trade practices, will look into that aspect of this rejection.

However, I would ask you on behalf of the people of Saskatchewan, who are emotionally and financially involved in this application, if your department would continue to do what it can in order to bring that opportunity to Saskatchewan, which produces, with all respect, the greatest hockey players in the world, and, if not the greatest hockey players, then, if you look at our politicians, the greatest stick-handlers.

● (2120)

An Hon. Senator: And senators.

Senator Buckwold: And senators. I would like the minister to comment on this issue, which is a very real one in my home province.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): All honourable senators will have been impressed by the eloquent appeal of Senator Buckwold, one of that great representation from the Province of Saskatchewan. Let us hope that we have witnessed merely the first game in the "playoffs", and that although that first game was lost, when the series has been played out, to draw an analogy, Saskatoon will have an NHL team.

Senator Buckwold is quite correct when he said that Saskatchewan has produced some of the finest hockey players in the world, and no one can diminish in any way the degree of support that the people of Saskatchewan have accorded to various sports franchises. The success of the Rough Riders football team in Regina, despite all of the economic indices which usually apply to successful franchises in any sport, is excellent evidence of the willingness of the people of Saskatchewan to support a major league hockey franchise.

I wish to tell honourable senators that I have been in contact with the office of Mr. John Ziegler, head of the NHL, and with committee chairman Mr. William Wirtz in Chicago, and I have pointed out to them the feeling which I believe is held by those of us, whatever our party affiliation, that we would like the Saskatchewan NHL franchise to be established.

In letters to both Mr. Ziegler and Mr. Wirtz I said that as a Canadian I can well remember the opposition that was once voiced to the possible admittance to the NHL of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg. Today those four cities support four of the most successful franchises in the NHL hockey league. To most Canadians, these are significant precedents. We believe that Saskatoon would join that very successful group of Canadian franchises in the NHL.

Undoubtedly, there will be a number of discussions this week. I have not yet read the reported economic analysis of the situation in Saskatoon, which is said to be the basis for the NHL decision, but I hope to have access to that document over the next few days.

SPORT

SOCCER—1986 WORLD CUP COMPETITION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question supplementary to that asked by Senator Asselin. Millions of soccer fans in Canada regret the fact that the games were not awarded to this country. I am sure that if Canada did not get the games, it was not because we did not have one of the most articulate, able and committed representatives in Stockholm. My question of the minister emanates from what I understood him to say earlier, when he blamed the technical committee of FIFA for not having one of their teams inspect the facilities in Canada before awarding the games to Mexico. It is my understanding that between April 22 and April 30 a team of two people from the technical committee or from FIFA visited the Canadian facilities. Is the minister in a position to deny or confirm that report?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, may I clarify the statement that I made earlier. Yes, indeed, two representatives from FIFA, working on behalf of Senor Havelange, Mr. Harry Cavan, Vice President of FIFA, and his associate, Mr. Blatter, arrived in Canada. We held a number of meetings in Ottawa and Montreal to discuss the allocation of the World Cup. During the course of those conversations we were assured by Mr. Cavan and Mr. Blatter that no decision had been taken, and that the decision would be taken by the executive committee in Stockholm. They urged us to come to Stockholm. They said that while on the basis of the technical report, prepared by a subcommittee under the chairmanship of a FIFA representative from West Germany, there seemed to be a good deal of support for the Mexican bid, we should have the Canadian bidding committee come to Stockholm. It was suggested to us that even if we were not successful bidders for the 1986 World Cup, it would be a useful investment for the future. We were counselled that Canada's ability to host a future World Cup should be made known to the world football community.

On the basis of those meetings, Canadian soccer football sent a competent delegation to Stockholm. I do not regret that we did so, because I believe we made many good friends there. The Canadian position was set forth primarily by representatives of the Canadian Soccer Association—Mr. George Schwartz, chairman of the Canadian bidding committee; Mr. Walter Sieber, of the committee; Mr. James Fleming, president of the CSA; and Mr. Eric King. I headed a federal team which included Peter Lesaux, Gilles Houde and G. B. Rosenfeld. Others from the CSA made a very useful contribution.

Senator Bosa: Is "Mr. Fleming" the minister?

Senator Perrault: No; it was Mr. James Fleming of Calgary. He is president of the Canadian Soccer Association.

The submission of the Canadian "team" received a great deal of credit from the international football representatives. We have to keep things in perspective. Before Calgary was awarded the Winter Olympics, eight Canadian bids had gone forward to host the Winter Olympics. Canada was successful the eighth time around. I do not mean to suggest that we should not expect to host the World Cup until the year 2014—I hope and believe it will be sooner than that. I hope it will be in 1990 or 1994 at the latest.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to the question asked by Senator Asselin. He kept referring to "soccer" and the minister, in his reply, kept referring to "football" until his final statement when he said "soccer". That is not unusual because the terms "football" and "soccer" are interchangeable.

I am sure that the minister made a valiant effort in Stockholm. There is no doubt that he did his best to educate the people there. I would now ask him to try to educate a congressman by the name of Jack Kemp from New York State, which is not too many miles from here. Congressman Kemp has been informing the American people that soccer is a communist socialist game, and that American football is a capitalist game, and so on. By the time he got through explaining, I am not sure whether he was in a game, or whether he had been tackled, or what had been going on. It is shocking that a man who comes from New York State, which is so close to our border and to this city, does not know very much about soccer. The minister may have a grade three student who could go and lecture Mr. Kemp on the difference between soccer and American football.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I say, in explaining the use of the term "football", that I was raised to think of football as "soccer". I am referring to that round ball that one kicks around. I added to my education when I went to Europe. Senator Bosa, with his European background, will understand that most of the world talks about "football" and does not use the word "soccer". Possibly the best compromise expression would be "soccer-football" when we talk about it in Canada.

[Senator Perrault.]

With regard to the ideological aspects of soccer-football, the fact is that there are more members of FIFA than there are in the United Nations and they represent every language, race and religion known to men and women, as the honourable senator is aware.

• (2130)

I am rather surprised at the remarks attributed to Mr. Kemp—suggestions that there is an ideological "tag" on soccer-football. All ranges of ideology and political affiliation are represented in world soccer-football. FIFA membership is larger than the United Nations. Many nations of many different political ideologies were represented at the deliberations in Stockholm. Soccer is the largest participation sport in the entire world, and it would be a great and positive decision for the World Cup to be held in Canada, or somewhere in North America. Indeed, it would be the last major link in completing the globe-girdling aspects of soccer-football.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, before I ask my question I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to offer my congratulations—and in doing so I know that I am expressing the feelings of all Canadians who are interested in sport and recreation—to Senator Perrault for the leadership he has given, which I hope he will continue to give, in this highly important matter. May I interject at this point, in reference to the name "soccer" and its being called "football", that those present are in good company. It was the national game of Newfoundland for over 300 years and we never called it anything else but football. I do not suppose that we even knew the name "soccer" 40 or 50 years ago.

I regret that I missed the first portion of Senator Perrault's remarks. He may very well have dealt with the question I am about to ask and, if so, I would ask him to ignore it and I shall read the answer in Hansard. In any event, the minister listed some of the facilities that can be found across Canada, such as the University Stadium and the Exhibition Stadium in Toronto. To the best of my knowledge—and perhaps I should say here that soccer or football was my first love and I have continued my interest for most of my life—the facilities enumerated by Senator Perrault were not built specifically for soccer. I do not think that any of the major facilities in Canada were built for soccer. Of course, that is not true in Europe or in many other parts of the world, which Senator Perrault is justified in pointing out. It is the one universal game and there are great facilities in such countries as Holland, Spain, England, and so on, which were built years ago specifically for soccer. In his negotiations and discussions did the World Cup authorities in rejecting Canada's bid offer any technical criticism of the facilities that we were offering?

Hon. Martial Asselin: That question has been answered.

Senator Rowe: Then, as I suggested at the beginning of my comments, the minister may forget my question and I shall read the answer in Hansard. I might mention that when I say "technical" I am not thinking of such things as geography. That is not a technical reason, and I think it would be a very specious argument to suggest that it is. But were the technical reasons vis-à-vis the actual facilities for the playing of the game?

Senator Perrault: We offered a selection of 12 stadiums. Each of those playing surfaces would have met the international technical requirements of soccer-football. The actual field areas would have been entirely satisfactory. At the present time some of the stadiums in Canada have artificial turf. This turf has not yet been authorized for use in international competition by the world football body known as FIFA. The Canadian bid proposed to spend $3 million to provide temporary grass playing surfaces in those stadiums—stadiums like Olympic Stadium in Montreal, the beautiful new 66,000-seat covered facility in Vancouver, and Exhibition Stadium in Toronto.

One other technical objection was entered and that was with regard to covered stadiums. While world football is moving towards artificial turf and covered stadiums, it has not yet come to the point where international competition is authorized under either condition. We were particularly anxious to show them the new Vancouver covered facility because many of them have no idea of what constitutes a modern covered facility. They believe that it would be like playing football in an auditorium. In Stockholm they said such things as, "We can't understand a game being played in a building or in something with a ceiling on it." Of course, there is a substantial difference between a light, translucent membrane covering of the kind in the B.C. Place Stadium in Vancouver and the idea of playing in an auditorium. It is our contention that Canada could meet the technical conditions required by FIFA.

As I say, our regret is that there was not a personal, on-site inspection of Canada's facilities. I cited at the meetings with FIFA the fact that when it comes to chosing the site for the Canada Games, whether it be the summer or winter games, we are particularly meticulous in our efforts to ensure that every site bidding for the games is given the same treatment in terms of time and effort by the site evaluation technical committee. For example, early in June we will evaluate four sites in Nova Scotia for the next Canada Winter Games. The committee will be meticulous in its efforts to ensure that all sites are inspected fairly.

I said in the Stockholm discussions that, when it comes to deciding the site of the world's largest sporting event, justice must be done and must appear to be done. Reading written technical submissions is not good enough. On-site inspections are required to determine whether or not one bid is technically better than another. We think that world soccer-football made a serious mistake by not coming to North America and inspecting all proposed sites. Most of the world media agree.

THE BUDGET, 1983

WINNIPEG—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CAPITAL PROJECT PLAN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have four delayed answers and some of them are fairly long. In view of the hour and the business that is yet to come before us, I would ask that they be taken as read.

My first answer is to a question asked by Senator Roblin on April 26 and May 10 concerning special recovery projects in the City of Winnipeg.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

On May 13, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, Minister of Employment and Immigration, announced details of a tri-level commitment to redevelop the north of Portage area of downtown Winnipeg. Accordingly, each level of government has committed up to $20 million to support this endeavour. For its part, the federal government's contribution will come from the $2.4 billion Special Recovery Projects Program announced in the April budget. In addition, the minister also announced that a new $41 million National Research Council Manufacturing Technology Institute will be built in Winnipeg in conjunction with the overall redevelopment plans. A tri-level task force has also been formed to look at specific development concepts and the appropriate mechanisms to implement them; it is expected to report within 60 days.

The honourable senator based his questions on media speculation and rumour, which were not based on fact. The announcement by the minister has since clarified the situation and prospects for the revitalization of downtown Winnipeg are now very promising.

AIR CANADA

MEDICAL EXAMINATION OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES—SPECIAL ALLOWANCE TO CERTAIN QUEBEC EMPLOYEES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on May 12 regarding Air Canada's use of a California hospital for executive medical examinations. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Air Canada's objective regarding medical services is to offer complete preventive programs in order to minimize employees stress and illness. Preventive programs are already in place for various employee groups.

In 1982, Air Canada extended the concept to its senior management. Following a thorough review, Scripps Memorial Hospital in La Jolla, California, was judged to offer the most complete services available at one facility. Twenty senior executives were examined during 1982. Further visits are planned only for those with identified problems. The cost of the examinations was comparable to the cost of a similar program at any location.

Air Canada has reviewed the results of the program, and intends to develop its own program on the Scripps model.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have information relating to a question asked by Senator Phillips on May 12, regarding Air Canada's allowance for management employees working in Quebec. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Air Canada, along with several other large corporations, offers an allowance to management employees working in Quebec and earning $45,000 per year and over.

The program was introduced in 1978 to offset a tax levied by the Government of Quebec on one segment of the work-force. In 1982, the average marginal tax rate for Quebec employees earning over $45,000 was approximately 15 to 20 percent higher than the average Canadian rate.

The allowance is a taxable benefit. Even with this compensation, net disposable income for Quebec employees is consistently below that of employees with similar salaries elsewhere in Canada.

The program is part of Air Canada's established compensation package and does not violate federal wage and price guidelines or the 1983 salary freeze for management.

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my last answer relates to a question asked by Senator Flynn on April 20 and it concerns the explanation of the Minister of Finance for the addition of $200 million to the Special Recovery Program described in the April budget. I am going to do something that is a bit unusual.

Hon. Martial Asselin: He is not here.

Senator Olson: Perhaps I should wait until Thursday. Senator Flynn has asked that the comments of the Minister of Finance regarding the $200 million added to the Special Recovery Program be put on the record of this house, even though it is already printed in the record of the House of Commons. I am prepared to do that but I think it is a bad practice. Indeed, there are prohibitions against taking verbatim accounts from one house record and putting them in the record of the other house. I want to make it clear, however, that I am not refusing to fulfill his request. I have the information with me. But I think that we should seriously reconsider copying these things from one record, which is readily available, into our record.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NEWFOUNDLAND—SEAL HUNT PROTEST ACTIVITIES—FILM CREW ON BOARD SEA SHEPHERD

Question No. 104 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

Did the CBC film crew travel to the United States to join an illegal expedition by one Paul Watson aboard the Sea Shepherd and, if so, (i) how many were in the crew (ii) did they proceed to Newfoundland (iii) how much time was involved and (iv) what was the total cost of the exercise?

Reply by the Minister of Communications:

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

A CBC film crew did travel to the United States where they boarded the Sea Shepherd.

(i) Three

(ii) Yes

(iii) Nine days from their departure from St. John's to their arrival back in that city.

(iv) With regard to the costs involved, it has not been customary for Parliament to require the Corporation to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the costs involved in individual program projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to House of Commons Question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

● (2140)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Fifteenth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I know you have all been eagerly awaiting my speech tonight. However, in view of the fact that we have already heard quite a few speeches and also because I wish to attend a meeting, I ask that this order be allowed to stand until Thursday.

Order stands.

PRONOUNCEMENT OF ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURES—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills.—(Honourable Senator Macdonald).

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to yield to Senator Le Moyne.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, before I begin my remarks let me say, like the dentist, "This won't take long!"

Had it been my intention to deliver a sermon I would have chosen as my text the following exclamation from Genesis, chapter 28, verse 17: "How awesome is this place!" But do not worry; I have no such sinister designs upon your attention and your time.

It is nonetheless a fact that this great chapter-house of the Senate is very impressive, especially for such youngsters as are new senators.

That is why a few days ago, when Senator Kelly rose to give his maiden speech, I thought he was very brave. Projecting on him my own premature fears, I began to feel rather apprehensive, but his very first words dissipated all my anxieties, for my honourable friend delivered with a most urbane ease an oration that was a model for its elegant and witty concision. I congratulate him again, hoping to be inspired by his example, at least in being brief and to the point.

[Translation]

Before going any further, it is only appropriate that I should offer warm thanks to honourable senators for giving me such a kind and considerate reception. Everyone I spoke to, on both sides of this concertante Chamber, was immensely generous and forthcoming with his advice. I am sure that occasionally, my innocence may have brought smiles to the faces of some my colleagues. Let them be assured that I too was prepared to have a good laugh—after the fact.

In the Parliamentary Restaurant, thanks to the spontaneity of the habitués of the senators' table, I received further advice and further lessons of great political and historical value. To me, these are pearls of wisdom I shall cherish as much as I respect the men who proferred them.

Here, I wish to pay tribute to the Honourable Senator Renaude Lapointe, my sponsor, and express my very profound and respectful admiration. I shall always be thankful to Senator Lapointe for having shown me the ropes, as it were and for having, with her reassuring presence, eased me through the solemn rites of initiation into the Senate.

[English]

Honourable senators, in concluding these preliminary remarks, I wish to say how fortunate I hold myself to have inherited Senator Carl Goldenberg's office—his office, not his mission, unfortunately. Senator Goldenberg, with whom I had the honour to be acquainted, anticipated my own call and just a few days after my arrival he telephoned to offer me his congratulations, to tell me how his old office was convenient, how he was happy to learn that I was to dwell and work there, how he was himself working as hard as ever, and adding at that point, "Je suis dans la négociation par-dessus la tête." He was speaking French all along. Well, all his words I took for a blessing and I am sure that working in a cell so long filled with his masterful presence will be an inspiration to me. May I be given something of his patience and of his authority. Indeed, the smallest portion of his genius for pacification would truly be an invaluable gift. Yes, just as Senator Croll is a man of justice, so is Senator Goldenberg a man of peace. I dare say that at this intense phase of his noble career Carl Goldenberg must know, at the very least, as much as Mackenzie King himself about industry and humanity.

[Translation]

I should like to deal with the procedure of Royal Assent, something Senator Frith himself dealt with when the Senate met on May 10, 1983, following an intervention by the Leader of the Opposition. Because I do not believe that I could add anything worthwhile to the magnificent contribution made by the Deputy Leader of the Government, I will merely say that nobody could be more deliciously technical than he was. I leave to senators more competent than I am the task of addressing the legal and constitutional aspects of this issue, aspects which surely deserve to be examined with the utmost attention.

At the outset, I wish to make known my concern. It is apparently intended to change one way or the other one the most time-honoured ceremonies in this country. I am not saying that it is planned to change it directly or to replace it; I am merely saying that it will necessarily be changed if alternative procedures are considered or if this procedure is used at other times or on special occasions.

[English]

No doubt about it! Whatever would be done inside the field of the ceremony of Royal Assent would entail a change, however light and subtle, in the very being of the ritual. We are dealing with an institution stemming from the most authentic British tradition. Now, British traditions are the object of such meticulous, if not always loving, care, because it is extremely difficult to contain any change imposed on them. They are far more sensitive and delicate than we assume them to be, because they so often express the balanced culmination or resolution of some long and hard conflict, because they are imbedded in human ambiguity. And that, honourable senators, is what makes them so beautiful and precious, and that is what should make them so dear to our hearts and minds. They are the expression of an outstanding political genius, a genius always at work, of course, but a genius whose productions are of such a high order that they cannot be very frequently, so to speak, serialized.

On May 14, a reporter of the Globe and Mail instinctively expressed the feeling that the venerable ceremony in question might come to an end, if the still hypothetical change became law, thus unwittingly affording some justification to my concern.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, my concern will not take the form of an objection but rather of a modest caveat. In its present form, the Royal Assent ceremony itself is not that impressive. What is impressive is its meaning, and the same is true of any ritual or liturgy.

Now, it is in fact a liturgy, a lay liturgy. As such, it transcends all those who take part in it, either as officiants or as members of the audience—I was going to say members of the congregation. I therefore believe that in itself, this liturgy transcends every one of us, including the Governor General or his Deputy, even including the Queen herself as a private individual, which Her Majesty cannot really allow herself to be.

Our ancient ceremony means that something more important than we are is involved; it means or notifies us that we are not to be equated with our function and that, while it is theoretically possible for each of us to be equal to his task, none of us could be in law or in fact equated with our function, because this function is exclusively official, because it is nothing if it does not receive royal confirmation after each of its distinctive acts, that is after the passage of any bill. Our role is essentially to serve both the people and the royal power. It reflects the role of the sovereign herself, whose supereminent duty is to serve. To paraphrase one of the first sentences in the Bible, one may say that our role is created in the image and after the likeness of the royal power. It is therefore a royal creature.

These are the basic truths and essential facts which are periodically brought home to us by the Royal Assent ceremony. I said earlier that this ceremony can be compared to a liturgical act. Without stressing the general need for liturgies, I would like to note that any rite is formal and form-giving; that any ceremony imposes a certain form. In the present case, the Royal Assent ceremony regroups in one ultimate, single and perfectly effective symbol all of our rules. In the context of my analogy, it is a sort of sacrament. And a sacrament is both an oath and a sign.

In the reverent silence then required of us, the progress of the ceremony also reminds us that however inspired our proceedings might be or are believed to be, they need to be structured and lead to this final and truly majestic conclusion of the Royal Assent only because of the structure which contained, moulded and exalted them.

All this is due to the form which the ceremony takes and which, in a sense, proceeds from it. And to some extent, to use another analogy, one must also consider the possible and truly fearsome effect of the vice of form, for the vice of form negates the act itself.

● (2150)

[English]

When Mr. Speaker sends away the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to summon the Commons, during the ceremony of Royal Assent, we may hardly repress a smile, and no doubt some of us could laugh outright, and outrageously, if adequately provoked. Since we all understand very well the peculiar mysteries, or the little metaphysics, of this liturgy, it is not because we find it funny that we may be tempted to laugh. Why then? I would discern here the shade of a defensive reaction, of a protective derivation, a way of easing out our secret reluctance to admit a reality as intimate as it is overwhelming. If we are tempted to laugh, it could well be because we are just loath to confess how awesome is this place, how vital are our responsibilities.

[Translation]

I note in passing the trite existence of similar reactions when within the same person specificity and individualism are equivocal. Thus can be explained the apparently so silly laughs of young men and what Ambroise Paré, a French physician of the XVIth century, called the "facultés risifiques et risolières des filles". Imperious, frightening and fascinating, at the same time anonymous and intimate to the ultimate degree, sex is uncovered at puberty; so puberty laughs nervously and gets the giggles.

Honourable senators, I acknowledge quite willingly the validity of the reasons which prompted this debate. I can see Royal Assent requires a partial recourse to a simplified procedure. However, it would be disastrous if the proposed innovation were to jeopardize the traditional ceremony in any way: it has a meaning of irreplaceable richness, its scope is such that it could not possibly be changed without being reduced, limited, diminished, belittled and robbed of its originality. For goodness' sake, the relevant proposal about which we will ultimately be called upon to take a decision ought to state categorically and with unquestionable clarity that the former ceremony shall remain intact, unchanged, without any omission, in the case of any legislation of particular significance and be resorted to with generous frequency. In that respect, what will be left to do will be to gauge the importance of the legislative measures and to establish the frequency of recourse to the old formula. How prudent we shall have to be! Are we not already very close to the path leading to the arbitrary? While we are at it, what would prevent us from doing away with the processional entrance of the Speaker? And why not urge His Honour to forget his tricorn and his gloves, why not scrap the mace and the black rod, those unwieldy emblems? Why not unfrock them all—the Speaker, the Clerk, the Gentleman Usher and their assistants? Why not, in a sudden iconoclastic rage, outfit them all in ordinary civvies? But we do know, those gentlemen are more that that, and they must tell that to themselves and to us, and through the unreserved acknowledgement of their lofty significance, prevent us from downgrading ourselves to the status of mere civilians. In these precincts, the cowl of those who preside over our deliberations and our ceremonies does make the monk indeed. And that accoutrement rubs off on all of us, thanks to an invisible contagion which I would readily liken to immanence.

[English]

In short, there is always more here than meets the eye. I wish to conclude with a further recommendation, more intimately, more concretely linked to our parliamentary tradition.

When Royal Assent is given to supply, the Clerk of the Senate has the following words to utter:

> In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to these bills.

How heavy, how dense with history are those ever surprising words! The thanks of Her Majesty, the acknowledged benevolence of Her subjects! These words bear upon a capital and hard-won power. Senator Frith most aptly made the point when he opened this debate, adding what follows:

> Honourable senators may want to propose something giving special status to supply bills.

Such an invitation is irresistible. It is not yet the proper time to propose, but if we are to adopt some variation of the Australian formula, since a wind of Australian fashion seems to be blowing quite imperiously on our Hill, I suppose one is allowed to suggest without more ado that, in the case of supply bills being given Royal Assent, the messages sent to the Speaker of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Commons should always include in full, and without any change whatever, the particular utterance of the Clerk proclaiming Royal Assent which I have just quoted.

Borrowing with very slight modifications the words of a reverend gentleman unforgettably illustrated some years ago in the New Yorker, may I add, in conclusion, that I trust the honourable congregation has forgiven me if I have indulged in a little metaphysical plugola.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, May 26, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 26, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILL

EPARCH OF THE EPARCHY OF SAINTS CYRIL AND METHODIUS OF SLOVAKS OF THE BYZANTINE RITE IN CANADA—BILL TO INCORPORATE—COMMONS MESSAGE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-35, to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada, and acquainting the Senate that they had passed the bill without amendment.

[English]

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE SEEKING FURTHER INSTRUCTION

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 26, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act", has, during the course of its consideration of this Bill, determined that the amendments to the Bill moved in Committee on May 25, 1983 would, if adopted, extend the provisions of the Bill to objects that, although they are cognate to its general purposes and within its principle, are not strictly covered by the subject matter of the Bill as disclosed on second reading.

The amendments in question are intended to create a specific power to withhold the early release on mandatory supervision of inmates judged by the National Parole Board to be potential dangerous offenders.

Your Committee, therefore, recommends that it be instructed by the Senate to consider the amendments in question during the course of its consideration of Bill S-32, as it would any other amendment within its competence, and that it be authorized to adopt the amendments, as moved or in amended form, if it considers it advisable to do so.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: I move, with leave of the Senate, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we might agree to commence consideration today, but I should like to inform the chairman of the committee that we would not be prepared to adopt the report today because it is something that we would want to read and study carefully. I know that some of the members on this side have comments to make on it.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): This is really only a reference back to committee; it will come before the Senate again.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps I do not understand what my honourable friend is moving. If she could give me the operative part, I could perhaps reconsider my position.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, what the committee is seeking today are instructions to consider some further amendments to Bill S-32. These are amendments which have been proposed by the Solicitor General and which we have already considered on two occasions. However, although we feel that they are perhaps without the purview of the subject matter of the bill, they are sufficiently connected that we feel they should be considered at the same time. Therefore, we ask, in accordance with the Rules of the Senate, for permission to consider these amendments that have been moved.

It does not in any way jeopardize the right of the committee, or indeed of the Senate, to consider them in substance or in depth at some later time if the committee decides, in fact, to approve them.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. I should still like to see what these proposed amendments of the Solicitor General are. In view of the fact that the committee is not likely to meet between now and next Tuesday, I see no reason why consideration of the matter should not stand until that time. I have no objection to granting leave to introduce my honourable friend's proposal now, but we should adjourn debate on the matter until next Tuesday.

Senator Olson: Perhaps I could make a comment for the consideration of the Acting Leader of the Opposition. As has already been explained, there will be a further opportunity in the committee for consideration of these amendments. All the committee is asking for at this time is permission to consider those amendments. When that has been done, there will be a further opportunity, when the committee reports to the Senate, to decide whether or not it is the wish to adopt the amendments.

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, but I cannot agree with my honourable friend. I have not read these amendments and I do not know what instructions the committee is seeking. Senators who are not members of the committee are not familiar with the issues, and it seems to me that it is only reasonable that we should have a chance to read what is proposed, and then we can deal with it. In all probability, it will not be disputed at that point, but it seems to me common sense that the matter should be considered by us on this side of the house before we are asked to vote on it.

Senator Olson: If that is my honourable friend's position, I accept it as reasonable. It does, however, raise the question of the committee meeting being put over until Wednesday. There were some plans to have a committee meeting at some time on Tuesday before the Senate meets.

Senator Roblin: I have some sympathy with my honourable friend, but this matter has been before the committee for nearly two months. Another day is not going to make much difference.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Perhaps I could say a word on the matter, honourable senators. As a member of the committee, I did not feel it was necessary to go through this procedure, but the more cautious members of the committee expressed their wish by a vote to come back to the Senate. I suggest that if Senator Roblin were to reserve his judgment in the matter until Senator Neiman has explained what it is all about, he might change his mind.

Senator Roblin: I have no objection, as I have said before, to Senator Neiman's doing whatever she wishes this afternoon. All I am saying is that when it comes to consideration of the matter, we will move the adjournment.

Motion agreed to.

● (1415)

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Cottreau be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Benidickson on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I should like to know whether these changes in committee membership are discussed with committee chairmen.

The other day I noted that changes were made to the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. As chairman, I was not aware that that was to be done. I should like to know if the administration is supposed to advise committee chairmen that this is to be done, or what their view is in this regard.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, perhaps I could speak to this matter. It is normal to discuss changes in membership with the chairman of the committee involved. For a variety of reasons, sometimes that is not possible. In future, I shall make use of the telephone.

Senator Everett: You do whatever you want to do.

Senator Petten: No, I did not say that.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i):

> That the names of the Honourable Senators van Roggen and Steuart be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Wood and Lucier on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

I would add, honourable senators, that, before the changes were moved I discussed them with the four senators involved and also with the chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INFORMATION COMMISSIONER
PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

NOTICES OF MOTIONS RE APPOINTMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

> That in accordance with Section 54 of Schedule I of An Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of Inger Hansen, Q.C., as Information Commissioner.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, I also move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h):

> That in accordance with Section 53 of Schedule II of An Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of John W. Grace, Esquire, as Privacy Commissioner.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Explain.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, will the minister permit a brief question? For the benefit of those who are less well informed than he, can he give us something of the legal background behind the procedure being followed here? To my knowledge, and certainly since I have been in the Senate, this is the first occasion on which such a procedure has been used for approving appointments of that nature. I am curious to know why this procedure is being followed. I would like some explanation before I will give my consent to what is taking place.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, before the Leader of the Government responds I wish to say I agree totally with Senator Donahoe. In fact, I endeavoured to intervene on the previous motion for the appointment of Ms. Hansen.

It seems to me that with these two motions there is the introduction of a new proposition to the Senate. If that be the case, and the administration is proposing something different from what we have been accustomed to, then it is time for the Leader of the Government to give us an explanation so that the Senate will be fully apprised of what it is voting on. It was certainly not fully apprised with respect to the motion it just voted on.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have not come with a prepared text or an explanation of what is being asked for, although I understand what the request is. It is in compliance with the statute referred to as the Access to Information Act and Privacy Act. That act did in fact call for commissioners to be appointed and for those appointments to be confirmed or ratified, or whatever the appropriate term is, by both houses of Parliament.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Has that act been assented to?

Senator Olson: The law has been passed, yes, and indeed proclaimed. I believe the date of proclamation was April 1. I should say that following its proclamation I did point out the requirements of the act to the Leader of the Opposition, and that exchange of information was also made in the other place. I believe I also communicated that information to the members of our own caucus two or three weeks ago.

In response to what is being asked for right now, namely an explanation of the legal requirements, I should mention that the legal requirements were in fact clearly set out in the act that was considered by both houses of Parliament some time ago. What is being now asked is leave to move a motion in the terms that I explained a few minutes ago, which is a ratification of the procedure that I am now going through.

[Senator Olson.]

● (1425)

I am now in a little better position, because I have a script dealing with some of the points that have been raised. The resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons to approve the appointment of an Information Commissioner and a Privacy Commissioner require this procedure: A resolution of both houses is required under section 54(1) of the Access to Information Act to approve the appointment of an Information Commissioner, and under section 53(1) of the Privacy Act to approve the appointment of a Privacy Commissioner. Rule 45(1)(h) requires that one day's notice be given for a substantive motion. That is why I asked leave.

When the Senate approved the resolution to appoint the Official Languages Commissioner, Max Yalden, it did so under similar provisions of the Official Languages Act, which I understand are the same as the requirements in this act. In that case the Senate gave leave late in the afternoon of August 5, 1977, and passed the motion, the House of Commons passed the same motion either the same day or within a few days.

I could read the rest of this memo, if honourable senators so wish, and try to reply to the rest of the questions.

In response to the questions asked by Senator Donahoe and Senator McElman, that is the procedure, and the requirement for the procedure of moving these resolutions on the floor of the Senate.

That is the situation. The reason it came up today—I think I am correct on this—is that it was desired to move the motion in both houses on the same day, and today was a day that was agreed on for that purpose in the other house. This, by the way, was known to the Leader of the Opposition when I discussed it with him some two weeks ago, perhaps even three or four weeks ago.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I appreciate the explanation given by the Leader of the Government. It seems to me that these phrases are most important—information, access to information, freedom of information. It would appear to me that one of the things we require in this chamber is information. I agree with Senator Donahoe and Senator McElman. When the Speaker asked if we approved the motion, I noticed that the Acting Leader of the Opposition nodded his head. I speak for myself, and for Senator Donahoe who joins me, and apparently Senator McElman, although he is on the other side, I certainly do not think we should go ahead with this, because it is up to the leaders of our parties to advise us what is taking place if they were informed two weeks ago.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government for clarification of the procedure he has just outlined. The concept of the two houses of Parliament ratifying appointments is readily understood, I am sure, by all of us, but it would seem to me that the normal procedure when the Senate is asked to ratify an appointment is for the subject to be raised and then referred to some appropriate committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Manning: The individual concerned should then come before that committee and be prepared to provide whatever information the members might seek before making a decision. As it stands now, as far as I am concerned—and I assume as far as most other members of this house are concerned—we are asked to ratify the appointment of someone we do not know at all; we have no knowledge of his qualifications, his background or anything else. I suggest that simply turns the Senate into a rubber stamp. I am not quarrelling with the procedure of having the house ratify the appointment. Surely the least honourable senators should expect is an opportunity to question a nominee for a position before they formally vote on the ratification.

• (1430)

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, before the leader responds, I, too, feel strongly that far too often this chamber is accused of being nothing but a rubber stamp. Assumedly, when the legislation to which the Leader of the Government has referred was passed by Parliament, it was supposed to have some significance. Parliament was given the responsibility of confirming the appointment of individuals.

As honourable senators are aware, proposals have been made that the Senate become a body to approve ambassadorial appointments, judicial appointments, and many other appointments, but there is already legislation in effect for that purpose.

Presumably the Senate does not want to be accused of being merely a rubber stamp. I certainly echo the sentiments expressed by Senator Manning that any reference of this kind, unless we are to be foolish not only in the eyes of the public at large but in our own eyes, has to be referred to a committee. The people who are nominated can then appear before the committee, and the ministers responsible for the nominations can appear before the committee, and we can then act as we should act in this chamber, as people who take our responsibilities seriously.

Senator Olson: We can carry this discussion on for some time, but I think it is clear that leave will not be given. The position I take, then, is that I will give notice, and we can debate the matter at the next sitting.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No doubt my honourable friend will include an invitation to the first party mentioned today. He should be invited to appear before the committee to be examined.

Senator Olson: I am not sure we have reached that decision. I understand the suggestions that have been made—and I am not discounting them—but I think I should give some further information. I assumed wrongly that the curriculum vitae and background information respecting both of these nominees were indeed known to honourable senators. I give an undertaking now to distribute the curriculum vitae of both nominees tomorrow or, at least, before we meet on Tuesday of next week.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: When it comes to ratification of some appointments—this is now the third one—and when names are put forward, I think full notice as provided for in the Rules of the Senate should be given. Regardless of whether the procedure is to refer the matter to a committee, I think we should all be given an opportunity to know the names of the nominees so that we can consider them. In confirming nominations, I think it would be a wise policy for this house to have the full notice provided for in the rules.

Senator Olson: What I said a moment ago was in agreement with what Senator Molson has just said.

I apologize to any honourable senator who believes we were moving too rapidly without passing out information, because I was certainly under the impression that every honourable senator had received an indication some time ago that these appointments would be proposed in a motion, and that the curricula vitae had been distributed. If that has not been done, then it will be done before the next sitting.

• (1435)

Rather than ask for leave to move these motions today I shall ask the house to accept them as notices of motions for consideration at the next sitting.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 31, 1983, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we anticipate receiving some bills from the other place next week. One is the bill concerning electoral boundaries in Alberta, which we expect to be available for consideration by this house next Tuesday. We shall also be dealing with the two motions, notice of which I gave earlier today, respecting the appointment of a Privacy Commissioner and an Information Commissioner. We also expect to receive the bill dealing with the salaries of lieutenant governors.

At this time I am not sure whether firm agreement has been reached to pass Bill C-152 on Friday. However, we believe there is a strong possibility of that happening. The bill concerns the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related thereto.

Honourable senators will recall that the legislation originally contained in Bill C-123 was split into three separate bills, those being C-152, C-153 and C-154. Bill C-152 deals with changes to the Department of External Affairs Act, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act, and Special Areas Act, transferring some of the previous functions of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for example, with respect to international trade to the Department of External Affairs, and also the reorganization of what is now called the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. We expect that bill to reach us next week.

A few days ago, Senator Roblin, acting in his capacity as Deputy Leader of the Opposition, asked for what he termed a solid list of legislation that we could expect to receive for the rest of the session. I am sure honourable senators will understand that I do not want to presume as to what will be coming to us from the other chamber. However, I can indicate that we believe a number of bills will be coming to us, and my honourable friends can put their own interpretation on how soon they will reach us. We believe that those are matters that can and should be dealt with by the end of June.

● (1440)

As I said, first of all we really believe we need to amend Bill C-147, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. My understanding is that there is not much by way of amendment to that act other than to extend the time, which expires on June 30. The same is true of Bill C-148, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Those acts will not be operative after June 30 unless we extend the expiry date.

There is also Bill C-149, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, which seeks to increase the borrowing authority of the corporation.

Then there is Bill C-151, which is cited as the Borrowing Authority Act, 1983-84 (No. 2).

There is also Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain.

With respect to Bill C-156, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3), I believe there is agreement that it will be passed by 6 o'clock on Thursday, June 2 in the other place. It has some important implications because the act expires on June 4. It contains some important amendments, which I do not want to go into now, regarding leave, unemployment insurance respecting leave during pregnancy, and unemployment insurance for fishermen. In any event, that would come to us by 6 o'clock. I suppose we could have some discussions, through the usual channels, as to whether or not we should sit on Thursday evening after 6 o'clock—perhaps at 8 o'clock—to deal with it. We could sit on Thursday evening to consider it and to refer it to committee, but we would have to sit again on Friday, June 3, in any event, so that we could have Royal Assent at some time during that day while the House of Commons is sitting. My understanding is that this has been worked out with both opposition parties in the other place. In any event, those were the dates mentioned.

Two supply bills have to be introduced and dealt with by the end of June, following the completion of what are referred to as opposition days in the other place.

Then there is an act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. It has not yet been introduced, but notice has been given in the other place.

Then there are two bills, S-31 and S-32, that we should like to deal with, and honourable senators are aware of the earlier discussion.

There is another longer list, including Bills C-85, C-91, C-95 and so on. I fear the opposition may say I am putting out an unrealistic list by listing all of these, but we believe, for example, that Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, increasing the capitalization and so on, is fairly important. Then there are some others I have already dealt with—in particular, Bill C-152.

I think that is a fairly realistic list of the bills that the government hopes to pass by June 30.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: I wish to thank the Leader of the Government for supplying the list requested by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Government must realize that between now and the end of this session—according to the rules that apply this year—we have about thirty-five days left if the session is to end on June 30. The reason why we asked for a list of the bills that the government intends to table in Parliament is that this year, we would like to avoid being caught with a substantial amount of major legislation and having to pass these bills in a dead rush. That is why the Official Opposition preferred to give the government fair warning that if it has any major legislation to submit to the Senate, it should do so as soon as possible to give senators enough time for a thorough study of the bills and not, as happens every year, unload a mass of important bills, thus obliging us to sit day and night in order to rush the bills through. That is why we made this request to the Leader of the Government. Keeping this in mind, we intend to follow the progress of the legislation the government intends to submit to the Senate.

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I listened very carefully to the leader's list of legislation that it is hoped will be dealt with by the end of June, but I did not hear him make any reference to Bill C-150, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. Surely, that has some importance respecting the clarification of this government's position prior to the summer recess.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that bill is certainly on the list, but I did not get to it. There is also Bill C-153, to amend the Financial Administration Act (Crown Corporations), as well as Bill C-154, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act (No. 2), and so on. It certainly was not left off the list, but my problem was to lay all of this legislation before the opposition. Senator Roblin made the point the other day that he wants us to give a realistic list of the bills we expect and really have to pass, and not that we hope to pass. Bill C-150 certainly is on the list.

In reply to Senator Asselin, may I say that I was pleased to hear a number of spokesmen for the opposition indicate that we should intensify the use of the so-called prestudy procedure, and we have already begun that, so they will not find themselves in the position at the very end with a large number of bills to deal with. We will certainly try to make use of that procedure, to the greatest extent possible, between now and the appropriate date in June.

• (1450)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government with respect to Bill C-156, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3). Am I right in presuming that he stated that this would be coming to us late in the evening on Thursday? I ask that question for clarification because the provisions of that bill are far-reaching. It has to do with fishermen's eligibility as per the recommendations of the Kirby report. It also applies to veterans who have adoptive children and professionals under contract, and affects maternity benefits. If we receive that bill on Thursday, does the leader really think that one day—namely, Friday—is enough to pass the bill through all stages?

Senator Olson: We could sit on Thursday evening and refer the matter to committee, were there agreement that that would be the major or, indeed, the sole purpose for sitting that evening. In case Senator Marshall does not know, that bill has been referred to committee for prestudy, and I believe that the committee has already had at least one meeting on the matter.

Motion agreed to.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

MEXICAN PARLIAMENTARIANS ACCOMPANIED BY AMBASSADOR OF MEXICO

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the South Gallery of a parliamentary delegation from Mexico which is here at the invitation of Canada, and which is accompanied by His Excellency the Ambassador of Mexico to Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifteenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which was presented on Thursday, May 12, 1983.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, this report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments is concerned with purported proclamations under the Indian Act. The Indian Act has two provisions with which we are concerned today. One is that any individual who is the child of a marriage after 1951, and whose mother was a non-Indian and whose father's mother was a non-Indian, loses his or her Indian status at the age of 21. The second provision in the Indian Act is one which I think most people are familiar with because it has received wider publicity, and it is that if an Indian woman marries a non-Indian she immediately loses her Indian status and, furthermore, her children do not receive Indian status. These provisions, particularly the second, have been widely criticized as being discriminatory.

The government has made an effort to remove part of the discrimination by using a provision in the Indian Act. It is described in the report as follows:

> The proclamations under Report are issued in reliance on Section 4(2) of the Indian Act which provides that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, declare that the Act or any portion thereof, except Sections 37 to 41, shall not apply to any Indians or any group or band of Indians.

What the government has done is permit local option. It has said that if any Indian band decides it wants either one of those discriminatory provisions revoked, it can petition the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the minister will issue a proclamation. The minister believes—and he has some legal opinion to this effect—that he has the power to do this. As we have said in our report, we do not believe that the minister has this power, although we are not quarrelling with what is behind his actions in attempting to remove this discrimination. In the last paragraph of our report, we say:

> While in full agreement with the need to remove the discriminatory features of the Act, your Committee cannot accept the attempt to do so by means of subordinate law rather than by direct legislative enactment. Your Committee considers that the proclamations under Report infringe on Parliament's sole and undoubted prerogative to make or amend the statute law.

In other words, if they want the law changed, it should be done by Parliament and not by proclamation. I should point out that the Indians themselves do not believe the act should be amended.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Especially the men.

Senator Godfrey: Particularly the men.

Although the minister has chosen, in effect, this local option to permit any band who so wishes to amend these provisions, it would probably not have met with the agreement of Parliament if he had introduced legislation. Many people believe that these provisions should be eliminated completely and that this option should not be left to the local Indian bands. This is shown by the fact that of 600 Indian bands in Canada, only 41 have exercised the option to remove the discrimination against an Indian woman who marries a non-Indian. Of the 600 bands, 105 have opted out of the double motherhood clause and it is quite obvious from that number that that option is more popular, because usually it is an Indian man whose mother is a non-Indian who sees the prospect, because he is married to a non-Indian, that his children who will be brought up on the reserve will cease to be Indians at the age of 21. So, out of 600 bands, these options have only been exercised by a total of 146 of them. I suggest that this is not a very satisfactory solution to matters that most people consider highly discriminatory.

I want to emphasize that the committee is not taking exception to the merits of the question. It is only saying that if the act needs to be amended then it should be amended by Parliament, and not by trying to do it in some way which we consider ultra vires.

We had correspondence with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Honourable John Munro, in which we informed him that in our opinion this procedure is ultra vires. He replied that his department had an opinion from the Department of Justice to the effect that it was all right. We then asked for the reasons, and indicated that we did not want to hide behind an opinion which we had not seen. We finally insisted that he appear before the committee. In his evidence before the committee on March 24, Mr. Munro stated:

> Now, the doctrine of ministerial responsibility as I know it—and I think we would all agree—is: If legal opinion is challenged, if somehow I have not been using Section 4(2) appropriately, then it is the Minister of Justice who should be challenged and held politically accountable for opinions given by law officers of the Department of Justice, for which he is accountable to people in public life such as people here on this committee.

He reiterated that statement two or three times before the committee. However, he also gave the reasons for the opinion, and since he did not stand firm on the opinion, we have not included any reference to his comments in our report.

I am bringing this matter up because the committee issued a report in January 1977, in which we dealt with this subject. We had had difficulties during 1976 with various departments, and particularly with the Deputy Minister of Justice under whose authority they were acting, saying, "All we will say is that we have a legal opinion. We will not give any reasons; we will not back up the opinion in any way." We were not asking to look at the opinion. We simply pointed out that any other lawyer in acting for a client and giving an opinion, would, if that opinion were challenged, give reasons.

● (1500)

Mr. Basford then appeared before the committee with his deputy minister and, in effect, overruled his deputy minister. We received a letter from Mr. Basford, which appears in the committee's second report presented in the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament. I want to read part of paragraph 80 of that report, quoting from Mr. Basford's letter:

> I have proposed that departments and agencies nominate a senior official, perhaps at the deputy-minister level, to whom requests for explanations concerning statutory instruments would be directed. This official would then provide the requested explanations having regard to the department's policy and legal position. Naturally, in many cases there will be consultation between the department concerned and the Department of Justice. It must, however, be understood that the explanations provided, including any explanation as to the legality of the instrument, would be the sole responsibility of the responding department and that legal advice given to those departments by the Department of Justice will not be disclosed. It is my hope that this system will provide for responses that will allow the Committee to perform its important function, while preserving the confidentiality of lawyer-client communications. This proposal has now been approved by my colleagues—> —and steps are being taken to have it implemented in the very near future.

Meaning the cabinet.

I must say that until Mr. Munro appeared before the committee we had had no problems with the various departments. They did not hide behind a legal opinion; they did not say that it was up to the Minister of Justice. They gave their reasons and we, having heard their reasons, could make up our own minds as to whether a matter was ultra vires or not.

As I say, Mr. Munro did appear before the committee and actually gave his reasons when we pressed him, but I want to put it on the record that the position he took before the committee is contrary to the position approved by cabinet back in 1977.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, April 26, 1983 consideration of the Fifth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline entitled: "Marching to the Beat of the Same Drum: Transportation of Petroleum and Natural Gas North of 60°", which was tabled on March 30, 1983.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have the pleasure of speaking to you today on certain aspects of the work of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline. The special committee was presented with a challenging task, namely, to examine, consider and report on the transportation of petroleum and natural gas in Canada north of the 60th parallel of latitude and any matter related thereto. My remarks will be directed specifically to the question of transportation; other members of the special committee will speak to the social, economic, regulatory and other concerns attending hydrocarbon development in Canada's northern frontier.

In the decade since the Arab oil-exporting countries delivered their potent object lesson on the strategic significance of petroleum, most nations have been striving to make themselves less vulnerable to shocks in the energy arena. World oil production has fallen sharply from its peak in 1979, and last year stood at its lowest level since 1972. OPEC's share of world oil production has fallen from a high 55 per cent in 1973 to a less dominating 35 per cent in 1982.

Nonetheless, oil remains the single most important element of Canada's energy mix. Internationally, oil replaced coal in the post-war period as the energy commodity in greatest demand and there are good reasons for this rise to prominence, not the least being its formerly low cost. Oil is also comparatively easy, inexpensive and safe to transport and store. Its high energy density and liquid form makes it particularly suitable for fueling the transportation sector, and its complex hydrocarbon chemistry allows it to be tailored in the refining process to meet a broad and demanding range of specifications for end uses. Displacing such a desirable commodity from our energy system, even at today's higher prices, will not be easy. Moreover, the complex energy system of modern industrial nations represents a massive investment in capital, in materiel, in time and also in manpower, an investment whose character can only slowly alter with time.

We can anticipate, therefore, that petroleum will remain an important part of Canada's energy system for many years to come. Consequently, the government has made domestic self-sufficiency in oil a major goal of its energy policy and Canada's frontier petroleum resources are considered a key element in achieving this. With this backdrop to its study, the special committee examined the question of transporting crude oil and natural gas from northern Canada.

The Canadian North is an unforgiving environment in the sense that mistakes—whether they take the form of an oil spill in cold Arctic waters or social problems caused by inappropriate development—cannot be easily rectified. Given this reality and given the uncertainty faced today in world petroleum markets, it is understandable that many of the witnesses who appeared before the special committee foresaw a gradual or phased development of northern hydrocarbon resources. While this may appear to some to be a tentative approach to exploiting an essential resource, the special committee considers it appropriate in light of the uncertainties surrounding petroleum development north of the 60th parallel.

Many considerations are involved in selecting a transportation system. Project economics, markets, questions of safety and reliability, and the need for environmental protection are determining factors. The location and extent of reserves is also central to the decision. In turn, the choice of transportation system affects the timing and rate of delivery of hydrocarbons to southern markets.

There are two basic and not necessarily exclusive approaches to moving crude oil and natural gas in northern regions—marine transport via tankers, or potentially even in submarines, and pipeline transport. Each approach presents advantages and disadvantages; each has its adherents and detractors. Based on the evidence that we have received it appears that either tankers or pipelines, or a combination of the two, are technically feasible and environmentally acceptable for carrying hydrocarbons to market. Under appropriate circumstances, both systems are economically viable.

In the latter part of this decade, oil production could be under way in the Mackenzie Delta-Beaufort Sea region, as could gas production in the Arctic Islands if the Arctic Pilot Project application is successfully reactivated.

• (1510)

Looking at oil production first in the Delta-Beaufort area, a marine-based transportation system would require a lower reserves threshold because the number and size of the tankers employed can be matched to the delivery rate. Dome Petroleum estimates that a reserves threshold of 700 million barrels of oil, coupled with two tankers supporting a production rate of 100,000 barrels per day, is a feasible beginning to oil production. On the other hand, Dome contends that 2.5 billion barrels of oil reserves and a production rate of 350,000 barrels per day are necessary to sustain the economics of a large-diameter pipeline transportation system.

Esso Resources Canada has described a development plan which foresees oil production beginning in 1989, and building up to 400,000 barrels a day by the year 2000, based on a large-diameter pipeline system. Alternatively, Esso proposes a demonstration oil pipeline matching the capacity of and joining with the Norman Wells pipeline, thereby allowing an earlier and more modest start to production.

Gulf Canada Resources does not see output reaching 300,000 barrels a day before the mid-1990s, possibly using a marine system.

The Joint Environmental Impact Statement, which these three companies have prepared for the Beaufort Sea region, includes both the tanker and pipeline options and allows for the probable requirement to commence oil output on a limited scale, utilizing either a smaller version of an ice-breaking tanker or a small-diameter pipeline connecting to the Norman Wells system, as I mentioned before. If marine transport is selected, tanker movement eastward through the Northwest Passage is the preferred route.

For Arctic Islands hydrocarbon development, the Arctic Pilot Project foresees liquefied natural gas or LNG carriers transporting gas from Melville Island also eastward through the Northwest Passage to a terminal in eastern Canada. Two ice-breaking tankers making 16 trips apiece per year could handle production, and the carriers would be capable of entering United States ports on the eastern seaboard as well as an eastern Canadian terminal. Proven reserves of natural gas already exceed the threshold level required for tanker operation, and this mode provides more flexibility than a pipeline in accommodating production levels and delivery points. Ship transport would also allow European markets to be served in this particular manner.

A novel option for the marine transport of gas at a later stage, either from the Beaufort Sea or from the Arctic Islands, is the use of submarines carrying liquefied natural gas. This approach visualizes the design of a submarine, using either nuclear or conventional propulsion, much larger in size than the biggest military submarines of today. Requirements for a safe operating depth and manoeuverability of this huge vessel impose some constraints on the location of sub-sea loading systems and on the transportation route in shallow Arctic seas. The principal attraction of this transportation option is its lack of surface disruption, but the special committee considers that this technology requires further investigation before its feasibility can be adequately assessed.

Returning to the general question of transport, the problems to be encountered in pipelining are better known because there is the experience of the trans-Alaska pipeline system to draw upon. Marine transport of hydrocarbons through Arctic seas is a new venture, calling for a new class of ice-breaking tanker and its safe operation in a hostile environment. Severe and variable ice and climatic conditions, 24-hour darkness during part of the year and a fragile environment clearly set the Arctic apart from conventional tanker operations.

Both transportation options allow year-round production. At a high rate of throughput, a large-diameter pipeline is more economical than a tanker system, but the high cost makes financing difficult and the uncertainties loom larger. The special committee has concluded that a more flexible system adaptable to lower reserve levels and uncertain market conditions appears to be the prudent approach at this time. Starting with tanker transport seems most logical in this set of circumstances.

There are important associated benefits arising from the marine transport of hydrocarbons. The special committee considers it most desirable that Canada remain in the forefront of cold-ocean technology and, at the same time, that our domestic shipbuilding industry be revitalized. This very important factor has been considered by the committee and should be discussed more fully when the opportunity arises. Tanker transport would provide the vehicle for developing a new capability in Arctic class, ice-breaking ships.

Beyond these technical advantages, marine transport allows development to be phased in such a way that employment and business opportunities are extended, industrial activity is drawn out in time and is therefore less inflationary, and northern communities can adapt to growth in a more measured fashion.

Because the committee saw tanker transport in this light, it made the following recommendation:

> That transport of hydrocarbons from the Arctic region commence by tanker on a small scale and that consideration be given to various combinations of tanker and/or pipeline systems as other factors warrant.

Having said this, the committee recognizes that year-round marine transport of hydrocarbons through Arctic waters requires major advances in navigation, ship safety, ice-breaking, search and rescue, ice-monitoring, weather forecasting, hydrography, communications and measures to handle oil spills, which is very important. At least half a dozen government departments are involved in these activities, and the special committee stresses that action must be taken quickly in each of them to assure safe and reliable transit of tankers on a year-round basis.

[Senator Guay.]

In this regard the special committee has recommended:

> That all support systems relating to such marine services as ice monitoring, weather forecasting, navigation, search and rescue, and marine escort which are necessary to ensure the reliability and the safety of production and transportation systems be in place before production commences.

While the special committee has made other recommendations which pertain to the transportation of hydrocarbons, taken together, they support our view that the production and transport of hydrocarbons in the Canadian North is both feasible and desirable, provided that the necessary precautions are taken and planning is done well in advance.

● (1520)

[Translation]

I should like to add that Senator Hastings who chaired our committee should be congratulated for the high quality of his performance within our committee, something for which I, for one, thank him.

[English]

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Several weeks ago I was a member of the Canadian delegation to the Canadian-European parliamentary meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland. The Arctic Pilot Project was one of the items discussed. At that time Greenland made a very strong objection to the whole process. So strong was their objection that a report on it was prepared by one of the Belgian members of the European Parliament.

The nub of their objection seemed to be the noise of the propellers of these ships and how that would affect the whales and their whole fishing industry. They claim that the livelihood of the people of Greenland is at stake. In the report there seems to be no mention of the noise problem or the objection of Greenland. Did the committee consider that question? If so, what did it decide to do about it?

Senator Guay: I cannot speak for the chairman, but I know that the committee did take that problem and objection into consideration. The committee is aware of the problem the project presents to Greenland and other places in the north such as Pond Inlet. The committee was made aware of the noise pollution problem caused by the propelling systems of these ships.

All of those matters were taken into consideration by the committee when it made its report. I am sure that the chairman of the committee could certainly give you a far more detailed explanation, but I can tell you that although we considered those matters we did not find it necessary to include them in this particular report. However, with respect to whether or not there is really a problem in that respect, I can say that the committee has not completed its work, and we will make sure that we take that particular matter into further consideration at future meetings of the committee.

On motion of Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TEMPORARY ENLISTMENT OF YOUNG CANADIANS IN ARMED FORCES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on April 28 with respect to the Canadian Forces youth training and employment program. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

This program will provide full-time training and employment for approximately 5,000 Canadian youths for approximately one year. The program will be conducted in three phases: a recruit training phase of 10 weeks; a trades training phase of three to six months, depending on the trade; and an employment phase for the balance of the term.

The training will be conducted at Canadian Forces schools already established for training. Specifically, the recruit training phase will be conducted at Canadian Forces Bases (CFBs) Cornwallis, Saint-Jean Valcartier, Petawawa, Shilo and Calgary (Wainwright); and the trades training at CFBs Valcartier, Petawawa, Shilo, Calgary, Halifax, Kingston, Borden and Chilliwack. During the employment phase, most Canadian Forces bases and stations will receive some candidates to augment their particular programs.

Although we do not intend to be rigid with regard to specific quotas, we have identified targets for the four regions of Canada. Our plans call for targets of 17 per cent for the Atlantic Provinces, 27 per cent for Quebec, 31 per cent for Ontario and 24 per cent for the West.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN PEACE INITIATIVES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Macquarrie on May 10 concerning discussions of Canadian diplomats with Syria and the PLO with regard to the Reagan peace plan for the Middle East. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

We are not, of course, a central player in the Middle East and the influence we can bring to bear in trying to reach an accommodation is necessarily limited. Nevertheless, Canada welcomed the Reagan initiative of September 1, 1982, and we have made this position known publicly through government statements and in our discussions with others. Canadian officials who have had contact with the Syrians, both in Damascus and Ottawa, have communicated our point of view on the Reagan initiative and the conflict in general. As to the PLO, officials below the level of ambassador have had contacts with representatives of the PLO in a number of capitals in the Middle East on a broad range of issues, including the Reagan plan. Canada is not, however, involved in any negotiations.

THE BUDGET, 1983

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to questions asked by Senator Flynn on April 20 and May 12 concerning the explanation of the Minister of Finance for the addition of $200 million to the Special Recovery Program described in the April 19 budget. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

On April 19, the Minister of Finance stated:

As most Canadians are now aware, I received a group of photographers in my office yesterday as part of a pre-budget "photo opportunity" session. A copy of the proposed budget speech was on my desk. I held it up and rapidly turned the pages. A cameraman was standing behind me and, unknown to me, photographed several pages of the proposed speech. The cameraman was thereby able to obtain some information about the contents of the proposed budget. This was clearly contrary to the spirit of this "photo opportunity" session, but the fact remains that the event occurred.

Traditionally, a budget leak involves premature disclosure of a tax matter. Fortunately this is not the case. However, in some quarters any matter or fact connected with the budget might be considered to be of this character. To remove any doubt, I have decided to change the portion of the budget which would otherwise have been prematurely in the public domain.

I have decided to increase the Special Recovery Program to $4.8 billion. This additional $200 million will be added to the Special Recovery Capital Projects, details of which I will give in a moment. The monies will be set aside as a special fund to be spent on projects akin to those already contemplated in the Special Recovery Capital Projects.

As a result of this action, the deficit and financial requirements of the Government for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 will be increased $100 million, $50 million and $50 million, respectively. Other appropriate adjustments should be made in reading the printed material distributed tonight. This will no doubt cause some confusion, since the printed material distributed across the country and in the House is no longer accurate. For this, I apologize.

There is some irony in all of this. During the past week, I have debated with myself and with my advisors about the precise nature the budget measures should take. My concern has been that in my desire to be fiscally responsible, I would not provide enough stimulus for the economy to secure the recovery and generate employment. Obviously, this is a matter of delicate judgement and there is no absolutely correct answer. Be that as it may, the events of the past 24 hours have led me to follow what my instincts have been urging me to do all along. If I err in this budget, I want to do it on the side of more jobs.

The following day in response to a question from the Opposition, the Minister of Finance stated:

Madam Speaker, I indicated yesterday that the additional $200 million will be provided for special recovery capital projects. This will be spent on projects that will be of benefit to the Canadian economy. This represents projects taking place all across the country that are on the books of the Departments for future years. We are advancing those projects. These projects will mean more employment for Canadians. This will mean fewer people unemployed. The money will be used to employ Canadians who are unemployed at the present time in various regions of the country.

The use of that money will be announced in the next few days and weeks. I invite my hon. friend to wait for the statements to be made by various Ministers in that regard. She will find that there are very worth-while projects to be undertaken that will significantly help those Canadians who are unemployed. Among them I hope there will be quite a number of young people.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT NOMINEE TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 103 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

With regard to the conditions of a loan guarantee given by the Government on behalf of Maislin Bros. Limited, (i) has the condition of the election to the board of directors of a nominee of the Crown been fulfilled and who is the nominee (ii) has Maislin submitted a satisfactory loan offer from the lender and on what date was it submitted (iii) what loan disbursement was started on November 30, 1982?

Reply by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion:

Insofar as the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion are concerned:

The following response is for Maislin Industries Limited, NOT Maislin Bros. Limited:

(i) The Crown has not yet identified a suitable candidate to represent it on the company's Board of Directors.

(ii) The company submitted a loan offer from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce dated August 20, 1982.

(iii) November 30, 1982 was the date on which, having completed all of the legal documents, the government issued its Insurance Agreement to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, thereby permitting the bank to commence disbursement of the new $15 million (U.S.) working capital loan.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE SEEKING FURTHER INSTRUCTION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill S-32, to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act, which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. Joan Neiman moved the adoption of the report.

She said: Honourable senators, earlier this day I tabled a report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs with respect to Bill S-32 which, in effect, recommended to this house that it instruct the committee to consider some further amendments that had been moved before the committee. The reason I have done so is that there is a citation in Beauchesne, citation 761, with respect to the extension of the objects of a bill which is before a committee. It states:

An Instruction is necessary to authorize the introduction into a bill of amendments, which extend its provisions to objects not strictly covered by the subject-matter of the bill as agreed to on the second reading, provided that these objects are cognate to its general purposes.

Honourable senators will recall that the Senate approved second reading of Bill S-32, which, in effect, dealt with certain areas of administration of mandatory supervision under the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act. The effect of those amendments would simply be the revocation of mandatory supervision for any inmate who committed another offence and would make that revocation, in effect, irrevocable so that such inmate would not have a second chance.

The committee has studied, in great detail, the proposals contained in the bill, and I think it would be fair to say that, by and large, both the house and the committee approved the principle of the bill, which had the effect of trying to remove or mitigate what is known as the revolving door syndrome within the corrections system.

During the course of the hearings we heard from a great number of witnesses who were really not happy with the present administration of mandatory supervision. Most of them had other suggestions with respect to how this particular problem might be better addressed. They felt that to a great extent we were not dealing with the problem inherent in these provisions with respect to mandatory supervision, namely, the problem of finding some method of detaining, beyond the time when an inmate would otherwise be entitled to be released on mandatory supervision because of good behaviour, those inmates who the penitentiary officials, or the corrections officials, or the Parole Board, in general, felt were potentially dangerous. We received that message from a number of witnesses, most notably the Attorney General of British Columbia, who appeared before our committee.

I conveyed the essence of these findings to the Solicitor General and we had a number of discussions and meetings on the matter. You will also be aware that, concurrently with our hearing, the National Parole Board had put into operation an innovation known as "gating," by which means it arbitrarily returned to prison those just released inmates it considered potentially dangerous, even though they had been released under mandatory supervision.

The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that that procedure of the Parole Board was illegal because there was no provision for it in the Penitentiary Act or the Parole Act, and that the Parole Board was thus acting outside the purview of those acts.

On the day the Supreme Court of Canada so found, the Solicitor General placed before the committee further proposed amendments to the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act which he felt would deal with this very problem. It was hoped that, if we accepted them as amendments to those acts, they would be considered legal and proper and meet the concerns of the public, who felt that we should find some means of detaining potential dangerous offenders to the end of their sentence.

• (1530)

The committee has had hours of discussion on this, because we wanted to ensure that we could properly introduce these further amendments to Bill S-32. As a result of a very long meeting we had yesterday it was decided that the amendments were within the scope of the bill, but perhaps extended it to a point where we were not entirely confident that they could be considered within the subject matter itself. There is a delicate and indefinite line of distinction, apparently, between those two areas in a bill.

The committee therefore instructed me to come back to the house on a matter of procedure, simply to ask the house to empower the committee to consider these further proposed amendments, since in fact we have already considered the problem they propose to address because of testimony put before us by witnesses and, indeed, during our own discussions with the minister and departmental officials.

My report to you today, honourable senators, is really to ask for your instructions to the committee on a procedural point. I emphasize that we are not dealing with the substance of the amendments, which, of course, must be debated, not only in our committee once they are properly before us but again before this house if the committee decides to approve them as they are or in some further amended form.

I stress that this request made to the Senate is on a procedural matter only, and the Senate will have the authority and opportunity to deal with the matter in a substantive way at a later date when the committee reports, which I hope will be within the next week or so.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 31, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 31, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

STATEMENT TABLED PURSUANT TO RULE 112

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that in conformity with rule 112, the Clerk of the Senate has laid on the Table a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1982-83.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

That the Clerk's Accounts be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

SALARIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-160, to amend the Salaries Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Report of the Auditor General of Canada on the Follow-up of the 1980 Comprehensive Audit of the House of Commons.

Document entitled "Information Technology: A Call for a National Dialogue on the Emerging Information Society", dated March 1983.

Report entitled "International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination", dated December 1982, issued by the Secretary of State.

Report entitled "International Convenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights", dated December 1982, issued by the Secretary of State.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask my honourable friend a question? As I listened to the tabling of the documents, it struck me that they were not the usual documents we expect in terms of reports and matters of that sort. It seemed to me that they were not related to anything in particular. What reason has he to advance for tabling these particular documents and could he, perhaps, tells us their provenance?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is quite correct; these are not reports that are required to be tabled by statute, if I may put it that way, but are, indeed, reports and policy statements that have been issued by those whom I have identified. I believe they contain information all senators would like to have. By going through the process of tabling, it follows that copies will be sent to each senator's office.

Senator Roblin: I wonder whether my honourable friend intends to table this evening the communiqué or other statement of the Government of Canada with respect to the summit meeting held in Williamsburg last week.

Senator Olson: No, honourable senators, I do not have that communiqué or other report, as my honourable friend described it, with me this evening, but I will try to obtain one so that it can be tabled in this house. I know that there is in existence a communiqué that was issued following the conference in Williamsburg. There may also be further comments made by either the Prime Minister or one or more of the other ministers who attended that conference. If that is the case, I will also try to obtain copies of those statements to table in this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I should like to warn my honourable friend that he need not be surprised if I ask him a few questions on this topic in Question Period.

Senator Olson: Indeed, honourable senators, I expect that. I hope that I am fully prepared and equipped to answer any questions that my honourable friend might raise, but I am not entirely sure that I will be.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am aware that this question was raised last week by Senator Asselin, but I will ask it again. Why did the Leader of the Government not table a green paper on Senate reform?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not believe that the green paper on Senate reform has yet been issued to either house of Parliament or to the public. What I said last week was that there was an indication that such a paper was in some state of preparation.

Senator Marshall: In order to help honourable senators find out what is going on in this world, it seems to me that, if the preparation of a green paper is advertised, then that paper ought to be given to all honourable senators so that we can contribute something rather than be left in the dark.

Senator Olson: Perhaps my friend is misinterpreting the reply that I have already given.

Senator Marshall: I am not misinterpreting anything.

Senator Olson: There is no intention of keeping honourable senators in the dark. Indeed, I believe that a number of—perhaps most—honourable senators have expressed some views with respect to Senate reform through various organizations. I would not like to imply—and I do not think my honourable friend would either—that there are any senators left in the dark with respect to this matter.

It was indicated that there are a number of questions which should be taken into consideration by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Senate Reform and that a green paper indicating the parameters of those questions was in a state of preparation.

[Translation]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with the leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, June 2, 1983 at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. For some time now there has been a growing dispute between the unions responsible for the grain handlers on the west coast and the shipping companies. It seems that this dispute is becoming more serious. In fact, lately there has been some talk of a possible strike or lock-out situation.

I wonder if the minister has any information on this matter or whether he could tell us of any steps the government might be considering to put an end to this dispute before it gets too serious.

● (2010)

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators Association and the Grain Workers' Union, Local 333, have been meeting today. At this time I do not have a report on the results of the meeting; they may still be going on. In any event, they have agreed to meet and have been meeting today. The union has been in a legal position to strike since May 26. A lock-out is also a legal weapon that could be used by the operators. However, there is no indication that a lock-out or strike is imminent: talks are continuing; the workers are on the job and are prepared and are continuing to work overtime.

I might say that the output through Vancouver has been really quite outstanding this year, in spite of the difficulties on the west coast earlier in the year. The shipments out of the west coast are about 3 per cent less than last year, but if all the ports are taken together the shipments are about 17 per cent higher than they were last year.

Labour Canada is ready to resume mediation upon request of the two parties. I think we are fortunate that the Grain Workers' local is led by Henry Kangs, who, in my judgment, is a very responsible labour leader. I believe that the parties should be able to work out their differences on their own.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETING, WILLIAMSBURG, VA., U.S.A.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to question the Leader of the Government, if I may, about the proceedings in Williamsburg over the weekend, when the leaders of the seven leading western industrial nations discussed economic policy and other matters.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government would be able to comment on the policies that were presented to that meeting by the Government of Canada, and make a statement on the fate they met when this conference discussed them. I understand that he cannot give a detailed statement, because many of the meetings were held in private among the main participants. However, there are certain thrusts of policy that the government was supporting, and I wonder if he would make a statement on the subject.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Roblin indicated a few minutes ago that he would be asking a question of this kind. I would like to make a statement in this chamber after the Canadian participants—namely, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Finance—have returned to Canada and have made a statement, probably in the other chamber.

In any event, I will take the question and refer it to all three ministers, and tell them that there is some interest in Canada's position, particularly in what has been described as the main thrust of a number of items that were before that conference. Hopefully, within a short time, perhaps by the next sitting of the Senate, we will have that kind of statement on Canada's position, and not only with respect to the main thrust of the agenda items, because one or two items that were at least reported in the press and that were not necessarily on the agenda were also discussed, and there was some consensus expressed at the completion of the conference.

Senator Roblin: I thank the Leader of the Government for his reply. I must say I am disappointed that we do not have a copy of the communiqué before us in this house tonight. It would have been advantageous to discuss the matter when it was relatively new. If the Leader of the Government cannot reply further, I would just ask him to keep in mind that policies that were considered were with respect to inflation, interest rates and national deficits. I think we would require further elucidation of such policies of the Government of Canada, and information on the degree of consensus reached and what consensus means, at least in the mind of the Prime Minister. Perhaps he cannot speak for the others, but he will at least have an idea of what the consensus meant. I am sure that is one of the important aspects of this matter, namely, we try to understand what really was agreed to, what really went on. It is that line of questioning that I would like to pursue. Therefore, I give the minister this notice, and I hope it may help him in framing his replies to questions when we have another opportunity.

• (2015)

In addition to the economic matters that were discussed, the question of defence and certain matters with respect to nuclear armament and disarmament were perhaps piggybacked into the meeting by the President of the United States, but it appears that it resulted in a significant meeting of minds. Again on that topic I would like to know as precisely as possible what we think was actually agreed to, and what we believe the consensus involves.

So I would ask the minister to take those matters into account, because it is questions along those lines as well as others that I wish to pursue with him at an early date.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin has put the communiqué and the subsequent questions that he may wish to ask in their proper perspective, because from the vantage point of press reports and other comments that were made at the conclusion of the meeting, I believe it is fair to say that some discussions took place and that some conclusions were reached in the meetings of the leaders that were not fully anticipated before the meeting started. Therefore, it becomes extremely important, when he frames his questions, to inquire not only as to what is in the communiqué but as to an interpretation of what it says and also as to what it means for Canadians. I suggest that is an accurate way of putting it, because I am sure there are some conclusions, however they are interpreted, and there may be some variation of that which came out of the meeting but which was not fully anticipated either before or during the initial stages. Therefore, I appreciate the way the question was put and I will endeavour to have a reply, concerning how the Canadian representatives interpreted all of those developments, by the next sitting, which I believe will be on Thursday.

[Senator Olson.]

TRANSPORT

MANITOBA—CHURCHILL—GRAIN SHIPMENTS

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. When replying to a question earlier he said that taking all the ports together, delivery was 10 per cent above last year. I am sure the minister was not referring to the Port of Churchill, or did not take that port into consideration in making his statement.

My question concerns the Port of Churchill because I know that the port is not yet open—or, if it is, that would be something unusual. I would ask the minister whether any repairs or maintenance have been done, such as dredging, to make the port more usable than it has been in the past. Notwithstanding the fact that last year we had a successful year, I am sure the minister is aware that we in Manitoba would like to see more grain deliveries out of Churchill. Perhaps he could enlighten us in that respect.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, if I recollect correctly, the Wheat Board's program last year was 557,000 tonnes, which was a fairly good year. In my view, the board is to be commended for the use it is able to make of Churchill. It is correct to say that if the port is to be fully efficient and if the environmental standards at the terminal are to be reached, then work has to be done to improve the environment, with the use of dust-removal equipment. It is estimated that to bring the port to full efficiency would entail an investment of up to $35 million. As I understand it, it would cost an additional $15 million to bring the railway up to a standard where it could handle the 3,000-bushel hopper cars.

• (2020)

The position of the Department of Transport has been that if consideration is to be given to such an expenditure there should be an indication of the use that is likely to be made of the Port of Churchill in the years ahead. The Canadian Wheat Board is reluctant to give a firm guarantee that, come what may, a certain target quantity of grain will go through the port and the advisory committee supports the board in that proposition.

I have said before that the Port of Churchill is good for Canada. The Port of Churchill should be supported and I have asked that some target figures be put forward, without providing an ironclad guarantee, on the estimated use of the port in the future. I say that because if there were a crop failure, for example, from heavy frosts, in the areas from which the grain through the port is drawn, it would be very difficult to meet an absolute guarantee. However, I think it is reasonable to say that the Department of Transport is justified in suggesting that there should be some indication of the use that can be made of Churchill in the years to come so that it will have such information before it makes a commitment to these expenditures.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, last spring, the minister brought to my attention the fact that the track on the Churchill line was not fit for the big hopper cars and that wooden box cars were used in many instances to deliver the grain to Churchill. My question is: Under the proposed program on the Crow is any consideration being given to improving the track to the Port of Churchill so that more grain can be moved during the navigation season which, in the end, will benefit the western provinces because of the cheaper rate for moving the grain the shorter distance to the Port of Churchill? Is any consideration being given to such a program?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I do not believe the Port of Churchill is suffering from any lack of box cars or hoppers cars for the movement to that port of the maximum amount of grain possible. The governing factor, aside from the facilities of the port, is the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to obtain sales for export of grain through that port. The government's transportation initiative which, as we all know, envisages the expenditure of some $3.7 billion in the years ahead, does not address the improvement of the railway under the currently announced program. But the department, as I have said, going back to my initial response, is asking for an indication of the probable use to be made of the Port of Churchill in the future. Having been given a certain target, the government would be in a position to assess the use that might be made of Churchill and the expenditures that could be provided.

● (2025)

Certainly, Churchill can be used, and will be used in the foreseeable future, but in order to put the port to its optimum use it may be necessary to make the expenditures I have referred to, and the department is considering doing so.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, this will be my last supplementary. If memory serves me correctly, even though there were considerable shipments through Churchill last year, they had to be made in old wooden cars because the hopper cars were too heavy for the tracks. Because of that problem there were definite restrictions on the movement of grain through Churchill, and some consideration ought to be given to improving the condition of the track to the north, failing which we will be in serious trouble there in a few years. Certainly, it will be impossible to continue delivering these amounts of grain to Churchill without effecting some major improvements to the present track.

Last year I agreed with you, Senator Argue, that there was this problem with the use of hopper cars. Bearing that in mind, would you, on my behalf and on behalf of the people of my province, see that some consideration is given not only to improving the Port of Churchill itself but to improving the track necessary for appropriate deliveries to the port, and possibly even greater deliveries in the future?

Senator Argue: I am pleased to receive the comments of Honourable Senator Guay, and I will draw his remarks to the attention of the appropriate officials.

Senator Guay: Thank you.

NOVA SCOTIA—HALIFAX—CONTAINER TRAFFIC VOLUME

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, we have just spent considerable time giving attention to Senator Guay's concern for the Port of Churchill. I will say at once that he has my complete sympathy. I trust that the considerations he has put forward will move the government to take the steps necessary to satisfy him. Although Senator Guay addressed his question to Senator Argue, I should like to address mine to Senator Olson. I rise to speak not from a concern about what is happening in the Port of Churchill but rather about what is happening in the Port of Halifax, Nova Scotia, one of the great ports of the world.

Throughout its history the Port of Halifax has been accustomed to handling substantial volumes of container traffic, but in recent years there has been a gradual lessening of that traffic—not that our facilities have been diminished. To the contrary, they have been increased. We now have two container ports in the city of Halifax. But of what use are container ports in Halifax, if the containers are all shipped up the St. Lawrence River?

Because of its concern about this matter, the government appointed a commission to investigate the future of the container service in the Port of Halifax. That commission has now rendered its report. Although it is interesting, it is nonetheless a distressing report, because, in effect, it says that while there may be some future for Halifax as a container port that future depends entirely upon the attitude of the Canadian National Railways towards the port. According to the commission's report, the Canadian National Railways have not fulfilled their obligations to the Port of Halifax, but rather have abused their monopoly—and they do have a monopoly over the rail freight movements into Halifax. The report argues that consideration should be given to opening the port to competition.

With those few remarks as a background to my question, honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if the government would be willing to consider either removing CN's monopoly or telling the crown corporation to increase its use of Halifax.

● (2030)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I appreciate the concern that Senator Donahoe has expressed in his interpretation of the recommendations on the commission's report. However, I do not think that we should argue the pros and cons of that report here in Question Period. I shall refer his question to the Minister of Transport for a reply.

[Translation]

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

QUEBEC—MAGDALEN ISLANDS—PLIGHT OF FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, interestingly, the two last questions were concerned with regional problems. I believe this is in line with the objectives described by the Deputy Leader of the Government this afternoon, when he appeared before a Senate Committee and said that it was the role of the Senate to protect regional interests. His message did not go unheeded, since this evening, he received a direct reaction to the suggestions he made to us this afternoon. I would not go so far as to agree with his claims that the Senate must be elective if it is to carry out his proposals. That was certainly not my intention. In turn, however, I would also like to speak about regional interests.

The people in the Magdalen Islands are currently suffering as a result of a silly disagreement between two levels of government, federal and provincial—a quarrel, in fact, between two Ministers. Four hundred fishermen are on the wharves, looking at fifteen fishing vessels that belong to a financial institution that has been seized by the provincial Government. The boats cannot go out to sea, because the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans refused to issue an operating permit. As a result, a quarrel between two federal and provincial Ministers is keeping 400 people from going out in their boats to earn a living. Because of the dispute, these people are out of work and must await a decision by the federal and provincial governments. We were even told this weekend that the federal Government was preparing to nationalize the fishing industry in Canada. For the time being, I think it is high time we stopped this bickering about matters that may be important to the Ministers, but in any case, the whole situation is endangering the future economy of the Magdalen Islands and its fishermen. I would like to know whether the Minister could ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to be more flexible and whether he could ask Minister Garon in the Quebec Government to show his good faith so that this problem can be settled as soon as possible. It is a regional problem. I think the Senate should be concerned about it. I would like to know whether the Minister would give me his word that between now and the next session of this House, he will come up with a solution to this serious problem on the Magdalen Islands.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Asselin that it is one of the highest duties and responsibilities of senators from a region to express the concerns of that region in this chamber, and I commend him for following in the footsteps of his two predecessors in fulfilling what I consider one of the highest priorities of this chamber.

He has referred to the disagreement between the federal minister and the provincial minister responsible with respect to the Magdalen Islands fishing fleet as being a petty argument. I do not know whether this is a true interpretation of the situation.

[Senator Olson.]

• (2035)

I know that the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has a deep and abiding interest in the well-being of the fishermen not only from those islands, but along the Gaspé coast and, indeed, all over Atlantic Canada, because that industry is in a difficult economic position at the present time.

That is not news; everyone knows that. Without going into an examination of the reasons for that, or indeed to agree that it is a petty argument or a more significant argument, I shall give my honourable friend an undertaking to refer his question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, whom I know will reinforce his already great desire to find a solution to the differences outstanding in the interests of the economic well-being of those fishermen.

[Translation]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to Senator Asselin's question. I am glad the Senator mentioned the fishermen on the Magdalen Islands, because I originally come from this magnificent region. I would like to ask the Minister whether he could provide this house with some clarification about the allegedly fundamental differences between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada.

The Senator referred to bickering, but I am not so sure about that. I would also appreciate it if the Leader of the Government, when he makes his enquiries, could find out and let us know whether Senator Asselin was correct in saying that there were fifteen ships and 400 fishermen. I understood that there were five or six ships and possibly 300 or 400 plant workers who were affected by the dispute.

Once again, I wish to thank Senator Asselin for raising the matter in this house, and I want to ask the Leader of the Government whether he could possibly obtain the additional information I requested.

[English]

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

DRUG MANUFACTURING—PROPOSED CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question of a regional nature. It has to do with the citizens who are living in low-income areas.

As I understand it, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has indicated that changes to the regulations are being proposed that allow low-cost generic drugs to be sold in drugstores. This change will cause undue hardship to those people on welfare, and will be of particular disadvantage to those people.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government can tell us that these changes will not take place, and that the minister is not going to rely on the lobbying of the multinational corporations to the effect that they should cut out the generic drugs, or at least part of them.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Marshall's question may be regional, but it is certainly not regional in geographic terms. I think it is a matter of national concern to people who do, in fact, have to spend a significant portion of their income on some of those medications, drugs, or whatever other name is attached to them.

I think he also made the argument on one side of that question that is before the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but I shall attempt to obtain an up-date as to how this is going. I understand that some representations are being made on both sides of that question and that the minister probably has those representations under consideration.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

CONSUMER PROTECTION—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, there has been speculation in the press that one of the large supermarket chains has been increasing its prices by 20 per cent. There have also been reports in today's newspaper that Air Canada and CP Air will be asking for further increases of 5 per cent to their fares.

Why are these things being allowed to happen when there are so many millions of people in Canada who are unemployed and who cannot afford to buy groceries, buy drugs, or to travel as families?

Is it not time that this chamber appointed a consumer protection committee under the umbrella of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science in order to look into some of this unfair disadvantage to the poor people of Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are always problems when prices change insofar as the supermarkets are concerned. I do not have any comment to make on that other than to the effect that a number of them claim, according to the press reports—and I am sure they are the same ones to which my honourable friend referred—that due to a price war that has been going on for some time, significant discounts have been given lower than the total cost of the service, taking into account a number of things, and there has been some indication that that price war may be coming to an end.

● (2040)

That is one thing, but I have to tell Senator Marshall frankly and honestly that we do not have in place in Canada—and probably it is undesirable—a system of price control that would by decree force these companies not to carry on these pricing practices while, at the same time, claiming they are losing money. I do not think that that is a particularly viable solution to what the press speculation has been up until now.

Senator Marshall: Is the Leader of the Government saying that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has no authority to investigate false advertising or price gouging?

Senator Olson: No, I am not saying that. Senator Marshall referred to a change or press speculation. Perhaps I took it for granted, and should not have, that what he was referring to was some recent press speculation that the severe price war that has been going on between a number of supermarket chains in this country may be coming to an end.

Senator Marshall: Can the Leader of the Government reconcile the facts that the particular supermarket in question is offering a 5 per cent discount on prices and, at the same time, raising prices by 20 per cent?

Senator Olson: An investigation along that line may have some value. I did not understand that that was what my honourable friend was suggesting in the first place.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—PRINCE MINE, CAPE BRETON ISLAND—REPORTED LOCK-OUT OF MINERS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, over the years in the other place I have raised questions of a regional nature as I have done in this house. There is an article in today's Chronicle-Herald reporting that the Cape Breton Development Corporation has more or less locked out roughly 500 coal miners at the Prince Mine in Cape Breton. The corporation closed the mine for an indefinite period last week—

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is definitely a regional problem.

Senator Muir: It is definitely a regional problem, as some people are very apt to refer to such matters in this chamber. The newspaper account states that they have closed the mine because of the fourth illegal walk-out in seven days. Coal miners are pretty responsible people. The corporation president described the action of the miners as "irresponsible" and also criticized the union leaders for their lack of responsibility.

On the other hand, the union contends that the corporation refused to respond to repeated concerns regarding mine safety. I would think it is somewhat more hazardous and dangerous working in coal mines than it is in Williamsburg or in either of the chambers on Parliament Hill.

Senior officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and representatives of the mine workers union were to meet this morning, and as the minister mentioned a few moments ago that he is well equipped to answer many questions this evening, perhaps he has an answer to this question. Have any new developments taken place so that the miners could return to work? There is no doubt that they certainly need the work.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the simple answer is that I do not have any new information that I could give Senator Muir this evening about that particular dispute. However, I can refer his question to the Ministry of Labour in order to see if they have any up-to-date information that I could bring to this chamber shortly. Experience has taught both him and me that it takes two to make a dispute. No doubt, there are some considerations. The newspaper report indicates that there are differing views, but we will try to get an analysis of the positions taken on both sides so that we can assess them.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. I thank the honourable gentleman for his response. It is a very profound statement that it takes two to make a dispute. I am really excited about that one because I am well aware of it.

Senator Olson: That has been said before.

Senator Muir: I understand that the United Mine Workers of America district executive sent a letter to the executive director of the Canadian Labour Relations Board asking that the corporation be ordered to end the lock-out. The union also wants the board to hold a hearing to deal with the charges made by the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Would the leader be good enough to go into that aspect of the situation as well? I realize that sometimes there are faults on both sides. Indeed, I have been involved in negotiations, in unions, in coal mines and so on. The company is not always right, whatever company it may be, whether it is an offspring of this government or a private corporation, and the union is not always right. The most important thing, and I am sure the minister will agree with me, is to get these men back to work under safe conditions.

Senator Olson: I will take the extension of the inquiry into account when I relay it to the Ministry of Labour.

[Later:]

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, if I may return to the previous questions I posed to the Leader of the Government, since we are not meeting until Thursday could he make inquiries tomorrow in order to ascertain if any progress is being made regarding the meetings that supposedly were held today, or are continuing to be held, and just how soon we can get an answer?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, an inquiry will go over to the minister's office as soon as it is open in the morning.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NORTH ATLANTIC SALMON AGREEMENT—RATIFICATION BY CANADA

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question, which consists of three parts, to the Leader of the Government.

First, could he tell us if the government proposes to ratify the Convention for the Conservation of Salmon in the North Atlantic Ocean? This treaty has been under consideration since the end of 1978 and deals with a very important renewable resource of this country. While other governments ratified the treaty some time ago, Canada refrained, at first possibly because of our differences with the United States over the fisheries treaty and, later, perhaps in the absence of an assurance from the European Economic Community that the Greenland salmon quota would be maintained this year and in the future.

Secondly, if the answer is in the affirmative if we are going to sign the treaty when may this ratification be expected to take place?

[Senator Olson.]

Thirdly, if it is not proposed to ratify the treaty, what reasons are given for that?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly will take that question as notice. I am sure that Senator Molson understands that I did not come prepared for that question this evening since I did not receive notice of it. The third part of the question is perhaps the most important one because those reasons obviously are behind the first and second parts of the question,—that is, as to whether the North Atlantic Salmon Agreement is to be ratified, and, if so, when. I think the reasons will probably indicate that, and I will try to get as complete an answer as possible.

• (2050)

TRANSPORT

PORTS OF SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK, AND ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, earlier this evening Senator Donahoe alluded to one of the great ports of the world. I should like to suggest to the Leader of the Government, when he does make inquiries of his colleague in the other place about port utilization, that he also consider one of the other great ports of the world, namely, Saint John, New Brunswick, and inquire as to what extent the important facilities there are being utilized and whether the government has plans for increasing the utilization of the Port of Saint John now or in the near future.

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators, I will take that question as notice.

Hon. Jack Marshall: St. John's, Newfoundland, too.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN AND OILSEED PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. In connection with planted acreage, he is reported as having said:

> If producers in all exporting countries reduce their acreage and production, it will lead to a significant improvement in the world grain situation.

He went on to praise United States farmers for the apparent success of their crop reduction program and, at that time, suggested that Canadian farmers reduce the seeded acreage of spring wheat by about 5 per cent; barley by 15 per cent; and flax by 22 per cent.

Meanwhile, the Honourable Eugene Whelan, Minister of Agriculture, has said that it is "unprincipled" and "unChristian" for the federal government to tell farmers to cut grain production, and he added, "I haven't talked to Senator Argue about it."

My question is: What is the government's policy concerning the desirability of Canadian farmers' increasing, decreasing or sustaining their current seeded acreage?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the policy of the government is that announced by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and that policy was adopted by Cabinet.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Take that, Eugene Whelan.

Senator Argue: It is my responsibility.

Senator Murray: How right you are.

Senator Argue: Minister Whelan happened to be out of the country at the time this policy was put together.

The Government of Canada has been a long-time supporter of exporter co-operation, as have members of the Progressive Conservative Party. A lot of discussions have gone on and are going on between Canada and the United States in this regard. A good many discussions were held in recent months between leaders of agricultural organizations in western Canada, grain producers' organizations and leaders of the wheat growers' organizations in the United States. They have felt that there should be some common policies and some agreement on exporter co-operation.

The Payment in Kind Program, the PIK Program, in the United States, will, it is estimated, result in a cutback in American acreage seeded to wheat and to durum of between 20 per cent and 30 per cent. This will not result in a reduction in stocks of 20 to 30 per cent for a number of reasons, but it is estimated it will bring about a reduction in stocks.

Canada was faced with the question: Do we endeavour to co-operate with the United States and with other exporting countries in a system whereby we would do what we felt was practical to bring about some management of our stocks in relation to the world supply of grain which is very large? It seemed to me and it seemed to the government—and, I might say, to a number of farm leaders in western Canada at any rate—that this was a reasonable thing to do.

The initial price for spring wheat was reduced by 12 cents per bushel, and the farmers accepted that, I believe, as being a rather modest reduction. The recommendation I then made was to have a relatively small but nevertheless significant reduction in wheat acres. I think that was a responsible position to take. I do not see how you can have exporter co-operation and be supportive of it unless you are prepared to co-operate, and this was the method we used and are using to indicate that we are prepared to co-operate with the United States.

I believe the effect on the market of the announced programs has been positive. Grain prices have gone up. The price for wheat is running higher than it was a year ago. I believe this was the right thing to have done. I believe it is responsible. I do not think it is imposing a burden on Canadian grain producers.

If we had gone the opposite way and had held the initial prices or had even increased them by 12 cents a bushel and at the same time had told our producers to go out and produce all of the grain possible from every single acre with every modern technique, the Americans would have taken that as a stand by Canada to meet them in the marketplace with increased severe competition, and with what has been a program of blended credits used by the United States in a few selected markets—and we expressed the hope that they would not use blended credit—it may well have turned into a much more aggressive stance.

I believe the position that has been announced on behalf of the grain producers of western Canada has resulted, is resulting and will result in a higher income than any other policy I can think of in relation to initial prices and recommended grain acreages for seeding.

Senator Sherwood: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the minister what he has told his American counterpart about Canadian policy in regard to the suggestion of reducing planted acreage, particularly in the light of Mr. Whelan's contradictory advice.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, the comments I have heard from the United States have been appreciative of the policy that Canada has been following and indicate that they are pleased with our efforts to co-operate with them in policies which will help preserve the incomes of western grain producers. To the best of my memory, the statement of my colleague in the cabinet was not referred to in any of the despatches.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, since there appears to be a difference in perspective, if not in policy, between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board in this matter, perhaps the minister could assist us by indicating the delineation of responsibility as between these two ministers when it comes to grains. Where does the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture end and that of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board begin?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): It does not; they are both together all the time.

Senator Argue: My responsibility has to do with the Canadian Wheat Board; the responsibilities of the Canadian Wheat Board in western Canada and the authority which flows from that. The delineation of Mr. Whelan's portfolio is, obviously, outside of that area.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the minister to expand a little bit on the government's policy with respect to acreage of grains in western Canada because, like many others, I noted his statement that he would like to see certain reductions. I also noted the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that this was a very wrong thing to do. Some of us are, perhaps chuckling a little because the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board seems to have come across this problem more than once—that is, trying to get his act to coincide with that of his colleague. We will let him worry about that.

The point I am getting at is: The minister has made a statement about the reduction of acreage, but I do not think anyone has paid much attention to it. He may be able to correct me on this, but my impression is that acreage for most of these crops has not been reduced in line with the minister's suggestion. What is the policy? It is all very well to make a suggestion. In the United States there is a policy that has substantially reduced its production of wheat. It is a policy that provides for financial compensation—in a roundabout way through trade of goods in kind—to those who adopt the government's policy, and that works.

● (2100)

My problem is that I hear the minister make the statement, but with what armour is he clothing his policy? He knows as well as I do that, if a farmer has to have a cash flow of so many dollars, he wants to have his production up even though he is not very happy about the price, because volume times price equals increased cash flow. If the farmer is told that he is to reduce his volume but that nothing will be done about price, then that will reduce his cash flow, bringing about the difficulties that follow.

It seems to me that the government does not have a particularly consistent approach to this matter, apart from that of exhortation. If the policy is exhortation, that satisfies me; I know where we stand. If, however, the policy is serious about acreage reduction, it seems to me that it will probably not be successful unless some other inducements are provided to make it practical for the farmer to pay some attention to what the minister is saying to him.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, the recommendations that I have made and the policy that has been followed do not endeavour to manage what is done on each individual farm in this country. The farmer is completely free, without any coercion or undue pressure, to seed on his farm whatever he wishes to. The farmer is at liberty to take this freely given advice or to ignore it. I will not say that the Honourable Senator Roblin is wrong. I simply think it is too early to tell whether he is right in saying that the farmers are likely to ignore this policy and perhaps will even increase their acreage generally.

We have had a pretty difficult spring. I do not know about the province of Manitoba, but certain parts of Saskatchewan are very late in seeding. It may well be that some change in wheat acreage will come about because of weather factors or other elements that affect the individual farmer.

We in Canada have not followed the policy of the United States, which is to provide certain substantial sums of money to those producers who will cut back their acreage. There is not, however, a definite or absolute correlation between reduced acreage and reduced production. Farmers in the United States are good farmers. On their farms they will probably reduce that acreage which is the least productive. They take their poorest acres out of production. I suppose that they then take the balance of acres and use all of the inputs they think are economically wise in order to bring about the optimum production on the acreage they are seeding.

Nonetheless, it is expected that this policy will have an important effect in reducing the carry-over stocks for another year. Our system is different from that of the United States. The Canadian Wheat Board, through its quota system, through its export sales and policies and through the authority it has been given, has control over our grain system. the Canadian Wheat Board stands in a fairly good position to co-operate with others whenever co-operation seems to be in the interests of the Canadian grain producers.

Exports today are running ahead of those of a year ago, and that is a fairly good commendation to the Canadian Wheat Board. Prices are marginally above those of a year ago, although in the public mind many think they are lower. Last year those who condemned the Canadian Wheat Board's system of operation said that there would be no final payment or that the final payment would be extremely low. The Wheat Board was able to come through with a final payment of between 68 and 70 cents a bushel. It was unanimously agreed that the board had done a very good job.

Our exports to date in this crop year are running somewhat ahead of those of last year. Reductions in the initial prices have been, I think, rather modest. It has been recommended that there should be some modest reduction in acreage as part of our method of co-operating with the United States. I think that kind of co-operation is important. I think, as well, that the total package suggested by the Canadian Wheat Board and the government is very much in the interests of our grain producers.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for giving us his usual explanation as to the differences between the American and the Canadian systems. Some of us got the message some time ago, but we are glad to hear it again.

I do think, however, that the minister is quite right in saying that he made his statement in order to mollify the Americans. That is why he made his statement, not because he had any—well, I must not interpret what the minister thinks. In my view, however, it is entirely unlikely that his observation about reducing acreage is going to have much effect. It really is a policy of exhortation more than anything else.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: You can fool some of the people some of the time.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, what needs to be clarified—and this has not yet been done in a public forum, although perhaps tonight may do the trick—is this: What advice is the government really tendering the farmers? Is it the advice of the honourable senator I am speaking to or is it the advice of his colleague? Both of those statements, to the best of my knowledge, stand side by side on the public record without any reconciliation or statement. It seems to me that the farming public is getting two sets of advice from the same government, and that ought not to be the case. Will the minister give his assurance that he will take an early opportunity to clarify this matter and to see that one piece of advice is tendered to the farmers of the nation?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have been endeavouring to clarify it. I suppose I have not done so to the satisfaction of Senator Roblin.

My responsibilities have to do with the Canadian Wheat Board and its operations. My responsibilities have to do with making an announcement about initial prices that are under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, sending out a report each year before seeding, and making recommendations as to the seeded acreage. I have made that announcement. That is the policy of the government.

Senator Roblin: The minister seems to think that the public is not entitled to hear the government speak with one voice in this matter. There is such a thing as collective cabinet responsibility. There is such a thing as the government speaking with one voice and not with several, especially when it is affecting the livelihood and the activities of a substantial portion of the population.

I understand the minister's difficulty and I do not want to rub it in, but I do think he owes the farmers a clear statement as to what the advice of the government is.

Senator Argue: I have just given that advice, and I gave it some weeks ago. Senator Roblin has taken some time in raising the matter in the Senate.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators will remember that I have been trying to get my honourable friend in front of me in order to ask him the question for the past three weeks.

Senator Murray: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: When Senator Guay got on to the question of Churchill—and I may come back to that before I am through tonight—he anticipated a question which has been lying on my desk here for three weeks. I did not have an opportunity to put that question to my honourable friend because he has not been here to answer it; he was out in western Canada distributing goodies on behalf of the government. I want to tell him that it will not do him the slightest bit of good when the votes are counted.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I was away on public business. I had some very important announcements to make, and I was glad to make them. Hansard will show that recently I have been in this chamber when Senator Roblin has also been here and has not taken the opportunity to raise those questions. I do not object to that.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not think that my honourable friend, who lives in a very large glass house at the moment, should throw so many bricks.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING BOARDS AND AGENCIES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister of Agriculture has been threatening to disband certain marketing agencies or boards because of a lack of discipline. Is the Canadian Wheat Board among those agencies that the Minister of Agriculture is threatening to disband?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I saw the news report. I suppose that I know what the honourable senator knows, by way of a news report, about what was said to have taken place.

The Canadian Wheat Board does a great job. There is no thought of reducing its powers. The pressure is all the other way.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I note that the minister refers to a news report. I am rather surprised that the rest of us received a copy of the speech of the Minister of Agriculture, yet the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is reading a press release. Perhaps he is not on that mailing list any more.

Would the minister indicate to us what type of discipline the Minister of Agriculture had in mind when he said that these boards had to have more discipline?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have not read the minister's prepared statement. I get a lot of them. I am the first to admit that I do not read everything that comes across my desk. I did happen to read the press report. It may or may not have been different from the text of the minister's statement. I am certainly not going to try to interpret for this chamber, or for anybody else, the intention of the Minister of Agriculture and what he had in mind. I should be very happy to bring the remarks of Senator Phillips to the attention of Mr. Whelan and ask him if he cares to make a comment that I might deliver in the Senate.

• (2110)

THE SENATE

DEPUTY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT—RUMOURED JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I appreciate that the Deputy Leader of the Government is in favour of having an elective Senate, with which I think many of us are in entire accord. However, is it a fact that he is also making representations to the Prime Minister to have himself appointed as a judge of the County Court for the County of York?

Hon. Martial Asselin: You will not run?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): No.

Honourable senators, I am making no such representations. I have never had any intention of doing so, and I have no intention now. Just so that there is no doubt, let me say that neither the Prime Minister nor anyone else intends to make such an appointment.

Senator Walker: That is very reassuring.

Senator Frith: I do not know whether I like that, since the honourable senator is not practising any more.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government has made representations that he become Canadian ambassador to Australia.

Senator Walker: Leave out the "amb" in "ambassador".

Senator Frith: Senator Marshall's suggestion is different. I had not thought of that, but I will think about it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government. There was a very important delegation that, on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, was in Washington, D.C. They went to make representations on the Garrison, which is so important for the people of the west, particularly southern Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I understand that the delegation, which was formed of members of the Government of Canada and members of the Government of Manitoba, amongst others, made representations on a personal basis to senators and members of Congress in Washington.

Hon. David Walker: What is the question?

Senator Guay: My question is in two parts. First, was the Senate requested to send a delegate as a member of that important delegation? Secondly, could we have a report from the delegation outlining, I hope, the success they achieved while they were there?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the answer to the first part of the question is: No, not to my knowledge. To the second part of the question I will attempt to obtain an answer, although it was not a delegation made up of the federal government—and I believe that is a fair statement—and it would be at the option of the other people whether or not they want to give us a report, whether we ask for it or not.

Senator Guay: Would it be possible for the Leader of the Government to make representations on our behalf to have an appropriate delegation make representations to the appropriate place in Washington about our concerns with respect to the Garrison? In other words, if this was not a real delegation there may not be a report, so why does the federal government not appoint an official delegation to represent the views of Manitoba, and to make an appropriate report?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a representation by Canada, through the Department of External Affairs and others, has been going on for a long while, and I have advised Senator Guay of that. I have some information that he may wish to have, which is that a delegation of federal and Manitoban legislators, comprising the three major political parties, met with members of the U.S. Congress and with officials of the Departments of State and the Interior on May 24 and May 25 in Washington to express Canada's continuing concern regarding the Garrison diversion project. The delegation put forward Canada's position that, in view of the harmful effect the authorized Garrison project could have on Canada, the development of any features potentially affecting Canada should be deferred until agreement has been reached between Canada and the United States on modifications to the project design which would satisfactorily protect Canadian interests and fulfil previously acknowledged U.S. transboundary obligations to Canada.

Discussions with members of Congress provided an excellent opportunity to communicate Canadian views on various aspects of the Garrison diversion project. Canadian parliamentarians received assurances that such representations are effective and helpful in ensuring that Canadian views and concerns on Garrison are conveyed to the relevant law-making bodies in the United States.

Senator Guay: The Leader of the Government said that when he makes the appropriate answer to my first question he will try to attempt to get a report. Would he also then outline to me which minister represented that group in Washington?

Senator Olson: Yes, I will.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, on a previous occasion I rose to my feet and addressed a question to Senator Austin concerning changes that may have been made in the method of meeting the expenses of the medical care and hospital programs. At that time he expressed a lack of knowledge and a lack of information concerning that point and said that he would bow to my superior experience and wisdom. If I remember correctly, I think his words were something to that effect.

I take it that on such an important subject the Minister of State for Social Development would have taken an immediate opportunity to investigate the truth of the matter, and that he is now apprised of the exact nature of the argument that was under discussion in this house.

I therefore ask the minister: Has he anything to add on the question I asked him the other day respecting the manner of sharing the costs of medicare and hospital insurance, or is he still as uninformed as he was on that occasion?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): That not being a very pleasant question, honourable senators, I do not propose to give an unpleasant answer.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SECTION 54—PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable sentors, I have a delayed answer for Senator Tremblay, who on May 12 asked for information concerning the eventual proclamation by the Governor General under the provisions of section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Since it is a fairly long reply, I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The 1983 Constitutional Accord on Aboriginal Rights, passed by the Government of Canada and the provincial governments with the exception of Quebec, stipulates that the First Ministers table, or have tabled, before December 31, 1983, a resolution authorizing the Governor General to amend the Constitution on certain particular points.

Under the provisions of this resolution, the Constitution Act, 1982 would be amended by the insertion after section 37 of a new Part IV.I containing a new section 37.1 which would obligate the Prime Minister of Canada to call two more constitutional conferences according to certain modalities. A new section 54.1 would be equally added foreseeing that Part IV.I and section 54.1 itself will be abrogated on April 18, 1987.

In all probability, there is therefore reason to shortly expect new temporary amendments to the Constitution Act, 1982 according to a text which has already been agreed upon.

In principle, the Governor General would issue the proclamation authorized under section 54 and would renumber the sections of the Constitution Act.

SALARIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-160, to amend the Salaries Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-160 is an act to amend the Salaries Act respecting the lieutenant governors of the provinces. Before reviewing the specific provisions of the bill I should like to offer a few words about the office of lieutenant governor of a province.

In our constitutional system, as honourable senators know, the lieutenant governor is Her Majesty's representative in the province and plays somewhat the same role, if not exactly the same role, as the Governor General plays in the federal Parliament for the enactment into law of provincial legislation. The lieutenant governor is the representative of Her Majesty in right of his or her particular province, but because of the constitutional provisions appointments are made at the federal level, and the salaries are provided by the Parliament of Canada, as stipulated in our Constitution.

Most honourable senators will know from their personal experience that Canadians of diverse backgrounds have occupied or are serving with distinction in the offices of lieutenant governor in the provinces. Both men and women have fulfilled the constitutional requirement of these offices, and each in their own way brought the office closer to the citizens of their provinces.

● (2120)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Ditto for senators.

Senator Frith: Senator Marshall says, "Ditto for senators". I agree. The salary of a lieutenant governor is currently $35,000, which is not a handsome sum by today's averages, considering the responsibilities of the office and the demands that it makes on the incumbent. I doubt that anyone would seek the job for the money. The salary has been increased only three times since Confederation, the last occasion being in 1975. In that context, Canadians in all provinces have been fortunate that public-spirited men and women have accepted these vital duties and performed them to the credit of their provinces and themselves.

Honourable senators, Bill C-160 is before you. There is an amendment to section 3 and the new subsection 3(1) increases the salary of a lieutenant governor from $35,000 to $37,100 effective January 1, 1982. That is an increase of 6 per cent. The new subsection 3(2) increases the salary by a further 5 per cent effective January 1, 1983, to $38,950.

Subsections 3.1(1), (2) and (3) are important in that they introduce, effective January 1, 1984, an automatic annual adjustment formula for the salaries of lieutenant governors, using the formula now in place for federally appointed judges. Namely, salaries are to be increased on January 1, 1984, and annually thereafter by the lesser of (1) the percentage increase in the industrial wage composite; or (2) 7 per cent.

Hon. David Walker: What about county court judges?

Senator Frith: This bill has nothing to do with county court judges. Would you take an appointment?

Senator Walker: Very profound, but go ahead.

Senator Frith: The result is rounded down to $100.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you authorized to make any offers?

Senator Frith: No, but I could carry it to the Prime Minister. It is a subject I have not yet discussed with him. The bill also provides required definitions for the operation of the formula.

The industrial composite, as honourable senators will know, is the average weekly wages and salaries of the industrial composite in Canada as published by Statistics Canada.

Clause 2(1) provides for retroactivity of these pay increases, including the purpose of pension calculation; and clause 2(2) provides for any retroactive salary increase to be paid to the estate of a deceased lieutenant governor where applicable.

So Parliament is being asked to consider the salary increases of 6 per cent effective January 1, 1982, and 5 per cent effective January 1, 1983. The amendment also proposes an annual adjustment formula beginning in 1984, based on the lesser of the growth in the industrial wage composite or 7 per cent. The formula is the one used also to adjust the salaries of federally appointed judges.

Many offices for which the salaries are fixed by Parliament have received infrequent increases in salary, including senators, MPs and judges. During periods of low inflation, the necessity to provide an automatic adjustment mechanism did not exist. Recent experience has demonstrated that increases are necessary if incumbents are to keep up with the demands of their offices. Other officials have been provided with the automatic adjustment mechanism for salaries and it is felt that the office of lieutenant governor deserves no less.

It could be argued that considering the amount that is presently paid, the increase based on 6 per cent and 5 per cent should be higher, but all Canadians have been asked to accept less in this period while we work on economic recovery. The government has been mindful of both sets of circumstances in this question. It is taking action to provide an increase in salary for lieutenant governors while not forgetting the need to show restraint. I believe that the distinguished Canadians now serving in the various provinces will accept that view, knowing also that positive steps are being taken to ensure that those salaries will not fall out of date again, as a result of the formula being introduced to provide for automatic annual adjustment in the future.

Finally, it should be noted that the provinces have been most supportive in providing financial and other assistance to lieutenant governors, though not uniformly. The amount of such assistance varies from province to province. Nevertheless, in addition to the assistance provided by the federal government, the provinces have ensured that representatives of Her Majesty are able to discharge their duties with the dignity that the office merits and requires.

I ask honourable senators to support this bill on second reading.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Deputy Leader of the Government. Are lieutenant governors provided also with a residence, such as the Governor General is, and also with a staff?

Senator Frith: That varies from province to province. In most cases a residence is provided, and in some cases staff is provided. In some cases services such as transportation, and so on, are provided.

An Hon. Senator: And food.

Senator Frith: Yes, and in most cases a budget. Newfoundland, for instance, is quite generous with its budget. The situation varies from place to place. Each province makes its own decision in this respect.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government referred to lieutenant governors performing functions similar to that of the Governor General, and I have no hesitation in supporting the bill or the proposal to increase the salaries of lieutenant governors. I believe we should seize the opportunity to correct these inequities. As indicated, there have been increases only three times since Confederation.

I understand that with regard to the Governor General, no adjustment has taken place during the past 25 or 30 years. Does the government have any plans to correct that inequity? It is usually assumed that the Governor General is a person of independent means or independent wealth, which is not always the case. I do not know the financial status of the present incumbent, but it is highly unlikely that he is a man of independent means.

The office should not be on that basis. Canadians with lesser incomes should be candidates for that high office, and a proper salary, commensurate with the duties and responsibilities, should apply. So I am asking the Deputy Leader of the Government whether the government has any intention of correcting that inequity, or has that been overlooked?

Senator Frith: No. I am sure that the government wishes in due course to correct the inequity that still exists, it seems to me, even with lieutenant governors; but in the opinion of the government this is not the time to do it. I believe that the base amount here is so low that it deserves to be revised, and then increases applied in accordance with uniform principles. With regard to the Governor General, to my knowledge his or her salary has never been increased since Confederation, and I am sure that is also being looked into by the government.

On motion of Senator Asselin, debate adjourned.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE SEEKING FURTHER INSTRUCTION ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Steuart, for the adoption of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting its examination of the Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act".—(Honourable Senator Macdonald).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with the consent of the Senate, Senator Nurgitz will speak to this order.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I propose to be brief and to limit my remarks to those matters dealing with the procedural aspect of what the chairman is now seeking, namely, further instructions from the Senate to enable the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to deal with proposed amendments that are now before the committee. I shall not deal with the merits of the amendments, but I wish to say briefly that the new amendments deal with some of the real and severe problems that exist in this country, including the few obvious and extreme cases where an inmate is to be detained until expiry of the warrant period.

• (2130)

To suggest, as some have, that the committee had this question before it is to stretch a point. As Senator Neiman has very capably pointed out, the original bill dealt only with the revolving door syndrome and did not touch at all on the problem which subsequently became known as the gating problem. In fact, at the time Senator Hastings introduced Bill

S-32, that word was not in the English vocabulary. "Gating" became a term used to describe the detention of an inmate about to be released under legally entitled mandatory supervision for a certain period, roughly the last one-third of the sentence faced by the inmate which is required by law to be served outside the institution. Inmates were being detained because in the opinion of the National Parole Board they were a danger, either to themselves or to the public at large.

The procedure of gating as adopted by the National Parole Board received, as they say in show business, mixed reviews by the courts and ultimately ended up before the Supreme Court of Canada, where it received short shrift and was declared to be illegal. I was not at the court hearing, but for those who did not follow the proceedings I will say that following argument by the Crown, which was reasonably short, the court, then and there, pronounced its judgement that the National Parole Board had no right to be gating inmates and, indeed, that the procedure was totally illegal.

I believe that the National Parole Board, notwithstanding that illegality, deserves whatever credit one can give to such a board which has done something illegal. The board was somewhat courageous in its stand and made an attempt—I was going to say an "honest attempt", but the court did not think it was so honest—to deal with this serious situation.

We are not here, honourable senators, to deal with the question of those inmates who might or might not present some kind of danger. As has been explained by the Solicitor General and the Deputy Solicitor General, we are dealing here with people who have not only a record that indicates that they are potential problems but who very obviously, from their behaviour in an institution, indicate an inability to control themselves, or in some other way demonstrate that it is virtually a sure thing that once released society will have a problem on its hands in terms of another violent offence.

As I say, when Senator Hastings introduced and explained Bill S-32 in the Senate, we were not dealing with dangerous offenders. Bill S-32 was merely attempting to deal with an inmate following his release on mandatory supervision and subsequently returned for either a new offence or for a breach of one of the conditions of his release, when it is the view of the department that the individual should be returned and should not be entitled to further remission, for once the inmate is returned the clock starts ticking again and at a certain point following his return the inmate is entitled by law to be released again. That is the present law.

The department's view on the matter is that if the inmate, once given a chance, does not want to take advantage of it, then he should have to serve the rest of his sentence within the institution.

The referral of the bill back to the Senate for further instructions was brought about because of a ruling of the Chairman of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, Senator Neiman. That ruling was, of course, upheld by the committee. To demonstrate the correctness of her position, one need only look at the words of the minister when he first appeared before the committee on this very question of whether we should stop obviously dangerous people from getting out of prison. The first words the minister spoke to the committee were:

> Our conviction is that if mandatory supervision were taken away from this group and they were held behind bars until warrant expiry, their crime statistics would be worse because society would lose the opportunity to impose supervision at a time of greatest vulnerability—the moment when they first return to the street, usually without money, without a job, without a place to live and without honest friends.
>
> Mandatory supervision helps to keep them away from liquor and drugs, a problem for a significant number of offenders; to keep them away from the friends who got them into trouble, known criminals, or people who carry weapons; and to direct their choice of neighbourhood to live in and to help them find an honest job.
>
> Surely it is better, considering the inevitability of eventual release for this group, to free them under control rather than to wait until the end and free them "cold turkey".

I congratulate the Solicitor General for seeing the light of day and for coming full circle because that quote no longer represents his view or his conviction. He now holds the view that these inmates should be released "cold turkey" at the expiry of the warrant period.

Before leaving this matter I want to comment on the work of the committee chairman, Senator Neiman, and the committee itself. I congratulate Senator Neiman for navigating the committee through some pretty treacherous waters. I cannot imagine a broader cross-section of interested Canadians having an opportunity to be heard before any parliamentary committee. These people were not just heard but were given an opportunity to express their opinions and views, and the committee, in fact, incorporated a consensus of all these various views into a solidified position. The committee reached a consensus which it was able to convey to the minister and persuade him of the necessity of introducing a different type of bill to deal with a problem which is far greater than the revolving door problem, and a problem with a far greater danger factor.

Much is written these days about Senate reform and about the ineffectiveness of the Senate. Every time I read an article on the subject that suggests that the measure of the Senate is how many bills it has turned back or how many amendments it has made I think of the workings of Bill S-32 as a shining example of the work of the Senate. First, we had a government sponsored bill. The committee went about hearing at least a good sampling of the people from all across Canada who have a vital interest in this question. The committee then communicated to the minister that the bill was not satisfactory in its form and that it wanted a different type of bill with some other features. The minister saw our view and came forward with these suggested amendments. The committee has taken the view that it must act in a correct procedural manner.

• (2140)

Honourable senators, I was one of a number on the committee who were in favour of the amendments but who believed that it was not proper procedure to come in with new matters of a rather substantial nature which had not been considered at the time second reading was given in this chamber, and who consequently felt it was necessary to follow the present procedure, that of coming back to this chamber and seeking further instructions.

We are proposing to bring in a law that will substantially alter the civil rights of certain persons. The first method used to effect that alteration was "gating," and we all know what the Supreme Court of Canada has said about that. Surely, we ought not to be caught out in an attempt to legalize another procedure in some questionable manner—and there is no doubt that it is questionable because, quite apart from the arguments of many of the senators, including Senator Hastings, the committee had the opinion of our Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, who indicated to us that one way of avoiding any questionable procedure was to do what in fact we are doing tonight. At least, that was one of the routes we could take.

Certainly, in my opinion it would be a grave mistake to remove the rights of individuals—albeit we are not pleased with those sorts of citizens—without first ascertaining that we were doing so procedurally correctly so that we would know that both in procedure and in substance we had done the right thing. We must be sure that justice will not only be done but that it will appear to be done.

In terms of the opportunity to debate these amendments, honourable senators, I do not propose to debate them now, nor do I think others should; but I see no reason why the Senate should not give these instructions tonight to permit early consideration of the amendments and, ultimately, to allow the committee to report back, at which time comments and discussion can take place and we can proceed with consideration of this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words, to give my interpretation of events that took place at the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, but first I would like to join in the words of praise addressed to the Chairman of our Committee, Senator Neiman. Briefly, after several meetings during consideration of Bill S-32, at some time Committee members developed a consensus which went beyond and was contrary to the original provisions of Bill S-32 sponsored by Senator Hastings. After obtaining this consensus, we asked officials of the Department of Justice to prepare amendments for submission to the Committee. After reading the amendments, we found that they went well beyond what we had asked for and had no relevance at all, for instance, to the presentation Senator Hastings made originally on Bill S-32. One member of the Committee, and I am referring to Senator Hastings, who worked very conscientiously, had submitted that the amendments were out of order because they went beyond the framework of the original Bill.

The question was: can the Committee examine and approve amendments that go beyond the original Bill, without first asking the Senate's permission? Personally, I might have been prepared to give my consent. In any case, the Committee Chairman advised us to ask our Senate legal adviser to examine the legal side of the matter. He examined the question and consulted May and Bourinot and other authors. He sent us a report and said that it was not advisable for the Committee to continue consideration and approval of these amendments without obtaining the permission of the Senate. He submitted all this in the form of a reasonable doubt that we were exceeding the mandate we received from the Senate. As far as I am concerned, I did not want to set aside a well-ordered opinion given by our legal adviser, Mr. du Plessis. Since he raised this doubt and told us in his report that according to him, because of precedent, it would be preferable for us to go back to the Senate to ask our colleagues for permission to go ahead with Bill S-32. That is why this report was tabled. I think there is a consensus among all members to that effect. If the Senate gives us permission, we shall go back to work. If a consensus is obtained today, I think we will be able to come back here shortly with a Bill that is vastly improved over the original S-32. I believe that the Senate will then have done remarkable work, as Senator Nurgitz said.

[English]

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I wish to add my views to those already expressed. I will do so briefly. I am anxious to see the motion before this house carried, and I have a rather substantial reason for that anxiety.

I agree with what Senator Deschatelets has said. I hope you will forgive me if I appear to be somewhat personal in what I say, but in the Nova Scotia legislature in recent days a bill was presented which was given second reading and was given to the Law Amendments Committee. That committee made certain amendments to that bill. When the bill was sent back to the house, those amendments were found to be, in effect, new material, because they dealt with matters that had not been contemplated in the original bill. The matter was raised as a question in the legislature, and the Speaker—who happens to be my own son—was faced with the requirement of deciding whether or not the committee had acted within its rights. He came to the conclusion that the committee had exceeded its jurisdiction and had, in effect, written law of a kind not contemplated when the bill was sent to the committee. Accordingly, that problem in the legislature was settled by the simple expedient of the government of the day accepting the Speaker's ruling and agreeing that the committee had exceeded its authority. But the government decided that since what the committee had done was right and was what the government wanted to have happen, the government would withdraw the entire bill and substitute a new bill which would include within it those things which the committee had decided.

• (2150)

That is exactly the situation the motion now before us is attempting to avoid. Certain amendments have been proposed by the Department of Justice. They go beyond what was requested, even by the committee. In effect, it has been said to us by the Law Clerk and by others that there is a grave danger that, if those amendments are adopted in committee, they will, in effect, import new and different material into the act and that the whole act might therefore be invalid and subject to challenge. What is being said is that the amendments, which all appear to desire to add to the bill, should in fact be approved and that you, in this chamber tonight, should direct the committee to add them. In this way they would be added at the direction of this house, and it could not then be said that the committee had exceeded its authority.

That, in a nutshell, is the essence of what is being discussed here tonight. I, for one, propose to support the procedure, and I urge all other senators to follow my action in that respect.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak tonight but, in view of the remarks made by the three senators who have preceded me, I feel it only right that, as the one who sponsored the bill in the Senate and then raised the point of order in the committee, I should respond briefly to some of the remarks that have been made. All of the other senators who have spoken have, I believe, accurately and faithfully set out the views of the committee.

I wish to make it categorically clear that I make no apology for having raised the point of order because, as honourable senators have correctly remarked, I felt very sincerely that the amendments presented to the committee by Senator Frith went far beyond the bill I had presented to you for consideration. Also, I felt that if we, as a committee, were entering into the uncertain waters of legislation to imprison people for something they might do, the Senate had the right to express its view before we, as a committee, proceeded.

The original bill contained six clauses and dealt primarily with an offender on mandatory supervision and what would happen in the case of its revocation; nothing more. We then had presented to us eight pages of amendments which dealt with the procedure by which an inmate would be held in custody who "could become, who might be, whom we hope will not become violent." If we are going to commence that journey, we are going to need bigger goals.

I felt sincerely then, as I do now, that senators should have the opportunity to express their views on that principle, and for that reason I thought it should have been dealt with by a separate bill. However, I respect the decision of my chairman and I congratulate her for guiding us through some very difficult and troubled waters. Honourable senators have had an opportunity to express themselves, and I now fully accept her decision.

I cannot share the enthusiasm of Senator Nurgitz with respect to the procedure that has been suggested in the amendments, but I commend the Solicitor General for at least listening to the views of honourable senators. I believe that if we are going to hold in custody inmates who "might be, could be, we hope will not be violent," then that decision will be made by a court of competent jurisdiction and not by a "national gating board."

I therefore support the reference that has been made to this chamber regarding the instructions that we are asking of you. In the days ahead, I intend to put forward views with respect to improving the original Bill S-32, and I also intend to continue to express my total misgivings about society's adopting the procedure of holding a man in custody to the end of his warrant expiry after he has earned his remission. I thank God for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that deals with cruel and unusual punishment, and I am quite confident that, if it is passed, this bill will receive the same fate before a court of competent jurisdiction as did this insidious gating that was instituted by the "national gating board." I cannot share the enthusiasm of Senator Nurgitz in commending the National Parole Board for honestly breaking the law and illegally withholding freedom from twelve citizens of Canada.

Hon. Peter Bosa: They did not think they were breaking the law; they thought they were proceeding legally.

Senator Hastings: A defendant in any court could use that defence, that they thought they were proceeding legally. The National Parole Board has the resources of the entire Department of Justice, and the decision was made on no better advice than that of one bureaucrat to another.

I shall continue to bring these views to the attention of the committee as we proceed with our work, in an attempt to give the people of Canada enlightened legislation on corrections which will be of benefit to society in the realm of public protection and to the offender.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

● (2200)

INFORMATION COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF INGER HANSEN, Q.C.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of Thursday, May 26, 1983, moved:

> That, in accordance with Section 54 of Schedule 1 of An Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of Inger Hansen, Q.C., as Information Commissioner.

He said: Honourable senators, I am at the pleasure of the Senate at this time. On Thursday of last week an attempt was made to have this motion dealt with during that sitting. I accept full responsibility for that. Leave is not now being asked because notice has been given. Since then, it is correct to say—and I hope it is correct—that every senator on both sides of the house has received the curriculum vitae of Inger Hansen, Q.C.

The House of Commons dealt with this motion last Friday, and the Minister of Justice and spokesmen for the official opposition and the New Democratic Party are recorded in Hansard with respect to the ratification of this appointment.

I am prepared to make a short speech, a medium speech or a long speech putting on the record of the Senate the background information concerning the person named in this motion. My suggestion is that it be a short speech covering some of the essential background that I think ought to form part of the record of this house. I intend to do the same with the next motion standing in my name.

If that is agreeable, honourable senators, I shall start by saying that section 54 of the Access to Information Act passed last July by Parliament provides for the appointment of an Information Commissioner by the Governor in Council—

Hon. Martial Asselin: Are you reading from the House of Commons Debates?

Senator Olson: Just some parts of that record.

Senator Asselin: I have already read it.

Senator Olson: I understand that, and that is why I tried to explain to my honourable friend that I will be very brief, but if senators do not wish me to do that, I am prepared to forgo this interesting speech, but I think the background information should be put on the record of this house. However, if honourable senators opposite wish to pass this motion without any speech in support of it, I am prepared to accept that.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you asking for advice? If so, I may not be competent to give it, but I am prepared to do so. I think the leader had better give us his medium speech, because it seems to me that the members of the Senate who intervened in the discussion last week, namely, Senators McElman, Donahoe, Asselin, Muir, Manning and Molson, were really performing a valuable service to the Senate in bringing to our attention the necessity of dealing with this matter in a more than perfunctory manner.

While I appreciate the willingness of my honourable friend opposite to accept the responsibility for that contretemps, I have to admit that I did not object when he asked for leave, so the responsibility must be shared.

I do wish to say that I am glad the other honourable senators spoke, because I think they hit the nail on the head by saying that we should not deal with these appointments in such an off-hand way. So, I suggest to my honourable friend that he give us his medium speech, and then other honourable senators may have an opportunity to make observations, if they so wish.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I accept that invitation and I shall proceed with my speech as rapidly as possible.

In addition to what I have already said, the Information Commissioner holds office during good behaviour for a term of seven years, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time on the address of the Senate and the House of Commons.

Referring more specifically to the person named in the motion, Inger Hansen, Q.C., she is a native of Denmark who graduated from the University of British Columbia Law School. She is a member of the British Columbia Bar, and spent eight years in the general practice of law in Vancouver.

[Senator Olson.]

She came to Ottawa in 1969 as a lawyer with the Department of Justice attached to the Ministry of the Solicitor General. One of her primary responsibilities there was to review the Juvenile Delinquents Act and prepare proposals to replace that act.

Some honourable senators may recall her appearances before the committee of the other place and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

In 1973 the Department of Justice lost a good lawyer and the inmates of our penitentiaries gained an outspoken and effective ombudsman when Miss Hansen became Canada's first correctional investigator.

In this position she gained her initial experience in the art of being an ombudsman, an art she has mastered well.

She took her ombudsman's skills to the Canadian Human Rights Commission in 1977 when she was appointed a Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and the first Privacy Commissioner under Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Today Ms. Hansen has earned the right to call herself Canada's senior ombudsman, having been in the field for 10 years. In addition, she has built up a solid international reputation for herself and, indeed, for Canada in the ombudsman and data production fields.

Over the past several years, she has been active in the International Ombudsmans' Association as a member of its planning committee.

I should also like to say that the Minister of Justice has said that he personally knew a great deal about her activities and had admired her work. He went on to say that he met her while he was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, when she began her work in Ottawa, and when he was subsequently chairman of that committee and also Chairman of the Subcommittee on Penitentiaries.

So, with all this experience I think it is clear that Ms. Hansen is the ideal person to take up this challenge and set another precedent as being the first Information Commissioner in Canada. The Commission will have extensive powers of investigations and will allow it to look fully into problems and try to find solutions.

The minister went on to say:

> I believe that this will happen in most cases and that no longer being required to institute an action at law will save Canadians both time and money. It will always be possible to appeal to the Federal Court in those cases where the problem has not been solved.

That covers it very briefly, I might say even more briefly than was the case in the other place.

So that those people who read Hansard, and senators who are not already aware, the spokesman for the official opposition in the other place had this to say, and I quote—

Hon. David Walker: What page?

Senator Olson: This is from page 25797 of the House of Commons Debates.

Senator Asselin: Why are you reading that?

Senator Olson: So that we have this on our record.

Senator Asselin: We have already read that.

Senator Olson: I explained that a couple of times.

Senator Asselin: Why are you doing that?

Senator Olson: I am prepared to do that; I offered to do that. In any event, I am almost finished. For our record, the spokesman for the official opposition said:

> I think the Government has made a good choice. It is important that the new ombudsman or Information Commissioner start her role, not just with the approval of the Government, but with the approval of all Parties in the House of Commons to which she will report from time to time during her tenure in office.

There is much more that can be said, but I will only cite one other quotation from that speech, which states:

> The reporting to Parliament is important. She becomes a servant of Parliament. She also becomes a very important instrument in the ultimate parliamentary review that will take place in a few years down the road in the operation of that statute.
>
> I said at the beginning that I think her appointment is a good one and a sound one. On behalf of all my colleagues in this Party, I wish her well.

I see that Senator Asselin is not anxious that I quote any more from those who supported this appointment. The spokesman for the other opposition party in the House of Commons had equally glowing and supportive comments to make in the debate that ratified—

• (2210)

Hon. Lowell Murray: May I ask the minister then whether members of the Senate and House of Commons will have recourse to the new Information Commissioner when we find it impossible to obtain information from ministers of the Crown?

Senator Olson: I cannot give a flat yes or no answer to that question. I am sure that the Information Commissioner will ensure that the provisions of the Access to Information Act are adhered to. No doubt, there could be a set of circumstances in which my honourable friend would not agree with the government's interpretation of that statute. I think it is reasonable to assume that this house will have not only the right but perhaps the obligation to call the Information Commissioner before a committee if there is disagreement over what information may be available. From what I can tell of her activities, and the very good reputation she has built up over the years, she will be helpful to this chamber and, indeed, to Parliament generally in the pursuit of what is provided in the statute.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. The resolution that is before us uses the phrase "this House approves the appointment." I have no intention and no desire to take exception to the appointment, or to object to it, or to hinder it in any way, but I do not see why I should be called upon to say that I approve of it. It seems to me to be an appropriate procedure to bring it before this house and to give us the opportunity to say whether or not we will consent to the appointment. I am quite prepared to consent to it, and I do not hesitate to say so, but I object to the word "approves" in the resolution that is put before us.

My question is really this: Can you read to us a section of the act under which we are proceeding which uses the word "approves" to indicate that you had no choice in using that word in the motion that you have put before us? If you have no choice, I will accept it, but if there is a choice I would much prefer that we have a more moderate word than the word "approves".

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can do that. Perhaps I have a problem of fully comprehending the difference between the word "consent"—that is perhaps not the word he used—and "approves", but the fact is that section 54 of the Information Act that was passed some time last year provides for the appointment of an Information Commissioner by the Governor in Council, and I shall quote the sentence that is important to answer Senator Donahoe's question:

> —after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

I am sorry, there seems to be some misunderstanding. It cannot be ratified according to the act by the Governor in Council until a motion approving it has gone through both houses.

Senator Murray: Is the same procedure followed in the appointment of the Commissioner of Official Languages?

Senator Olson: Yes.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: When we discussed this matter a few days ago, Senator Manning made a suggestion which seems to have been well received by a number of senators, namely, that if we were asked to give our approval, it would be wise to consider a mechanism that would enable us to meet with this person, as a Committee, or otherwise. The person could then give his views on the work he will be doing. What I am interested in is not really the two appointments as such, but future events. It is a matter of principle. Have you completely set aside the suggestion made by Senator Manning to have a Committee meet people who are to become servants of Parliament?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am glad that Senator Deschatelets has mentioned that. I certainly have not set those comments completely aside. I listened to them very carefully and there will probably be some circumstance, as he pointed out, for future consideration and that procedure may be highly desirable and useful. I will certainly take that into account and will be prepared for it, but in the circumstances respecting this particular appointment and the other one where there is a very high or, at least, what appears to be a very high level or consensus of approval for all of it, I would hope that the Senate would see fit to pass these two motions.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a further question before the motion is put. I noticed that one of the quotations of the Leader of the Government stated that the commissioner reported to the House of Commons. Does that mean that the appointment does not call for a report to both houses?

Senator Olson: If I said only the House of Commons—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That was in a quotation from Walter Baker's speech.

Senator Olson: Perhaps I should read the entire section and not just part of it and that perhaps will clarify it. The quotation is from Bill C-43, to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof. Section 54(1) reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council shall, by commission, under the Great Seal, appoint an Information Commissioner after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

I think it will take me a few more minutes to find the exact quotation, but I am certain that that report has got to come to both houses.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, this is perhaps a niggling point, but I want to be assured that Ms. Hansen is a Canadian citizen. Her curriculum vitae it does not indicate that, although it indicates that she was born in Denmark. I presume she is a Canadian citizen and perhaps the minister could confirm that.

Senator Olson: I think that is a requirement of some of the positions. I do not see that in the curriculum vitae that I have either, but I will give an undertaking to find out if that is so.

Senator Frith: I believe that all the law societies in Canada require citizenship before admission to the bar, so that would be some evidence that she is a Canadian.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I would not take that for a fact.

Senator Frith: You are not required to.

Senator Olson: I think I can answer more precisely Senator Molson's question about the report now, and I want to thank Senator McElman for finding the information for me so rapidly. The marginal note to Section 72 of the act that I identified a few minutes ago is "Report to Parliament", and the section reads:

● (2220)

> (1) The head of every government institution shall prepare for submission to Parliament an annual report on the administration of this Act within the institution during each financial year.
>
> Every report prepared under subsection (1) shall be laid before the Senate and the House of Commons within three months after the financial year in respect of which it is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

That is a standard phrase which is used. Then, finally, subsection (3) states:

> Every report prepared under subsection (1) shall, after it is laid before the Senate and the House of Commons, under subsection (2), be referred to the committee designated or established by Parliament for the purpose of subsection 73(1).

Senator Molson: Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF JOHN W. GRACE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of Thursday, May 23, 1983, moved:

> That, in accordance with section 53 of Schedule II of An Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this house approves the appointment of John W. Grace, Esquire, as Privacy Commissioner.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not think there was unanimity, although there was a consensus, on the manner in which I proceeded on the previous motion. Since I have before me the curriculum vitae of John W. Grace, perhaps it could be taken as read. If, however, honourable senators prefer that I read it into the record, adding some highly desirable or deserved complimentary remarks about this gentleman's record, I will do so. However, my suggestion is that it be taken as read.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We are running into the same problem as we had earlier. I would suggest to my honourable friend that he restrict himself to the curriculum vitae of this man and let us make up our own minds as to whether it is a good one. We do not really need to hear the comments of character witnesses, but, for the sake of the record, we would like to hear this man's curriculum vitae.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, John W. Grace was vice-president and editor-in-chief of the Ottawa Journal from June 1978 to August 1980, when the newspaper ceased publication.

He joined the Journal in 1959 as a member of the newspaper's editorial board. He was named an associate editor in 1962, and from 1972 was responsible for the editorial policy of the Journal. His editorials won two National Newspaper Awards competitions, in 1975 and 1977, and one citation for merit in 1974.

He was born in Ottawa on January 6, 1927, where he received his early education. He was graduated from St. Patrick's College in 1949. He received a Master of Arts in English literature from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and a Ph.D. in the same subject from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, where he was a teaching fellow and a Rackham fellowship winner.

He was a full-time member of the faculty of English Language and Literature at the University of Michigan until returning to Canada and the Journal in 1959.

He has lectured on a part-time basis in the graduate school of the University of Ottawa.

Mr. Grace has been a radio and television commentator on public affairs. He also wrote scripts for CBC Ottawa public affairs programs and for the CBC network program, The Seventies.

He was a member of the Canada Council for two terms.

His community activities have included four terms as member of the Board of Governors of the University of Ottawa; four years as chairman of the board's executive committee; two years as chairman of the first co-ordinating committee for the Ottawa Health Sciences Centre, Alta Vista; six years as member of the Collegiate Institute Board of Ottawa, having served as chairman in 1967; and director of the Welfare Council of Ottawa.

He is married to the former Ruth E. Herbert of Baltimore, Maryland, and is the father of six children.

Senator Roblin: Thank you.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I do not think the CV is complete. It is my understanding that Dr. Grace has been a member of the CRTC since 1980 and that he still occupies a position on that commission, which, of course, he would relinquish if this appointment were made.

Recently I had the opportunity of seeing Dr. Grace in action in Fredericton, New Brunswick, when the CRTC was holding hearings there on certain broadcast licences. I think that should also be part of the record.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am aware of that, and I thank Senator McElman for making mention of it so that it is included in the record. Dr. Grace is certainly well known in that capacity as well.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Could he hold two jobs at the same time?

Senator Olson: No.

Motion agreed to.

ORDER PAPER

WRITTEN QUESTION NO. 59—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, before the adjournment I should like to refer to questions on the Order Paper, and in particular to Question No. 59 which has been on the Order Paper since April 1, 1981.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame.

Senator Marshall: It is a shame and it is embarrassing. It is an insult that it could not be answered in over a year. It is ridiculous. Take it off the Order Paper and get rid of it if you don't intend to answer it.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Send it to the Information Commissioner.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): What number is it?

Senator Marshall: It is No. 59. Every time I ask the question all I hear are tales of woe. It is becoming embarrassing. Take it off the Order Paper.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You need more staff.

Senator Marshall: It is insulting to anyone with an ounce of intelligence. I did not get an answer.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thought you said, "Take it off the Order Paper."

Senator Marshall: Say yes or no.

Senator Frith: If it were a matter to be dealt with by me, I would agree to its being taken off the Order Paper.

Senator Marshall: Why is there no courteous rapport between the two sides? Senators should be considered as human beings and not insulted at every chance. You are railroading everything through this place.

Senator Frith: I am not trying to insult or to railroad anything; I would like to propose the adjournment. I do not want to propose the adjournment if Senator Marshall wants to say anything else.

Senator Marshall: Abolish the Senate. Go to the Prime Minister and abolish the Senate. Get it over with.

Senator Frith: I want to wait until everyone is finished.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He wants to wait to get that judgeship.

Senator Frith: What?

Senator Roblin: I am teasing you.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, June 2, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 2, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETING, WILLIAMSBURG, VA., U.S.A.—RESPONSE TO REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) tabled:

Response of the Government of Canada to the Report of the Royal Commission on Conditions of Foreign Service, dated May 1983.

Report on the operations of the Exchange Fund Account, together with the Auditor General's report on the audit of the Account, for the year ended December 31, 1982, pursuant to sections 17 and 18(2) of the Currency and Exchange Act, Chapter C-39, R.S.C., 1970.

He said: Honourable senators, at this point I should like to suggest to the Acting Leader of the Opposition that it may be useful if I table what really may be described as a response to his question of May 31 concerning the fulfilment of Canadian objectives at the Williamsburg conference.

In response to his question, I have, and am prepared to table, the following documents:

1. A statement of the Canadian objectives prepared by the Department of External Affairs;

2. The communiqué that was agreed to by the seven leaders attending the conference;

3. An assessment of the conference by the Prime Minister; and

4. An assessment of the conference by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Honourable senators, I have a limited number of copies of these documents that I would make available to senators who wish to have them. As honourable senators will note from the scroll, it may be some time between now and the beginning of Question Period; so, in order to be helpful to members of the opposition, I ask that these documents be tabled now. If that is unacceptable, I can put them forward in the regular fashion as a response to a question. Even in that instance, I would not ask that they be printed as if they had been read, but that they be tabled at that time.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have no objection to the procedure suggested by the Leader of the Government. He did me the kindness of giving me a copy of these documents as I came into the chamber. However, I would warn him that there is not much chance of my being able to make head or tail of them or digesting them in the course of this afternoon's proceedings. If I have an opportunity perhaps tomorrow or next week, I may be able to give some consideration to them at that time.

However, as he also proposes, as I understand it, to make some observations himself on the issues later on in the day's proceedings, I may have some questions that arise out of those comments.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have with me a prepared comment on any part of these documents. However, I will follow the suggestion made by the Acting Leader of the Opposition and pass around the few copies I have with me. Certainly, later today, or by next week, all senators will have the complete text. Perhaps that would be the time to get into the discussion.

• (1405)

Senator Roblin: I have no objection to that. However, I would have preferred the Leader of the Government to have made some comments during Question Period. Perhaps he will still give some consideration to that, because some of the matters that were at issue when this matter was raised yesterday lend themselves, I think, to an oral statement without reference to the papers concerned.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is perhaps correct. I have no argument with it. However, what has transpired since the question was first put last Tuesday is that we have assembled this background information which I undertook to get. In addition to that, the Minister of Finance appeared before one of the committees. The transcript of the proceedings of that meeting will be available for honourable senators by next Tuesday. Further, there is some possibility that we may have another opportunity, both in committee and on the floor next week, for further discussion about, at least, the borrowing authority. I believe there is a good possibility that the bill will come to us later, which will also give us an opportunity at some future time to discuss these matters.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not disagree with what the Leader of the Government has said. I point out to him, however, that at the committee meeting this morning the comments offered by the Minister of Finance were, from my point of view, hardly encouraging, because in effect he said that what had transpired at Williamsburg would in no way affect the policy of the Government of Canada with respect to its deficit policy, with respect to its interest rate policy, or with respect to its attitude toward trade barriers and protection. I got the clear impression from his testimony this morning that that part of the policy of the government was not in any way changed by what was going on in Williamsburg.

I, for one, take this opportunity to express my distress that that happens to be the gist of his statement.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I find myself in the difficult position where I must try to devise an interpretation that is more satisfactory to the honourable senator than that which he got directly from the Minister of Finance. I am not sure whether he wants me to say it in language that is more acceptable to him, but it seems to me that, if he wanted information on the interpretation of government policy, he had an opportunity this morning to go into that.

I am aware of the limitations that are involved in that kind of situation, but I am not sure that he would expect me to give an interpretation that would indicate a different policy.

It seems to me that we have two opportunities to have some discussion in this regard. It may be that I will be able to clarify the situation more substantially than what Senator Roblin now claims is an unsatisfactory response.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I appreciate the good will of the Leader of the Government. I leave it to him to take whatever steps he wishes to take in enunciating government policy. I offer the observation, however, that, in my mind, it is always a little questionable as to whether we should consider a statement made in committee as being sufficient. There were five members of the house present at the committee meeting this morning, six when my honourable friend arrived, and seven when his seatmate arrived.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It was up to eight at one point.

Senator Roblin: Was it, indeed? There you are, honourable senators, eight out of a possible 82. It seems to me that, if statements of policy are to be made, it is better to make them in this chamber. That is as far as I want to go this afternoon.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would then ask that this reply and the documents that I identified a few moments ago be tabled at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 2, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of November 23, 1982 and to its instruction of May 31, 1983, examined the said Bill and the amendments referred to in the said instruction and now reports the Bill with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, clause 1: Strike out line 7 and substitute the following:

   "23. Subject to subsection 24(5) and 24.11(2) the Com-"

2. Page 1, clause 2: Strike out lines 16 to 19 and substitute the following:

   "2. (1) Subsection 24(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

   "24. (1) Subject to this section and sections 24.11 and"

3. Page 2 new subsection (2): Add, immediately after line 4, the following:

   "(2) Section 24 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

   "(3) An inmate is not entitled to be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission,

   (a) where a court directs pursuant to section 14.7 of the Parole Act that the inmate not be so released, or

   (b) prior to the completion of

   (i) the hearing and determination by the court of the application in respect of the inmate pursuant to sections 14.1 to 14.7 of that Act to determine whether a direction referred to in paragraph (a) should be made, or

   (ii) an appeal by the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection 14.8(2) against the dismissal of the application referred to in subparagraph (i).

   (4) When a direction referred to in subsection (3) is made in respect of an inmate, the inmate

   (a) shall forfeit all statutory and earned remission standing to his credit, whether accrued before or after the coming into force of this section; and

   (b) is not entitled to be credited with earned remission in respect of the sentence he is serving at that time.

   (5) Any remission of sentence forfeited pursuant to subsection (4) shall not thereafter be remitted or recredited pursuant to section 23 of this Act or subsection 20(3) of the Parole Act."

4. Page 2, clause 3: Strike out line 10 and substitute the following:

   "and the mandatory supervision is revoked as a result of a conviction for an offence,

5. Page 2, new clause 3.1: Add, immediately after the heading "PAROLE ACT" that follows line 29, the following:

"3.1 Subsection 9(1) of the Parole Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (a) thereof, the following paragraph:

"(a.1) prescribing the times when and the manner in which a review of cases of inmates pursuant to section 14.1 is to take place;"

6. Page 2, new clause 3.2: Add, immediately before line 30, the following:

"3.2 The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 14 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"DIRECTION NOT TO RELEASE INMATE ON MANDATORY SUPERVISION

14.1 (1) In this section and sections 14.2 to 14.9,

"court" means a superior court of criminal jurisdiction;

"court of appeal" means

(a) in the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Court of Appeal, and

(b) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the Appeal Division of the Supreme Court;

"prosecutor" means the Attorney General of Canada and includes counsel acting on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada;

"superior court of criminal jurisdiction" means

(a) in the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court,

(b) in the Provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Supreme Court,

(c) in the Province of British Columbia, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeal, and

(d) in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and New Brunswick, the Court of Appeal or the Court of Queen's Bench.

(2) The Chairman or a division of the Board shall, at the time and in the manner prescribed by the regulations, review the case of every inmate who is sentenced to imprisonment in or transferred to a penitentiary and is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence within the meaning of section 687 of the Criminal Code.

(3) Where, after reviewing the case of an inmate as required by subsection (2), the Chairman or members who conducted the review are of the opinion that the inmate should not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission, on the grounds set out in paragraph 14.7(a) or (b), they shall refer the case to the Attorney General of Canada,

(a) except in the circumstances described in paragraph (b), not later than ninety days prior to the earliest day on which the inmate may be entitled to be released from imprisonment; and

(b) where the Chairman or members who conducted the review form the opinion less than ninety days prior to such day on the basis of

(i) behaviour by the inmate that occurs within those ninety days, or

(ii) information provided to the Chairman or members within those ninety days that could not reasonably have been provided earlier, as soon as practicable after the opinion is formed.

(4) Where the case of an inmate has been referred to the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection (2), an application for a direction under section 14.7 that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment may be made, within fourteen days of the referral, to the court having jurisdiction in the place in which the inmate is in custody.

(5) An inmate is not entitled to be released from imprisonment prior to the completion of

(a) the hearing and determination by the court of the application in respect of the inmate pursuant to this section and sections 14.2 to 14.7, or

(b) an appeal by the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection 14.8(2) against the dismissal of the application referred to in paragraph (a).

(6) An inmate who is in custody by virtue of subsection (5) shall be deemed to be serving his sentence.

(7) This section and sections 14.2 to 14.9 apply in respect of persons who were sentenced to imprisonment in or transferred to any class of penitentiary before or after the coming into force of this section.

14.2 (1) Where an application in respect of an inmate has been made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), the Court shall hear and determine the application except that no such application shall be heard unless

(a) at least fourteen days notice has been given to the inmate by the prosecutor, following the making of the application, outlining the basis on which it is intended to found the application; and

(b) a copy of the notice has been filed with the clerk of the court.

[Senator Neiman.]

(2) An application made pursuant to subsection 14.1 (4) shall be heard and determined by the court without a jury.

(3) For the purposes of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), where an inmate admits any allegations contained in the notice referred to in paragraph (1)(a), no proof of those allegations is required.

(4) The production of a document purporting to contain any nomination that may be made or given by the Attorney General of Canada under sections 14.1 to 14.9 and purporting to be signed by the Attorney General of Canada is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof of that nomination without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the document.

14.3 (1) On the hearing of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), the court shall hear the evidence of at least two psychiatrists and all other evidence that, in its opinion, is relevant, including the evidence of any psychologist or criminologist called as a witness by the prosecution or the inmate.

(2) One of the psychiatrists referred to in subsection (1) shall be nominated by the prosecution and one shall be nominated by the inmate.

(3) If the inmate fails or refuses to nominate a psychiatrist pursuant to this section, the court shall nominate a psychiatrist on behalf of the inmate.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to enlarge the number of expert witnesses that may be called without the leave of the court or judge under section 7 of the Canada Evidence Act.

14.4 (1) A court to which an application is made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) may, by order in writing,

(a) direct the inmate in relation to whom the application is made to attend at a place or before a person specified in the order and within a time specified therein, for observation, or

(b) remand the inmate in such custody as the court directs, for a period not exceeding thirty days, for observation,

where in its opinion, supported by the evidence of, or where the prosecutor and the inmate consent, supported by the report in writing of, at least one duly qualified medical practitioner, there is reason to believe that evidence might be obtained as a result of such observation that would be relevant to the application.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a court to which an application is made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) may remand the inmate to which that application relates in accordance with that subsection

(a) for a period not exceeding thirty days without having heard the evidence or considered the report of a duly qualified medical practitioner where compelling circumstances exist for so doing and where a medical practitioner is not readily available to examine the offender and give evidence or submit a report; and

(b) for a period of more than thirty but not more than sixty days where it is satisfied that observation for such a period is required in all the circumstances of the case and its opinion is supported by the evidence of, or where the prosecutor and the inmate consent, by the report in writing of, at least one duly qualified medical practitioner.

14.5 Without prejudice to the right of an inmate to tender evidence as to his character and repute, evidence of the character and repute of the inmate may, if the court thinks fit, be admitted on the question whether the inmate should be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission.

14.6 (1) The inmate shall be present at the hearing of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) and the court shall order, in writing, the person having the custody of the inmate to bring the inmate before the court.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may

(a) cause the inmate to be removed and to be kept out of court, where he misconducts himself by interrupting the proceedings so that to continue the proceedings in his presence would not be feasible; or

(b) permit the inmate to be out of court during the whole or any part of the hearing on such conditions as the court considers proper.

14.7 Where, on an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), it is established to the satisfaction of the court,

(a) that the inmate is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (a) of the definition of that expression in section 687 of the Criminal Code and the inmate constitutes a threat to the life, safety or physical or mental well-being of other persons on the basis of evidence establishing

(i) a pattern of repetitive behaviour by the inmate, of which that offence forms a part, showing a failure to restrain his behaviour and a likelihood of his causing death or injury to other persons, or inflicting severe psychological damage on other persons, through failure in the future to restrain his behaviour,

(ii) a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour by the inmate, of which that offence forms a part, showing a substantial degree of indifference on the part of the inmate as to the reasonably foreseeable consequences to other persons of his behaviour, or

(iii) any behaviour by the inmate, associated with that offence, that is of such a brutal nature as to compel the conclusion that his behaviour in the future is unlikely to be inhibited by normal standards of behavioural restraint, or

(b) that the inmate is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (b) of the definition of that expression in section 687 of the Criminal Code and the inmate, by his conduct in any sexual matter including that involved in the commission of that offence, has shown a failure to control his sexual impulses and a likelihood of his causing injury, pain or other evil to other persons through failure in the future to control his sexual impulses,

the court may, by order, direct that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission.

14.8 (1) Where a court directs under section 14.7 that an inmate shall not be released from imprisonment, the inmate may appeal to the court of appeal against the direction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

(2) The Attorney General of Canada may appeal to the court of appeal against the dismissal of an application for a direction under section 14.7 on any ground of law.

(3) On an appeal against a direction made under section 14.7, the court of appeal may

(a) quash such direction or order a new hearing; or

(b) dismiss the appeal.

(4) On an appeal against the dismissal of an application for a direction under section 14.7, the court of appeal may

(a) allow the appeal, and

(i) by order, direct that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law, solely as a result of remission, including earned remission, or

(ii) order a new hearing; or

(b) dismiss the appeal.

(5) A judgment of the court of appeal allowing an appeal pursuant to paragraph 4(a) and directing that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment has the same force and effect as if it were a direction of the court pursuant to section 14.7.

(6) The provisions of Part XVIII of the Criminal Code with respect to procedure on appeals apply mutatis mutandis to appeals under this section.

14.9 Where a court, pursuant to section 14.7, directs that an inmate not be released from imprisonment, the court shall order that a copy of all reports or testimony given by psychiatrists, psychologists or criminologists and any observations of the court with respect to the reasons for the direction together with a transcript of the trial of the dangerous offender be forwarded to the Solicitor General of Canada for his information."

7. Page 2, clause 4: Strike out line 30 and substitute the following:

"4. Subsection 15(2) of the said Act is"

8. Page 4, new clause 8: Immediately after line 9 add the following heading and section:

8. Subsections 24(3) to (5) of the Penitentiary Act, as enacted by subsection 2(2) of this Act and paragraph 9(a.1) and sections 14.1 to 14.9 of the Parole Act, as enacted by sections 3.1 and 3.2, respectively, of this Act shall cease to be in force three years after the coming into force of this Act."

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN NEIMAN,
Chairman

● (1410)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), that the report be taken into consideration later this day.

Honourable senators, I should advise you that two of my colleagues would like to speak to this report later this day. It is not a question of adopting it today; that would not be appropriate at all.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We on this side have no objection to leave being given to consider the report later today. I agree with Senator Neiman that it is advisable that we not attempt to conclude the matter today, and that she may expect the item to be adjourned for further consideration on another occasion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Supplementary Estimates (A), laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 5708).

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration on Tuesday next, June 7, 1983.

Motion agreed to.

● (1415)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-156

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 2, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare, and Science to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-156, intituled, "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3)", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 24, 1983, examined the said subject-matter along with the proposed amendments as outlined by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and now reports that it agrees with the said Bill and with the proposed amendments.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL,
Chairman.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition:) Honourable senators, there are some points I should like to raise in connection with Bill C-156, the subject matter of which has just been reported to the house.

The chairman of the committee reported that the bill had been considered together with certain amendments introduced by the minister. I presume that those amendments have already been presented to the House of Commons and have received the approval of that chamber. If not, perhaps the chairman could enlighten me.

My second point is addressed to the Leader of the Government. Can he tell us what progress this bill is making in the other place and whether it is anticipated that we will receive it before the Senate rises this afternoon?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, in reply to the first question, it is my understanding that the amendments will be proposed in the other place this afternoon. They are the amendments that were proposed in our committee this week, and it is anticipated that they will receive unanimous support, as one deals with maternity benefits and the other with adoption benefits. I believe that all parties in the other place have agreed to them, and it is expected that the bill will reach us later this day.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in response to the second part of Senator Roblin's question, we have good reason to believe that the bill will be voted on in the other place and finally disposed of later this afternoon, possibly some time after 5 o'clock but before 6 o'clock. We believe that is likely to happen, although there is no House rule to that effect. We may suggest that the Senate meet again this evening at 8 o'clock to receive the bill, and then to discuss the disposition of it either later today or tomorrow morning, with the hope that we can have Royal Assent at some time in the middle of the day tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: If we do not receive the bill this afternoon, what is the government leader's contingency plan?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not sure that we have a contingency plan if we do not receive the bill this afternoon, other than to follow the regular procedure. That raises the question as to whether, in that event, we should meet tomorrow. However, there are high hopes that there is agreement between all parties in the other place to dispose of the bill this afternoon and to send it to us by 6 p.m.

● (1420)

Senator Roblin: So I suppose the minister's advice to the senators present is, "Be prepared to meet again at 8 o'clock this evening".

Senator Olson: That is correct.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving budgets and/or supplementary budgets of the following committees:

Foreign Affairs, Subcommittee on National Defence

Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform.

(For text of reports, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I address a question to the chairman of the committee and ask him whether the report respecting the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform includes the question of financing that committee? If it does, is provision being made for the proceedings of that committee to be published in some manner so that they might be available to members of this house and anyone else who might have an interest in the topic?

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, the answer to both questions is in the affirmative.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, but I do not see him in the chamber.

Hon. Jack Marshall: He was here one day this week.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: He is in a grain elevator somewhere.

Senator Sherwood: In any event, I should like to direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In just two months the Farm Credit Corporation has used up the $150 million it had expected would be sufficient for the year to help farmers in financial difficulty. Given that there is still a strong demand for loans, is the government intending to make additional funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when the government is ready to make further commitments to the Farm Credit Corporation for that purpose—and I guess I am giving the usual reply—it will make the announcement. What I do know is that the government initially allocated $50 million to the fund.

Senator Sherwood: $150 million.

Senator Olson: I do not believe so. I believe there was a further commitment, of $100 million, at a later stage. I do not question the honourable senator's assessment that the money has been used up in two months, but I would have to check it out to determine the state of that fund.

I shall transmit the message to the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance and others that there may be an additional demand or a request for a further amount. The ministers involved will have to determine whether or not they will allocate further funding for the purpose the honourable senator has described.

[Senator Graham,]

Senator Sherwood: Honourable senators, it is my information that there is still a strong demand for additional credit. I would appreciate it if the minister would bring back to this chamber, after having discussed the matter with his colleagues in the other place, an announcement concerning the government's intention.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I have already given that undertaking. I shall also ask the Minister of Agriculture, who is the minister responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation, to give us an assessment of the very useful service this fund has provided, along with the criteria for accepting loan applications. Obviously, when you change the criteria as to the qualifications for applicants, it increases the demand significantly.

● (1425)

[Translation]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT WITH QUEBEC PARTICIPATION

Hon. Martial Asselin: My question is for the Leader of the Government. At the Williamsburg economic summit, the Prime Minister of Canada met with French President Mitterrand. It would seem that they have decided to agree on the way to hold a summit conference for all French-speaking countries similar to that of British Commonwealth countries.

Yesterday, apparently, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Quebec's participation in that summit would not be necessary since it might be an economic summit. Now then, we know full well that, at a summit of French-speaking countries, French issues will be the order of the day—that is crystal clear.

Is that underhanded way of excluding Quebec a final decision on the part of the government and, if there is to be such a summit, will Quebec be excluded in advance? Why not look at it as we did when we were in office and decided that Quebec would be a participating government in any summit of French-speaking countries, just as it is with respect to the Cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency? In other words, the Quebec government may take the floor but, if a vote is called, the federal delegation alone may vote.

Has the cabinet decided in advance that Quebec would not attend that francophone summit?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to take that question as notice, although I think Senator Asselin has partly answered it with respect to the terms and conditions under which governments would formally be in attendance and represented. However, to add to what he has said, it seems obvious that a number of French Canadians or francophones from the province of Quebec would also be there as Canadians.

Senator Asselin: Is this a commitment of your government?

Senator Olson: I am not sure of the commitment. As I indicated, I will make the reference, because I wish to ensure, in answering some of the arguments which were advanced along with the questions of Senator Asselin, that I am as precise and accurate as I am in the habit of being.

Senator Asselin: As this is a rather important question for the French-speaking population of Canada, especially those in Quebec, and because it is a regional problem, as Senator Frith would agree, would it be possible for the minister to make a statement on behalf of the government on this important question perhaps next week?

Senator Olson: In making the reference, I will indicate that Senator Asselin would like to have a reply next week, and that might add some urgency to getting the reply back.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—CANADA-FRANCE MARITIME BOUNDARY

Hon. Jack Marshall: As a supplementary, can the leader tell me whether, in the discussions between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of France, there was any furthering of the negotiations between the two countries respecting the effect of the 200-mile fishing limit on St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland, Canada? Does he know what, if any, progress has been made in those negotiations?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will take that question as notice, too, and refer it to the Prime Minister's office. In looking over the documents I tabled earlier today I do not see any reference to that matter, but I believe Senator Marshall's question would be included in that, and to that extent I will take it as notice.

Senator Marshall: Just as an addendum, has there been any development concerning the boundary line between the Province of Newfoundland, as part of Canada, and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon? That has been a bone of contention between the two countries.

Senator Olson: I will take that into account, too.

● (1430)

THE BUDGET, 1983

ESTIMATED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have six delayed answers. All of them are fairly long, and if they could be taken as read I would be happy to proceed in what has almost become the usual manner. I am asking permission to do that today, in any event, and if that is agreed, I will proceed in that manner.

The first is in reply to a question asked by Senator Murray on April 20 last concerning the government's commitment to restrain the trend growth in total outlays to the trend growth in nominal GNP. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

It is unclear what measure of expenditures was being referred to by the honourable senator. However as shown in the April 19, 1983 budget, total outlays are projected to rise 12.7 per cent in the current fiscal year. Total outlays are a relatively comprehensive measure of government spending and the government's commitment to expenditure restraint has focused on this measure of expenditures for many years. The commitment to expenditure restraint has been to restrain the trend growth in total outlays to no more than the trend growth in nominal GNP. The policy has not sought to maintain expenditure growth below GNP growth on a year-to-year basis as this would have the effect of increasing cyclical fluctuations in economic activity. Thus, while total outlays are expected to rise to 23.6 per cent of GNP in the current fiscal year compared to 23.1 per cent in 1982-83, it is recognized that this is related to the weak cyclical situation and high unemployment that currently exist. Over a longer-term perspective, total outlays are expected to decline as a percentage of GNP. Specifically, by 1986-87 total outlays are projected to have dropped to 21.3 per cent of GNP.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The next is in response to a question asked by Senator Flynn on April 20 concerning projects which will be served by the additional $200 million for the special recovery capital projects. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Prior to the budget a lengthy list of possible projects was considered for this program. The additional $200 million allocation increases the number of projects that can be funded from this list. The projects for consideration under this program are being thoroughly evaluated prior to approval: Some have subsequently been added, some have been dropped and some have had their original cost estimates refined. A large number of projects have already been announced. It would not be possible to identify separately which specific projects will be funded by the additional $200 million and which will be funded by the other $2.2 billion.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The third delayed answer is in response to a question from Senator Tremblay on April 20 last respecting the revised budget tables. These are rather lengthy, and perhaps they should be printed as an appendix.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of answer, see appendix "B", p 5710)

INFORMATION COMMISSIONER

INGER HANSEN, Q.C.—CITIZENSHIP

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is in response to a question asked by Senator Roblin on May 31, 1983 concerning the citizenship of Ms. Inger Hansen.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is it yes or no?

Senator Olson: The answer is: Yes. Ms. Inger Hansen became a Canadian citizen on January 11, 1960—twenty-three years ago.

Senator Roblin: Thank you.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—PRINCE MINE, CAPE BRETON ISLAND—REPORTED LOCK-OUT OF MINERS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is in response to a question asked by Senator Muir on May 31, 1983 concerning the lock-out of miners at the Prince Mine on Cape Breton Island.

I am pleased to report that the dispute was settled during the meeting between officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and representatives of the mine workers' union during the morning of Tuesday, May 31, 1983. The miners went back to work at 11:00 p.m. the same day.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

DRUG MANUFACTURING—PROPOSED CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer, honourable senators, is in reply to a question asked by Senator Marshall on May 31, 1983 concerning proposed changes in the compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals. This document is also rather lengthy, and perhaps it should also be printed as an appendix.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of answer, see appendix "C", p 5717)

● (1435)

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, there is an old saying, "When you are right, no one remembers; when you are wrong, no one forgets."

I want to express my thanks to the Leader of the Government. When I think he is wrong I tell him so; when he is right, I tell him so.

Very early the morning after I raised my questions his staff was on the telephone to me with a complete response to the questions I had posed, and they were most co-operative. Again, I express my thanks to him.

Senator Olson: I thank Senator Muir for the commendation of the work done. Although it was done by my staff, it is helpful to know that someone appreciates it.

[Translation]

SALARIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from May 31 the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for second reading of Bill C-160, to amend the Salaries Act.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I only want to say a few words on behalf of the official opposition to point out that we have no objection at all to Bill C-160 now under consideration. We are all aware of the importance of the office of lieutenant governor in every province of Canada. However, we often forget the real role played by lieutenant governors. Of course, the young generation does not view the representative of the sovereign as we did in the past. It still remains that the lieutenant governor has important constitutional responsibilities. It might be advisable to restate them occasionally so that the Canadian people will know about them.

Some of these duties were listed in the other place and I think we should do the same here:

> In his capacity, a Lieutenant Governor possesses the formal powers necessary for the working of the Cabinet or parliamentary Government. Moreover, the Lieutenant Governor has broad discretionary powers which may on occasion be exercised and, indeed, have been exercised. He alone has the responsibility, whatever the circumstances, of finding a Minister who can form a Government. He must be consulted on the summoning and the prorogration of the legislature of each of the Provinces. He must agree to the dissolution of the legislature and the date of an election. He can question and discuss Government policy. He has the power to dismiss a Government for unlawful or unconstitutional actions. He can, in short, refuse to follow the advice of his Ministers if, in his opinion, the public interest requires it. These powers cannot be defined, and while their exercise has been and must necessarily be infrequent, their existence provides the ultimate safeguard of the Constitution.

Lieutenant governors sometimes carry out their responsibilities under difficult circumstances. I can assure you that it is no secret in Quebec that the lieutenant governor, the Honourable Jean-Pierre Côté, has gone through difficult times in fulfilling his duties, since he does not share the ideology of the provincial government. Let me recall very briefly that there was almost a constitutional crisis because Quebec was to be represented at the signing ceremony when our Constitution was patriated. The Lieutenant Governor was given final and specific instructions by the Premier to refrain from attending that event. It will be remembered that the Lieutenant Governor had after consultation, to attend the ceremony in his capacity as member of the Privy Council.

In some circumstances, there will be confrontation between the Lieutenant Governor and the Government of a given Province. We know that Lieutenant Governors are called upon to sign all Orders in Council, which must be examined as to their legal and constitutional validity. It sometimes happens that the Lieutenant Governor is in duty bound to send back to the Executive Council the Orders in Council that do not comply with certain constitutional requirements or do not serve, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, the public interest. It often happens that Orders in Council that have been sent back are amended and changed, and then returned to the Lieutenant Governor.

We could discuss at length the responsibilities of Lieutenant Governors. However, the Bill is concerned with the salaries of Lieutenant Governors. One does not have to be an accountant to realize that current salaries for Lieutenant Governors fall far short of any Klondike. Senator Frith has indicated that there have been but two raises over the last 20 years. At one time, it was $20,000. In 1975, salaries were hiked to $35,000. Recently, I had an opportunity to speak with Quebec's Lieutenant Governor, the Honourable Mr. Côté. He was not impressed by the 6 per cent increase offered by Parliament, however he appreciated that gesture coming from the Canadian Parliament.

I would like to add, since I have quite often met with Mr. Côté in Quebec during his term of office, that he has represented the Governor General in a most dignified fashion. He is very dedicated. He has attended a number of social and cultural ceremonies, and has taken part in artistic and literary meetings. He even discovered new personal talents when he came to Quebec: he has become a knowledgeable painter. Naturally, on several occasions he has visited my region of Charlevoix, one of the most beautiful in the province. He has seen the splendid natural environment and has even exhibited his own paintings, which Quebec art connoisseurs fully appreciate.

Honourable senators, the Official Opposition thinks that this Bill is needed and it has our full support. There is no need to refer it to committee. We are prepared to adopt it this afternoon if the Leader of the Government wants to move third reading. Of course, my comments on the role of the Lieutenant Governor were meant for all lieutenant governors now in office in Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If Senator Frith takes the floor now, he will close the debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I fully agree with the remarks of Senator Asselin, particularly as they relate to our former colleague, the Honourable Jean-Pierre Côté. In light of my own experience and observations, I echo as well the remarks of Senator Asselin concerning the salaries of the lieutenant governors. Since that is all I have to say, I move second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

• (1440)

[English]

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill S-32, to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act, which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. John M. Godfrey moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, when Bill S-32 was introduced in this house it involved what is known as the "revolving door syndrome." Under the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act an inmate is released if he has behaved himself and has served two-thirds of his sentence.

In 1971 the act was amended to provide that the last third of a sentence would be served under mandatory supervision—that is, the released inmate had to report to a parole officer. If he breached any of the conditions of that mandatory supervision, or the parole officer decided he was in breach of his parole, he was returned to the penitentiary to serve the balance of his sentence. It used to be that he could earn the automatic remission of one-third of his sentence still remaining after his return.

Concern has been expressed by the public about offenders who commit other crimes after being released from jail because they have earned automatic remission of part of their sentence after their return because of a breach of a condition of their mandatory supervision.

When this bill was introduced in the Senate it provided that if anyone released under mandatory supervision committed a technical breach of a condition of his mandatory supervision he would be returned to the penitentiary and not allowed to earn any more remission. He would have to serve the balance of his sentence. It was the opinion of the committee that this was rather harsh treatment for someone who was sent back for a mere technical breach of the law, and that in order to be deprived of the right to earn remission he should have committed more than a technical breach of the term of his mandatory supervision; that there should be the commission of an offence and a conviction. The amendment proposed by the committee means that in order for an inmate to be returned to jail without the right to earn further remission he must be convicted of an offence.

While the committee was considering Bill S-32 in its original form, the Supreme Court of Canada rendered its decision that the so-called "gating" was illegal. The government immediately proposed amendments to the committee which gave the National Parole Board the power to gate, which would mean that an inmate who had earned release under mandatory supervision would be, in effect, greeted at the front gate of the penitentiary, wheeled around and put back in again, and would lose his right to be released until he completed the remainder of his sentence.

Here again, the committee felt that the National Parole Board should not have this power because it resulted, in effect, in an extension of the original sentence, the inmate losing the right to a one-third remission on mandatory supervision. They felt that if the inmate had to return and serve the full sentence, it should be by an order of the court. The committee members expressed this opinion rather forcefully and conveyed that message to the minister.

As a result, the minister came back before the committee and changed some of the amendments that he had unofficially approved, to the effect, that if the National Parole Board wanted to gate somebody who is a dangerous offender—and they are the only ones we are concerned with here—then the Parole Board must make the decision that that person is a dangerous offender approximately 90 days before he is to complete his sentence. They then go to the Attorney General, and he has a couple of weeks to decide whether he wants to proceed with an application before the court. They then follow procedure they would have followed if they had, at the time of his conviction, labelled him a dangerous offender. That is one of the amendments now before this house.

● (1450)

Honourable senators, both of the amendments proposed by the committee involve the question of human rights. As I have said before, and as Senator Frith pointed out in the speech he gave on the Senate, the question of human rights should be of particular interest to us, and every bill should be examined with the thought in mind that, if it transgresses human rights, then we should take action. In this case the committee has taken action, as is reflected in the amendments to this bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, as the mover of second reading of this bill, may I, on behalf of all the committee members, express the appreciation of the committee to the chairman, Senator Neiman, who guided us through, as I have said before, some troubled waters in reaching a conclusion as to the final presentation of Bill S-32, as amended, to the Senate.

[Senator Godfrey.]

I should also like to extend my congratulations to all members of the committee for the worthwhile work they have performed over the past five months. The committee covered the whole spectrum of philosophical views with respect to corrections, from the far right, the stern disciplinary view of Senator Robichaud, to the very wise Nova Scotian counsel of Senator Donahoe, to the probably very far left wing view of corrections as expressed by myself.

We heard many witnesses, again covering the whole spectrum of corrections. We heard from the after-care agencies, the Solicitor General and the police associations. The only segment of corrections we did not consult were the inmates themselves, but I suspect they had counsel at the table by the intervention of Honorary Inmate 006 from Saskatchewan penitentiary. In any event, as a result of our discussions and debate, it seems to me that we can now send the House of Commons a very much improved and acceptable bill. As Senator Godfrey has said, the Senate has performed a very worthwhile service.

Essentially, honourable senators, Bill S-32 and the amendments thereto is a legitimate response by a government to the legitimate concern of society about the prevailing acts of violence that seem to be occurring within society.

I digress for just a moment to say that I too am concerned. I detest and abhor violence. I detest it when it is by an individual offender against society; but I detest and reject it even more when it is used by society against the individual offender. That may explain to honourable senators my reaction to the procedure of "gating." You will be happy to know that that is the last word I will have to say on the subject of "gating."

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Never say "never."

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, what we have is a response to violence in society.

As I said, I am concerned. I was concerned in 1970 when I served under Senator Goldenberg on this same committee when it undertook an extensive review of conditional release from penitentiaries. At that time we made very worthwhile recommendations with respect to dangerous offender legislation. Those recommendations, which subsequently became part of the Criminal Code, provided, under certain circumstances and conditions, for the holding in custody for a long period of time, an indeterminate sentence, anyone judged to be a dangerous offender. Quite frankly, honourable senators, when you have a violent offender on your hands, you have a grave, violent problem which is not likely to be solved in any short period of time.

I participated in those discussions and agreed with the recommendations of the committee. There is now power within the Criminal Code to hold violent offenders, as judged by the courts, for indeterminate periods.

It seems to me that the concern of society might be directed to the attorneys general of the provinces who seem to be so reluctant to invoke this section of the Criminal Code. The committee questioned the Attorney General of British Columbia on this, and his reply was that it was very difficult to get a conviction. It is difficult for a very good reason. Safeguards in the legislation provide that, before a citizen is committed to an indeterminate sentence, the court must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he is in fact a dangerous offender.

In 1970 the committee took the action it did with safeguards because it found that under previous legislation—the dangerous sexual offender legislation and the Habitual Criminal Act—many people were being held in custody who were, in fact, not dangerous sexual offenders or habitual criminals. These safeguards are in the code. However, not to seek a conviction because it is a difficult procedure seems to beg the question.

If we are concerned and if society is concerned about the dangerous offender, perhaps that concern should be and could be directed to the attorneys general of the provinces.

The committee also heard evidence with respect to a practice of the legal profession called "plea bargaining." Perhaps our concerns in this regard could be expressed to the crown prosecutors. Faced with the alternative of a 10-, 12- or 15-year sentence for a guilty plea, or a 10- or 12-year sentence plus an indeterminate term as a dangerous offender if found guilty on a not guilty plea, any self-respecting accused would certainly choose to plead guilty. That, however, is the easiest way to do it. That is the quickest means to get the file out of the way: to permit the dangerous offender to plead guilty and get him out of sight for seven, eight or ten years. That is a practice about which we could express our concern.

● (1500)

I think it regrettable that our concern does not extend to what is happening behind the door. We seem to have this idea that all we need do is shut the door and lock it and everything will be fine. We do not seem to have any concern about the prison staff and the conditions under which they are working. In 1978 there were 33 violent attacks on prison staff. Last year there were 114 such attacks, all the result of overcrowding and other intolerable conditions we are asking these dedicated people to work under.

If we are concerned about violent offenders, then perhaps we should be looking behind the door instead of simply buying a bigger lock or, if that does not work, putting on a bigger door.

It is regrettable also that our concern does not extend to the treatment of the violent offender and to what happens behind that door. There is no program for a violent offender. He serves his time in the totally negative, violent environment of maximum security. There is no day parole; there is no temporary absence, because the Parole Board and the custodial officials are reluctant to institute those measures. The dangerous offender is the forgotten man in those institutions. The officials are reluctant to utilize any worthwhile programs because of the risk involved. There is always a risk when dealing with these individuals.

What concerns me more, honourable senators, is the fact that when we have violence in our society we seem to think that all we have to do for an explanation of it is turn to the offenders who are in custody. When there is an act of violence in the community, normally members of the community cannot comprehend it. We cannot understand murder or rape, they are so abhorrent to us. Being unable to understand such crimes, we then seek irrational solutions. Invariably members of the community will say that if the offenders had only been kept locked away, everything would be fine. That view, however, completely overlooks the fact that most of the violence is committed by other than former inmates. Many of the general public do not recognize potential violence when it is among them. How many times have we witnessed violence committed by a respectable neighbour? My point is that not all violence in society is committed by men on mandatory supervision or by former inmates. Yet when we come to seek a solution, we turn to the penitentiary and build bigger doors and bigger locks.

I invite honourable senators to check the statistics on murder. Not all murders are committed by former inmates or by men on mandatory supervision. Our committee was given statistics indicating that in a five-year period 42 murders were committed by men on mandatory supervision. There was a knee-jerk reaction to that in committee, and there was probably a knee-jerk reaction to it in society in general. There were 42 murders committed by men on mandatory supervision, but when those 42 murders are compared to the number of men who have been released on mandatory supervision over the same period—that is, 25,000—and then compared to the number of murders committed in Canada over that same period of time and correlated to the male population of Canada, it can be seen that there is not much difference. Therefore, the problem is really not only one of mandatory supervision inmates.

I should now like to quote from a study on conditional release which was prepared by the officials of the Solicitor General's ministry, the National Parole Board and the Correctional Service of Canada. One of the most comprehensive studies ever carried out in this country, it was completed after many hours of work over a period of two years. At page 100 it states:

> We conclude, therefore, that the prevailing impression of a high incidence of violent recidivism by federal releases, especially mandatory supervision cases, is a distorted one, and the actual rates of successful completion, and of non-violent but unsuccessful completion of supervision, are often overlooked.

If we are so concerned about violence in society, it is regrettable indeed that we can only express our concern by finding new forms of punishment, ignoring the accumulated knowledge of history which shows that there is no correlation whatever between the extent and severity of punishment and criminal activity in society. I can think of no better example to offer honourable senators than that of the death penalty. We abolished the death penalty—that insidious procedure—and what happened? The murder rate went down. What happened to all those murders that were going to be committed if we were to abolish the death penalty? Punishment meted out to the offender has no correlation whatsoever to anti-social behaviour in society.

If we are concerned about violence in society, perhaps—as uncomfortable as it might be—we should look at ourselves. There just might be a correlation between the divorce rate and violence in society. There just might be a correlation between alcohol consumption and violent behaviour. As we seem to have decided to pay the social cost of alcohol, perhaps we might resign ourselves to paying the social cost of the permissive society, which price might be violent behaviour on the part of those members of society who are incapable of adapting to and coping with the permissiveness in which we live.

As I have said, Bill S-32 is a legitimate response to a legitimate concern. But I implore honourable senators not to expect it to have any real effect on violence.

We received this bill on November 4. As Senator Godfrey has outlined, it contained the simple amendment to provide that any inmate released on mandatory supervision who later had that mandatory supervision revoked, either by the commission of an offence or by a decision of the supervising authority, would no longer be able to earn remission and would remain in custody to warrant expiry.

● (1510)

The bill has now received extensive amendment. Honourable senators in their wisdom—and I agree with them—decided that someone on mandatory supervision who does not commit an offence should be permitted to continue to earn remission. The door will not revolve quite as fast. However, someone on mandatory supervision who commits an offence will be unable to earn remission on the unexpired term on which he was serving mandatory supervision.

I wish to say a few words about revocation in defence of parole officers and parole supervision. It is directed to those who are or will be on mandatory supervision or parole. The National Parole Board and paroling officers do not arrive at work on Monday mornings to find ways to sign suspension warrants. When an inmate is released from custody on parole or mandatory supervision, it is not the practice to find ways and means of getting him back in prison. That decision is taken only after a great deal of serious consideration. I have had occasion to investigate many revocations, and I can assure honourable senators that when all the facts were known the revocation was for good and sufficient reasons. I have found the problem to be that the person revoked or suspended does not tell you all the facts.

I remember the case of a young lad who left Calgary and went to Vancouver and was suspended. I thought this was a rather heavy penalty. He had been out of custody for eight months and was doing very well at the University of Calgary. Then suddenly he was found in Vancouver on a weekend and he was suspended. I agreed at the time with the inmate that it seemed quite a severe penalty. I discussed it with the authorities and found out more about it. The young man did not tell me he had bought drugs in Edmonton, or that he had acquired $500 to rent a car and a further sum of money to go on a jaunt to Vancouver. Originally I understood that all he was suspended for was being out of Calgary, but there were many more circumstances that led to the revocation. The step of revocation was taken only after a great deal of consideration by the paroling authority. I have talked to judges, and the most difficult task they have to perform is that of sentencing. Those who think revocation is undertaken easily or quickly are just not living with the facts.

I commend the Solicitor General for the amendments he proposed on behalf of the government, but, with respect to holding an inmate to the end of his sentence, I have to be quite honest and sincere in telling you that I have misgivings about this procedure. I think we should all have misgivings when we consider what happened in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where young Donald Marshall served 11 years for an offence he did not commit. It is repugnant to me to be committing people to custody for an offence they might commit. It is more repugnant to me when I think of our inability to predict violence. I should like to quote again from the Solicitor General's study on conditional release. It states at page 106:

> From an analysis only of violent failures on release, it may seem appropriate to conclude that violence is easily predicted—
>
> Past violence does indeed often appear in the records of persons who commit "spectacular incidents". But not all offenders with records of past violence will commit any violation, let alone a violent one, after release. Further, persons involved in violence do not always have a violent past. Past violence is not, therefore, a reliable sign of approaching violence . . . nor is the lack of a violent past a reliable sign that one will be non-violent in the future. However, greater incidence of violence in the past is associated with higher probabilities of violence in the future, though the certainty or virtual certainty of violence in future is never assured.
>
> There is no very accurate system for predicting violence which has yet to be developed.

I should like to make one further quotation, which is from Mr. Outerbridge, who appeared before our committee on December 20, 1982:

> In addition to this, we are not unmindful of the current state of the behavioural sciences which makes it very difficult for any body made up of human beings to predict with a high degree of accuracy which out of a group of dangerous inmates will be the ones who will commit, in fact, another offence outside.

So we have that uncertainty. We can be certain, from all the knowledge we have available, that we will overpredict, that there will be more men in custody than need be there. I have that concern.

Another concern I have is over the treatment of an offender, which we always say must be fair and equitable. I am wondering what is fair and equitable about an inmate entering an institution, serving two-thirds of his sentence according to the rules society has laid down, and, he having done his part, after two-thirds of the sentence has been served the rules are changed and he is held in custody. I am not certain, but I rather suspect that procedure will be challenged under the Bill of Rights under the heading of cruel and unusual treatment.

Finally I ask what useful purpose is being served by keeping the individual in custody. I remind honourable senators that we are now speaking of a relatively short period. For the 11 inmates who were "gated" the average term would be 20 months. Some of them were as short as three months, some 12 months, eight months or 20 months. That is all you are going to hold him for. What useful purpose is served in holding him there when nothing has been accomplished in the past four, six or eight years? I am in distinguished company when I pose that question. I refer to the Solicitor General and Mr. Outerbridge. On December 20, 1982, Mr. Outerbridge told the committee:

● (1520)

> We also suspended that individual inmate at the gate because we were aware of his known and extensive criminal record. We also were aware, of course, that most of the violence that is committed in the community is committed by people who do not have a record of previous violence, and as a result we are well aware that the action we are taking is not going to have long-term or, to answer Hasting's question, substantial impact on the incidence of violent crime in the community.

The minister, when he appeared before the committee—I need not repeat the quotation placed on the record by Senator Nurgitz—said it was his conviction that the crime statistics would be even worse if we hold men in custody and release them without supervision. It is his conviction that if we hold men in custody and release them cold turkey, the crime statistics will be worse. That is exactly what we do: hold them for the full term until warrant expiry. With respect to what will happen, the minister said, at page 32:14:

> It is, of course, a postponement. It may also be a worsening, in my view, of the chances that the community will be safe from him.

He said it was a postponement, that in his view the likelihood of the community being safe from him were diminished. At page 32:16 he said:

> Nor do I have a lot of faith in the effect of incarceration on a person's behaviour. I am not convinced that the inmate behind bars who wants to get out and make trouble again will be cured by keeping him there longer.

That is exactly what is proposed by the amendment. On the same day, as reported at page 32:20, he said:

> I would be concerned about a policy that would result in more incarceration. I would not mind if I had more confidence in incarceration as a correction.

I share that view. A further 20 months in custody will not provide society with any great protection. To paraphrase a great Canadian, it is short-term gain for a more long-term acute pain. It really is not a worthwhile contribution to public safety.

Despite those misgivings, honourable senators, I will, notwithstanding, support the bill for two reasons: First, as a result of the Solicitor General's amendments with respect to a decision regarding the potential violent offender, there are adequate safeguards that they will not be indiscriminately used, and there is adequate protection of the rights of the individual. First, it has to be a decision by five members of the National Parole Board, and, notwithstanding some of the things I have said about the National Parole Board, I have great respect for the board. The matter is then referred to the Solicitor General of Canada, who has to confirm a referral to the provincial court. It is then appealable to the Court of Appeal in that province on fact and law, and finally it is appealable with leave to the Supreme Court of Canada on law. So there are adequate safeguards.

Secondly, there is the three-year sunset clause. In that time I can think of no better project for me—whether it will be the committee's project, I do not know—than to continue to monitor the information of what has happened to those gated individuals and anyone who may come under this amendment in order to show society exactly what has been accomplished. I suspect, honourable senators, that in three years' time I shall be able to prove beyond any doubt that it matters not whether we release a man after one-sixth of his sentence, one-third of his sentence, three-quarters of his sentence, or at the end of his sentence, because there will be little difference with respect to violence in society; and also that, really, the whole process has not represented a great contribution to public safety.

I hope, honourable senators, that the work of the committee has just begun. Through our hearings we have simply had a small, quick glimpse of the complex and confused process of corrections. I hope that the committee will continue its work when the report of the Criminal Law Committee comes down. Another reason why I will support the bill is that shortly we shall be receiving from the Minister of Justice a complete report on Criminal Law in Canada which will include a whole section on the conditional release of inmates.

In conclusion, I simply wish to say a word with regard to those who work in the field of corrections in our institutions. I wish to express my appreciation to all those people who work in the Canadian Corrections Service, the National Parole Board, the after-care agencies. They work under very difficult, if not impossible, conditions. Our penitentiaries are overcrowded. Classification officers have intolerable caseloads. They are attempting to do an impossible job, of performing a useful service both for us and for the inmate. To the inmates I would say, "Those of you who are working hard and as best you can under difficult circumstances to effect change, you need have no concern or anxiety about Bill S-32". To those who are planning to perform again, I would simply say "Simply take notice and don't bother me in the future".

With those remarks, honourable senators, and with those misgivings with regard to holding a man until the warrant expiry date, I commend the bill for third reading.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, by force of circumstances I was not able to hear everything that Senator

Hastings had to say. He was speaking when I left the chamber, and he was still speaking when I returned; and in the main I found no difficulty in agreeing with that I heard. I believe that I understand Senator Hastings' views because I sat with him in the committee hearings and I heard his views vigorously and forcefully expressed during the time that the bill was under discussion. In some respects I go a long distance with the honourable senator. I agree that it is our duty as a Senate committee to take advantage of every opportunity to see that human rights are guarded and protected. I think that when we deal with legislation concerning prisoners in penitentiaries we must do so in such a way that when we are finished we have not in any way done something to make it more difficult and more dangerous for those charged with the conduct of the institutions. I believe that we should develop a system which serves not only the best interests of the prisoner but the best interests of those who are charged with running the institutions, because to them the matter of remission and the various other things we were dealing with are tools in their effort to control the prison population.

● (1530)

I do not think I am a pessimist, as Senator Hastings gives evidence of being. He says that it will make no difference in three years' time whether a man has served one third of his sentence, half of his sentence or all of his sentence. One cannot help but think, as one sits here and listens to Senator Hastings, that he would be just as pleased if nobody were put in jail. As a young man I had the opportunity of travelling in India. In India, persons who are mentally afflicted are left at large. They are left to walk the streets. There are no sanitariums, asylums or hospitals for such people. The result is that very little of the country's budget is spent on caring for the mentally ill. At least, that was the case then. Later on, some visitors from India came to Canada. Reciprocating the kindness they had shown me while in India, I invited them to come and talk to me. At the time I was the Minister of Health for Nova Scotia, and I spoke to them about the provisions we made for the care of our mentally afflicted and how much was spent on what used to be called asylums—I think they now have a more genteel name for those institutions. The visitors were amazed and suggested that we must have a very high incidence of mental illness in Canada to require setting up these establishments to look after these people. The fact is that we have a very much lower incidence of mental illness, but we take the matter seriously and try to assist these poor unfortunate people. In India this problem is so rife that the easiest way to deal with it is to ignore it. One gets the same sort of impression from listening to Senator Hastings here today.

I know that Senator Hastings is deeply concerned about penitentiary inmates and he is very anxious that they be dealt with in a proper way. I know that he is prepared to fight vigorously to see that their human rights are protected. However, in a matter of this kind there is always a happy medium, and in my opinion we have come as close as possible to striking that happy medium. Widely divergent points of view were expressed on this matter in committee. Some were well over on one side, while others were on the far side. Gradually, they converged. I want you all to feel that the bill we are now recommending represents a very real compromise by many persons who gave very close, earnest, and learned attention to it. Therefore, I am very much in favour of the passage of this bill in its present form.

It was not I who decided that there had to be a bill. That was decided by someone else somewhere else. It was dictated not by us here in the opposition but by another source. It is perfectly clear that if there is to be a bill of this nature, this one is as good a bill as you are likely to get on the subject at this time. I therefore urge all honourable senators to support the bill vigorously, and I now move that the debate be adjourned.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if I may ask Senator Donahoe, who has just adjourned the debate, whether he anticipates that he will continue to speak on the motion when it is called again?

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, my purpose in moving the adjournment is to preserve the opportunity for another honourable senator who may wish to speak.

On motion of Senator Donahoe, debate adjourned.

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

PROPOSALS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, April 26, 1983, the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the Budget Speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on April 19, 1983.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, first of all, let me congratulate the Leader of the Government for taking the initiative of putting this inquiry on the order paper so that honourable senators might have the opportunity to address themselves in a more formal way to the budgetary policy of the government. The previous budgets and economic statements of this government have been savaged by the media and by just about everybody else, so it was understandable that the Leader of the Government would take some pleasure and time in quoting to us relatively complimentary headlines from the nation's press with reference to Mr. Lalonde's budget.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: I have no objection to his doing so; it is perfectly understandable. It would be cruel and heartless to deny Senator Olson the pleasure and sensation he no doubt feels when people stop pounding him about the head and ears about the economic policy of the government. But the most telling and, I believe, most typical headline on the Lalonde budget that the Leader of the Government quoted to us, because it summed up the reaction of so many Canadians, was the headline he quoted from the Financial Post which read, "Return to Sanity". It used to be that governmental sanity was a given in these matters. Now it seems that it is unusual enough to warrant a headline in the newspapers, which the minister considers significant enough to echo in debates in this chamber.

● (1540)

I do say, however, that the minister and other apologists for the government do not help their case and do not help the already shaky credibility of this government, when they make claims for the budget that cannot be substantiated and that will not be realized in the medium or long term.

We have heard it said by Mr. Lalonde, as we heard it said by the Leader of the Government when he opened this debate, that this is "a recovery budget," that this is a "stimulative budget," but the bottom line for thousands of Canadians is the availability of jobs.

There were 10.9 million people at work in 1981; 1982 saw a decline of 359,000 jobs. This year, 1983, according to Mr. Lalonde's own forecasts there will be a decline of 63,000 jobs. While there will be a small increase, according to Mr. Lalonde's projections, next year, the fact is that Mr. Lalonde projects that in 1984 there will be 55,000 fewer jobs than there were in 1981. Some recovery!

You will find employment increasing ever so slowly, according to Mr. Lalonde's own projections, in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987, to the point where it will be some time yet before we can regain the ground we have lost since this recession began in 1981.

If you look at the unemployment figures tabled by Mr. Lalonde—and I refer in particular to table 7 on page 19 of the document entitled The Economic Outlook for Canada—you will find that the Minister of Finance projects an unemployment rate of 12.4 per cent on the average this year, 11.4 per cent in 1984, and 10.7 per cent in 1985. It will not be until 1986 that unemployment will drop ever so slightly below 10 per cent, to 9.8 per cent in 1986 and to 8.8 per cent in 1987. So we have an average rate of unemployment, predicted by the Minister of Finance from 1983 to 1987 of 10.6 per cent. Again I say: Some recovery heralded by this budget!

But I want to point out, honourable senators, that these projections which I have just quoted from Mr. Lalonde's budget represent a best-case scenario, because the employment figures and the unemployment figures assume, as Mr. Lalonde does, real growth averaging over 4 per cent per year to 1987. I know of no other forecasters, nor have I seen any other forecasts, that are as optimistic as the forecast of the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

All analysts, whether they are from the Conference Board of Canada or Informetrica or Chase Econometrics, are agreed on one major point, namely, that the increment of economic growth due to budgetary measures will be minimal. For instance, Informetrica expects that so-called expansionist measures in the Lalonde budget will increase the gross national product in 1983-84 by an increment of 0.4 per cent. In 1984-85, these measures will increase the GNP by 0.3 per cent. In subsequent years, the fiscal measures in the Lalonde budget will have a negative impact on economic growth, according to analysts at Informetrica.

[English]

The increases in taxation Mr. Lalonde has brought in start to bite, start to take effect in 1985-86 and, therefore, Informetrica projects that the Lalonde budget will actually have a negative effect on the economic growth of those years of minus 0.2 per cent in 1985-86 and of minus 0.3 per cent in 1986-87.

In summary, over the period 1983 to 1987 we will have an increment to economic growth of 0.7 per cent as a result of the Lalonde budget and a reduction in economic growth of 0.5 per cent, for a net gain as a result of the so-called stimulative measures in this budget of 0.2 per cent.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: It sounds like "put and take".

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Mostly "take".

Senator Murray: As I have said: Some recovery! Some stimulus this is!

Honourable senators, these projections we have listened to give considerable cause for concern, because while analysts are announcing the end of the recession the question on their minds is, "How long will the recovery last?" By Mr. Lalonde's own projections, it will be the third quarter of 1984 before we have recovered the economic growth that we have lost since the second quarter of 1981. So what will happen then?

I would like to place on record a brief quotation from Mr. Tom Maxwell, the economist with the Conference Board of Canada. These remarks are taken from an interview Mr. Maxwell gave on April 27 on CKO Radio. Speaking of the long-term economic outlook Mr. Maxwell said:

> Essentially, what we see is enough momentum generated to keep us growing into 1984. The question is what happens towards the end of 1984 and into 1985. That I think is where our forecast—

That is, the Conference Board's forecast.

> —and Lalonde's forecast start to part company. Because in our forecast the economy sort of comes to a screeching halt in 1985 and 1986 as the very high interest rates combined with the tax increases associated with the later years of the budget start to put a constraint on growth. So we are looking at growth rates of about 2½ per cent in 1985.

That is a far cry from the much more optimistic scenario painted by the Minister of Finance in his budget.

Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to focus for a moment on the deficit. In his opening remarks in this debate, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, as reported at page 5595 of Senate Hansard, made the following statement:

> The deficit is not a problem in the short term but it could become a problem in the medium term if it is not reduced. The point made by the Minister of Finance—and I am sure that members opposite will agree that it is a valid one—is that when the industrial and commercial sectors have backed out of the financial markets to some extent—and there is evidence that that is so—

SENATOR MURRAY: No wonder.

SENATOR OLSON: —not only last year but in their investment intentions for 1983—then it is appropriate for the government to move in and make . . . those kinds of capital investments now. What it means is that we accelerate and bring forward some of the capital investments which the federal government was planning for later in this decade in any event.

● (1550)

Honourable senators, what the Leader of the Government was trying to do was rationalize, on the basis of some kind of counter-cyclical policy, the obscene deficits that we have had and that are projected into the medium-term future by Mr. Lalonde. That is a lot of nonsense, and the Leader of the Government really must know it. Mr. Lalonde, or his predecessor, came into this recession a couple of years ago with a $10 billion deficit. Unemployment, far from going down, has gone up and, by Mr. Lalonde's own forecast, when we are three years into the recovery we will still be running deficits in the order of $25 billion per year. When the Leader of the Government in the Senate says that the deficit is not a problem in the short term, I must say I wonder what it would take to persuade him that it is a problem.

In 1982-83 we are to have a deficit of $25 billion; in 1983-84, a deficit of $31 billion; in 1984-85, a deficit of $29 billion; in 1985-86, a deficit of $27 billion; in 1986-87, a deficit of $26 billion. The public debt is now at approximately $120 billion. The government says that the country will add $113 billion to that national debt between now and the fiscal year 1986-87. The interest on the public debt at $17.9 billion is the largest single item in the budget. It counts for almost 20 per cent of federal government expenditures and it is perfectly obvious that the government is choking on its deficit and on the cost of servicing the public debt.

They may cook the books this year, and in fact I think most experts feel that Mr. Lalonde has deliberately over-estimated his deficit this year so that he can engage in an orgy of self-congratulation when it is over, or allow himself a fund for some election-year goodies without any apparent increase in the deficit, but the bottom line, as I have said, even accepting Mr. Lalonde's assumptions to 1986-87, is that three years after this projected recovery is supposed to have started and after almost $6 billion in new tax increases have taken effect, the federal government will still have a deficit of more than $25 billion a year.

Once again, these forecasts may turn out to have been optimistic, first of all because Mr. Lalonde's deficit projections assume an average annual increase in government spending of little more than five per cent every year until 1986-87. Anybody who has looked, even cursorily, at the record of this government in controlling costs over its whole life will know that for Mr. Lalonde or anybody else to say that he can keep spending increases to five per cent per year is a pipe-dream.

[Senator Murray.]

In 1982-83 there was an increase of 18 per cent in federal government expenditures. Mr. Lalonde and Mr. Gray say that in 1983-84, the current fiscal year, the increase will be 12 per cent. Even the gullible who believe that he will keep it to 12 per cent will not believe that Mr. Lalonde can cut it in half for each of the next three years.

The second reason why Mr. Lalonde's deficit forecasts in the next three or four years may be low is that his deficit projections are based on an assumption of real economic growth in each of the next three years of more than four per cent. That, as I have pointed out, is a highly optimistic scenario.

The fact that we have to realize is that these huge deficits and the crippling burden of servicing the debt are deeply embedded in our system, and for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to rationalize them as part of some planned, counter-cyclical strategy on the part of the government, and for Mr. Lalonde and his department to go through the contortions that they have gone through to lead us to the same conclusion in this document entitled The Federal Deficit in Perspective is really a lot of nonsense, because the government is choking on the deficits. The deficits are embedded in the system and they are the result of 12 or 15 years of fiscal irresponsibility which the government has no plans to correct.

This is a very serious situation that the next government of Canada will be facing. I hope and expect that that next government will be a Progressive Conservative government.

Senator Frith: The subject of pipe-dreams.

Senator Roblin: You do not have to hope; you can be sure.

Senator Murray: It is obvious that the problem cannot be solved by levying more taxes. Mr. Lalonde has just introduced tax increases of approximately $6 billion to take effect over the next three years. There is general agreement among sensible people that taxes have gone as high as they can go.

There is, of course, the so-called underground economy where, if one can take the examples in the United States and believe what one reads here, there are perhaps billions of dollars that go unreported and untaxed, whereas the average wage earner in this country has his taxes deducted from his pay envelope. This might be an area of inquiry that the two levels of government ought to pursue, and pursue publicly.

It is an old chestnut and may sound simplistic, but I think we should look more seriously at this problem of federal-provincial duplication of services and, therefore, of costs. The question is often asked: Why do we have to have 11 departments of everything? And the answer is probably: Political reality, in a great many cases. However, it is a fact that it is the combined deficits of Ottawa and the provinces that really put pressure on interest rates.

I have a quotation here, that I think is worth reading into the record, from Mr. R. E. Harrison, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce who says:

> Our governments collectively are headed for enormous deficits this year. According to current forecasts, the federal government will need to borrow about $25 billion in 1983, while the ten provinces together will need to raise some $15 billion in financial markets. That collective public sector requirement of some $40 billion represents about 82 per cent of the total savings available in Canada for investment. To understand the magnitude of that demand, by comparison, two years ago governments collectively claimed 39 per cent of available domestic savings to finance their needs.

It should be noted, for accuracy's sake, that not all of this government financing is done in Canada; some is raised in international markets as is some private Canadian borrowing.

These unusually large borrowing requirements by our governments could work against lower interest rates in a number of ways.

The more governments claim of available financial resources, the more they risk "crowding out" other borrowers and pushing up the cost of whatever funds are left to service these other needs, be they corporations, consumers, home buyers or farmers. While it is true that the current recession has severely weakened private demand for funds and thus reduced the short-term risk of "crowding out," the sheer size of collective government demands this year leave minimal room for other borrowers, even in a depressed economy. Should private demand pick up as the economy recovers, there could be renewed pressure on rates.

● (1600)

But beyond this basic issue of supply and demand, there is a very real question of how such large government requirements will affect the psychology of financial markets, so important in determining the direction of interest rates. One important determinant of rates is the confidence—or lack of it—the financial marketplace has in the commitment of authorities to resist inflation and, thus, protect the value of the currency. Having just suffered through a bout of unprecedented high inflation, that confidence has yet to be restored and that is why "real" interest rates—the difference between nominal rates and current inflation—are as high as five per cent, virtually twice their traditional level.

Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate also took some credit on behalf of the government for pre-budget consultations which took place, and particularly with the private sector—

Senator Donahoe: With a zoom lens.

Senator Murray: With a zoom lens, as Senator Donahoe has pointed out.

The fact of the matter is that this is good, but it seems to me that the need for consultation and co-operation on this subject that I have tried to touch on is greater in the area of federal-provincial relations because the burden of government deficits is a major impediment to economic progress, and it will take unprecedented intergovernmental co-operation to lighten the burden permanently. When I say "lighten the burden permanently" I mean just that, because that is what it will take to bring interest rates down and to keep them down so as to permit economic recovery, and to avoid the scenario that was painted for us and that I quoted a few minutes ago from the economist at the Conference Board who predicts that, in a year or 18 months, interest rates will rise again because of the constraints on the financial markets, the size of the deficit, and so forth.

To lighten the burden of these deficits permanently is what is needed in order to give governments fiscal room so that they can meet new needs and carry out their programs, whether they be in the social, environmental or economic fields.

With those few comments in response to the initiative of the Leader of the Government, I propose the adjournment of the debate on behalf of some other senator who may wish to participate at some time in the near future.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, on April 28 I asked permission to withdraw this motion because it was to be replaced by a motion which would be moved by Senator Neiman.

The effect of my proposal was that the committee was to consider whether there may be an infringement of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in a bill.

A new motion, which we have since been given notice of by Senator Neiman, refers this matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

I just noticed that this was on the Order Paper. When I asked permission to withdraw the motion on April 28, Senator Flynn stated:

Honourable senators, since the deputy leader is the one in charge of saying yes or no to these questions, if we can get his assurance that he will support the motion by Senator Neiman, I think I will give leave right away. Otherwise, I think we should wait and see what the position of the government will be on Senator Neiman's motion.

Actually he received no assurances at that time.

I might say that I do not know what the position of the government is with regard to Senator Neiman's motion. I have had an opportunity to discuss this with the Minister of Justice, and while he has reserved his final decision, he is more enthusiastic about Senator Neiman's motion than he is about mine.

I think it is ridiculous to have both motions on the Order Paper at the same time, so I again ask for leave to withdraw my motion so that we can concentrate on Senator Neiman's motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am not altogether sure that I feel easy about agreeing to this, in view of the fact that my leader made a specific request with respect to it.

If it would not inconvenience Senator Godfrey too much, I would suggest that we let the matter stand until Senator Flynn has had an opportunity to give the leave that is required.

Order stands.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"—ADVISABILITY OF IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATION NO. 7—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 10, 1983:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the motion moved in the other place on 27th April, 1983, requesting the government to consider the advisability of implementing Recommendation Number 7 of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science's Report entitled "They Served—We Care", and to certain observations regarding the proceedings of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Veterans Affairs as they pertain to the aforementioned report.

He said: Honourable senators, I apologize for keeping you a little late, but I should like to get this item off the Order Paper, and I think it timely to do so now.

The inquiry which I introduced on May 10 was prompted by a motion moved in the other place by the member for Red Deer, the basis of which centred around the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: They Served—We Care.

That motion was specifically directed to Recommendation No. 7 of that report, which called on the government to "appoint a committee composed of officials from both the government"—the Department of Veterans Affairs—"and veterans' associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors."

Although there were other recommendations in the report, I shall deal only with that one because its implementation would be most useful at this moment in time when our veterans are reaching their twilight years. This also gives me an opportunity to focus attention on one of the more serious inequities in the Veterans' Charter at the present time, that inequity having to do with the widows.

Apart from the fact that the motion indicates recognition of the Senate report—for which I commend that member—two years after the report was tabled certain parts of it are still applicable. I think we should commend the member for Red Deer for introducing the motion and those who spoke in its favour.

I want to comment on the particular merits of the recommendation, coupled with some observations on the debate itself, and while I am sure one can count on the fingers of one hand the number who paid attention to the debate, it was unfortunate that the motion was talked out. That indicates the complacency which exists in too many areas of concern in Parliament—and I shall not refer to the rhetoric of those members whose objective it was to talk out the motion.

For those who may not be aware, the Woods Committee was established in 1965 to survey the work and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission. That committee made 148 recommendations after three years of extensive study, many of which were implemented by the government and which resulted in an improved charter for the benefit of veterans and their dependants. However, some of the recommendations were not accepted by the government of the day, for whatever reasons supposedly justified at the time.

What I want to explain is that all the motion requested was that this committee be established to review the few Woods Committee recommendations that were unacceptable at the time but that perhaps could apply now in light of the countless changes that have been made over the years to veterans' legislation. Indeed, the six recommendations which I am going to refer to apply now.

• (1610)

Naturally, I am one of those who supported the recommendations of the report. What I find so strange about the contribution to the debate from the government side in the other place, who opposed the motion, is that it had the full support of their colleagues in this chamber. Under the very capable chairmanship of Senator Bonnell, and the deputy chairman, Senator Florence Bird, who has now retired, all members of the committee on the government side, and I as a member of the opposition, supported recommendation No. 7. Why they objected to it and "talked it out" in the other place is beyond me.

Furthermore, the Royal Canadian Legion supports the idea, and it stated so both in our committee and in the committee of the other place. The National Council of Veterans Associations, which comprises almost every recognized veterans organization in Canada, also supported it.

Incidentally, other than the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his staff, we only had three witnesses appear before the committee, one being Mr. Cliff Chadderton, the Secretary General of the National Council of Veterans Associations, who is probably the most knowledgeable man on veterans affairs in Canada today. He was the one who supported the idea wholeheartedly and, indeed, worked with the Woods Committee on the report of 1965. Mr. Ed Slater, the service officer of the Dominion Command of the Legion, also testified before the committee, as well as George Giguère, representing an important segment of the ex-prisoner of war population. On the basis of their evidence, the report to the Senate stated:

> In the course of our research and the examination of witnesses your Committee was impressed by the many references to the Report of the Committee to Survey the Organization and Work of the Canadian Pension Commission. This task force, set up in 1965, was chaired by Mervyn Woods and submitted its Report in 1968. A great many of its recommendations were later incorporated in the 1970-1971 amendments to the Pension Act and since then have been credited with having a major and beneficial effect on the treatment of veterans, ex-Prisoners of War and their dependents. On the other hand, many of its recommendations were not implemented. Our witnesses do not think that a massive study of all the legislation and bureaucratic structures dealing with veterans is necessary. They suggest, however, that the Woods report should be reviewed because a number of anomalies and inequities still exist in veterans' legislation and regulations. We agree with this suggestion.

If those who were too ready to be purposely oblivious to the real facts had been sincere enough to find out just what those facts were and the simplicity of the motion, they would have realized that there are only 6 of the 148 recommendations that, in the opinion of everyone concerned with veterans' welfare other than the department itself, should be seriously considered for implementation at this late date in the lives of our fast-dwindling veteran population.

Honourable senators, I know it is the right of members of the government to talk out a motion, but I find it impossible to believe the words that I read in the Debates of the other place. It would be too embarrassing to pick out some of the misconceptions uttered by some members who took part in the debate, except to say that if they had known what they were talking about they would have realized that to accept this motion would only comply with what the veterans want themselves, and for which their representatives stated their support in committee. In my opinion, it would take less than one day to prepare and explain the justification for the implementation of the six recommendations concerned. Cliff Chadderton and Allan Solomon, the former chairman of the Pension Commission, were begging to help us with veterans' problems.

These are the recommendations that were not adopted and should be considered: Recommendation 23 deals with the presumption that a veteran would be physically fit on enlistment. Recommendations 52 and 53 deal with authority to hasten the processing and adjudication of applications. Recommendation 63 deals with the basic rate of pension, which we hear about in both houses almost daily or, at least, in committee, and which the Department of Veterans Affairs is trying to deal with. Recommendation 109 deals with the continuation of a pension for widows following the death of their husbands.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Marshall would put on the record Recommendation No. 7 of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science? I do not believe he quoted it verbatim in his remarks.

Senator Marshall: I believe I did, but for the benefit of Senator McIlraith, I will repeat it. Recommendation No. 7 calls on the government to:

> —appoint a Committee composed of officials from both government and veterans' associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors;—

To return to Recommendation No. 109, it was dealt with quite extensively in the report by Mr. Chadderton. That recommendation deals with the continuation of a pension for a widow after the death of her husband. At the present time, if a married veteran who is receiving a 50 per cent pension dies, his wife receives a widow's pension of $761.38. Before he died they were receiving a pension of $634. After his death she receives 10 per cent more which is fine, but what surprises me is that for each graduation above 60 per cent—and I explain, the widow's pension is considered at 60 per cent—her pension is reduced. For example, a veteran at 100 per cent disability pension and his wife were receiving $1,268.95, but when he dies her pension is reduced by $500. In the case of a couple receiving a 50 per cent pension, when the husband dies his wife receives 10 per cent more. Similarly, there is another category of widow who is receiving less than 50 per cent, and from 50 per cent down to 5 per cent that widow, after the death of her husband, only receives half of the pension, so how can she exist?

• (1620)

Some war amputees whose disability is beyond the 100 per cent level because of their exceptional incapacity receive an attendance allowance which brings their overall allowance up to about $1,500. On the first day of the month following that veteran's death, his widow's allowance is cut down to $761. In order to allow that widow to recover from the shock of her husband's death and to readjust her lifestyle, the committee has recommended that the full pension be continued for a year. The request was for a three-months' continuation, but the committee recommended—and I believe Senator Bonnell will bear me out on this—that it be continued for a full year.

When we asked the minister about this, he told us that he was informed by bureaucrats that it would create another classification of widow. However, to contradict that argument, I would point out that the married recipient of the War Veterans Allowance is now receiving $887 per month. We must bear in mind that the recipient of the War Veterans Allowance is the burnt-out pensioner who was not wounded. When he dies, his widow receives the married rate for a year after in order to allow her to adjust. Yet, when the veteran who is disabled to the tune of 100 per cent dies, his wife's allowance drops right back by $500. That is a very strange situation, and I cannot understand it. It is hypocritical to say that we would be creating another classification of widow. We already have about six different classifications of widow.

The National Council of Veterans Associations has done a study about this because they are concerned with the paraplegic who is cared for by his wife for many years. The wife has never had a chance to obtain employment since she is completely devoted to her husband. The National Council of Veterans Associations conducted a study to find out how long it would usually take a widow to make the necessary financial adjustments to a greatly reduced income after the death of her husband. During the course of the study, the histories of widows whose cases were handled by members of the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada were examined.

It was found that, as a rule, there was a delay in getting the pension for the widow, and so it was decided that three months would be the absolute minimum necessary to ensure continuity of income in the interim. This does not take into account the sort of adjustment that would be required. Funeral arrangements are usually unexpectedly expensive. If a widow is living in a rented house or apartment, her lease will normally run for a year so that she may have to pay that rent for several months at a rate she can no longer afford. If she owns her home and it is mortgaged, she may not be able to carry the monthly payments and yet be unable to sell in three months' time or be forced to sell at a loss. She may not be able to find adequate new housing immediately at the price she can pay. She may not be in a sufficiently stable emotional state to make the required decisions, and her physical health will suffer from the stress of her situation.

Honourable senators, I do not think that is being too emotional. You must keep in mind that the Second World War veteran is now as old as Senator Roblin and myself at 60-odd years, and there are many First World War veterans in their eighties whose wives may soon find themselves in the situation. If there is to be anything humane in Canada, this should certainly be recognized.

I wonder why the minister responsible for the status of women has not raised this matter. It appears that any matter dealing with veterans affairs is left entirely to that department and to interested veterans.

Honourable senators, I would be the last one to say that our legislation is not good. It is probably as good as or better than that of any other country in the world. In the United States where they pay a premium and where this particular situation occurs, a widow in that category is given $10,000 to allow her to adjust. Even in the United Kingdom they allow for a continuation of the pension to the widow for six months. I would point out that their disability pension plan is not as good as ours.

Honourable senators, I agree that there is not too much more we can do for veterans other than ensure that their increases keep abreast of the cost of living. It is obvious that over the past couple of years the legislation in this regard has improved tremendously. Even 40 or 50 years after the war, we introduced the Prisoner of War Compensation Act whereby the veteran who was incarcerated in a prisoner-of-war camp received an extra pension of up to 20 per cent. There is always the need for change because of changing conditions. I remember the words of Dan MacDonald who said, "As long as there is a veteran living, we will always have to watch the veterans legislation."

Honourable senators, the reason I call this matter to your attention—and I know I have the support of Senator Bonnell—is to keep pressing the minister for action in this regard before it is too late. So that we do not forget what is happening in Canada, I should like to conclude my remarks by reading a letter which I received this morning from a widow of a veteran. The letter states:

> I waited for word from—

—and I will not repeat the gentleman's name—

> —but it didn't come. Neither did it come from anyone re possible assistance in making my very existence tolerable. What did come was the word that my time here is limited to a few months, at the most. For me, death will be a welcome visitor. The indignity of having to beg for understanding and compassion will be over. The degrading feeling of uncaring legislators, more interested in legalities than humanity, hurt me more than any physical pain could ever do. Time has run out for me and money can't help me any more.
>
> To you, Senator Marshall, my deepest thanks and appreciation.

Honourable senators, there are probably hundreds of cases like this across the country. This focusses attention on the fact that we should never listen to those people who say that the Department of Veterans Affairs has run out of its usefulness and that we should transfer its responsibilities to the Department of National Health and Welfare. We must always remember. I am pleased that I have an opportunity to focus attention on this subject once in a while. We in the Senate should always try to beg, borrow or steal attention for the remaining widows in Canada whose husbands served their country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think we should all feel proud to be associated with Senator Marshall and his ongoing and faithful concern for the welfare of veterans of this country. He uses his membership in the Senate to focus attention on this subject as well as others.

I was very moved by his intervention and persuaded by the logic behind it and would move the adjournment of the debate. I have nothing to add, but perhaps some other senators may have something to say in this regard. The adjournment will give us an opportunity to confer in order to see if there is some way by which we can turn this inquiry into a resolution or something that may be more fruitful than a number of interventions on an inquiry which will then simply be considered debated.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 3)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-156, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3).

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I am pleased to introduce Bill C-156 for second reading debate. It deals with a number of important amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I might say at the outset that it is very important to my region of Canada, the Atlantic provinces.

Over the last several years there has been a lot of discussion and consultation on a variety of aspects of the UI Act and program. However, the amendments in this bill deal principally with issues requiring only our immediate attention. Quick legislative action is needed to maintain the income protection that unemployment insurance has traditionally provided to Canadian workers. Action is needed to extend the variable entrance requirement until 1985. It will expire, if it is not extended, on June 3—tomorrow.

Action is also needed to reinforce the statutory basis for making UI fishing regulations. Action is further needed to exclude from benefits during non-working periods, usually the summer months, those who are on 12-month contract for service.

Honourable senators, action is also needed on two proposals that have been contemplated and discussed for a long time. Our approval is needed to simplify and introduce more equity into UI maternity benefits and to provide benefits for either of the parents of adopted children.

The government recognizes that it has yet to deal with a number of important issues, such as financing of the UI program, the role of UI in the labour market adjustment, and the nature of UI service to its clients.

These and other issues have been extensively discussed over the past two years, and, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated recently, they will be the subject of review and consultation with interested parties in the coming months as the economic recovery takes hold. The minister has also said that he will be asking the Advisory Council to look into certain aspects of the program. This process will undoubtedly provide the government with useful recommendations on which to base proposals for future and further improvements in the legislation. Before this process can bear fruit, however, and notwithstanding the provisions of this bill, the minister has asked the commission for ways to apply the UI Act and regulations more flexibly and compassionately. The commission is moving to review several areas of the law with a view to focusing its administrative procedures on more humane and efficient service to claimants.

In the meantime, the amendments contained in this bill do call for urgent attention. As honourable senators know, we have already studied this bill and the proposed amendments in the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. Witnesses, including the minister, were heard on Thursday last. The verbatim report of the proceedings of that meeting was received in our offices on Monday of this week. The actual report of that committee in support of the bill was received by the Senate earlier today.

Bill C-156 reaffirms the government's commitment to maintain income protection for those many thousands of our fellow citizens who are now without jobs. It proposes, among other things, to extend the variable entrance requirement for a further 24 months to June of 1985. It is important that we understand the significance of this provision. Without it, unemployed workers claiming UI benefits would need 14 weeks of insurable employment to qualify for UI, whether they live in an east coast fishing village or a major metropolitan urban centre, and whether the unemployment rate where they live is 12 per cent, 8 per cent or less. With the limited job prospects in many Canadian communities, a fixed 14-week entrance requirement would mean immeasurable hardship for thousands by preventing them from qualifying. The continuation of the variable 10- to 14-week requirement will help avoid this.

● (2005)

Since 1977, the variable entrance requirement has allowed the UI program to reflect local labour market conditions more accurately. It has enabled UI to respond to varying unemployment rates at the very moment that people apply for benefits. In short, the variable entrance requirement gives the UI program the flexibility to take into account the relative difficulty unemployed workers have in finding jobs in the various regions of Canada. I am sure honourable senators will agree that this provision deserves renewal for a further 24 months. If it were not renewed some 100,000 Canadians would be prevented from claiming unemployment benefits over the next year.

The UI program has for many years provided special support to a group of Canadian workers who are the foundation of an entire industry. I am referring, of course, to the highly seasonal fishing industry, particularly of the Atlantic coast. This bill reinforces the commission's ability to make specific regulations for fishermen. This must be done because of a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of an appellant named Vicky Silk. The Supreme Court upheld a 1981 decision of the Federal Court of Appeal that said the UI Act does not contain authority for the commission to require a shorter qualifying period for fishing benefits.

Since fishing benefits were introduced in 1957 it has been the norm to keep UI rules for fishing benefits consistent with the seasonal nature of the industry, and with the fact that fishing benefits shall be available as an exception to a group of self-employed workers. In this context, a shorter fishing qualifying period and the benefit period limited to the non-fishing season have always been basic to the program.

This bill would restore UI's fishing benefits program to the status quo and remove any statutory ambiguity about the commission's power to make special UI rules for an important and very special group of workers. It would reaffirm the power that Parliament intended the act to convey in the first place. It ensures that all decisions on fishing claims made since the Federal Court of Appeal decision will be confirmed, and that benefits paid to claimants since then are maintained.

However, we should also note that this provision would allow for positive action on the recommendations of the Task Force on Atlantic Fisheries. Changes arising from those recommendations would, among other things, have a positive impact on inland and other winter fishermen by allowing them to be eligible for UI in their non-fishing season. This would apply in cases such as the ice fishermen of northern Manitoba.

The amendments I have described strengthen the ability of the UI program to protect the foundation income of workers who become unemployed.

Let us move now to the provision that would give the commission clear authority to prohibit paying benefits during a non-working period to people in employment covered by a 12-month contract of service. These contracts provide for specific periods of work and non-work. The UI program was designed to pay claimants who lose earnings because of lost jobs. Those working under an annual contract of service are considered by UI to be fully employed while the contract is in force, whether or not they are actually performing their duties.

[Senator McElman.]

This proposed provision means that such workers would not get UI benefits when they are not working.

● (2010)

For example, many teachers do not perform their normal duties over the summer months, but are still covered by their contracts for those months. Clearly they should not be considered unemployed in the same way as workers who are laid off. Others with similar contractual circumstances include marine captains, navigation pilots and professional athletes.

The full ramifications of the current situation can be understood by the situation of the teachers. If Canada's 200,000 teachers were to claim UI benefits for their annual summer break this year, it would cost the UI Fund between $300 million and $400 million in 1983 alone.

This provision confirms the commission's power to make special regulations preventing the payment of UI benefits in such non-working periods. This is necessary because of a recent Federal Court decision questioning the commission's power to do this. It was in the Anderson case that the decision was made. This provision does not change the manner in which the commission has administered the UI program over the years. It simply reinforces the statutory power to prohibit paying unwarranted benefits.

This bill represents the government's commitment to maintaining UI's income protection role; but it does more. Two other provisions, perhaps the most dramatic and forward-looking, reflect the commitment to increase that income protection wherever it is practicable and desirable. These two provisions recognize the vital contribution that certain individuals and groups make to the wellbeing of the most basic unit of our way of life, namely, the family. They remove some inequitable and unnecessarily complex barriers to providing UI benefits to pregnant women, and they provide for the institution of benefits for adoptive parents.

Let me deal first with adoption benefits. Either parent of an adopted child will be eligible for 15 weeks of adoption benefits after the child arrives in the home. Payment of benefits would follow the usual rules for special benefits. Parents would need at least 20 weeks of insurable employment in the last 52 weeks before their claim, the same as for sickness and maternity benefits. Only legal adoptions would be covered.

As many honourable senators are aware, UI benefits for adoptive parents have been discussed for a number of years both inside and outside Parliament. Consultations on the subject were extensive after publication of the July 1981 report of the Task Force on Unemployment Insurance. Out of those and other discussions a consensus took shape recognizing the critical role of quality post-adoption care in the welfare of adopted children—what Senator McGrand would refer to as the "bonding process."

The government recognizes that extending UI benefits to adoptive parents is consistent with providing UI benefits for natural mothers. It is only reasonable to give adoptive parents the time needed to smooth out their child's post-adoptive adjustment. Not only is this reasonable, but it is often considered mandatory by various adoption authorities.

This provision would provide reasonable income protection to adoptive parents and help ensure a basic adjustment period for the child or children.

Honourable senators, let me now draw your attention to another major provision contained in this bill. It corrects some of the inequities and rigidities in the current legislation on UI maternity benefits. By doing this it significantly enhances the income protection of women under the Unemployment Insurance Act, a long overdue reform. Currently, a pregnant woman can only be eligible for maternity benefits if she passes three tests of eligibility. First, she must have an interruption of earnings; second, she must have the 20 weeks of insurable work that I have already mentioned; and, third, she must have worked at insurable employment at least ten weeks between the thirty-first week and fiftieth week before the baby is due.

● (2015)

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: And she must be pregnant.

Senator McElman: Presumably that would be required. The bill eliminates the so-called "magic ten rule." The original intent of this rule was to provide proof that a woman was working at the time of conception. However, it has been seen as unfair to women who have a long, consistent work history but who do not happen to meet the rule. By removing it the bill only requires female claimants to show that they have the same work history—20 weeks of insurable employment—as those who claim UI sickness benefits.

Another aspect of the current legislation that is perhaps unduly complex and restrictive for women is section 46 of the act. It prevents a pregnant woman who cannot qualify for maternity benefits from getting regular or sickness benefits from eight weeks before the expected birth week to six weeks after. This rule was based on the notion that claimants incapable of working should not be paid benefits and that, therefore, pregnant women, who were assumed to be incapable of working, should not receive benefits. But in the 1980s the reality is that many pregnant women are capable of working, and do in fact work, almost until the birth date. Many are not incapacitated during pregnancy and should, therefore, have the right to apply for benefits the same as others. The bill recognizes this reality by eliminating section 46 and enabling a woman to get regular benefits during this period. Such a claimant would simply have to show that she was unemployed, that she was capable of working and available for work.

One other unnecessarily restrictive rule says that a claimant who uses up the first 15 weeks of regular UI benefits cannot switch to maternity benefits. That is because maternity benefits can only be paid in the first 15 weeks of the benefit period. This bill makes maternity benefits more flexible by allowing women to take these 15 weeks at any time in the first so-called initial phase of the benefit period.

Honourable senators, these proposed changes are something of a milestone in social insurance legislation for women. They make the compliance rules for UI maternity benefits simpler to understand and acquire. They make the rules more equitable and more flexible so that working women are treated more fairly under the act and are not unduly restricted from getting UI benefits of any kind. Taken together, these amendments clearly benefit many thousands of Canadians who need effective protection from the loss of income due to unemployment.

In an unusual display of unanimity and co-operation, the other place today passed Bill C-156 through its several stages. I ask the support of all honourable senators in giving similar approval this evening in order that the urgent provisions may remain in force after tomorrow, June 3, and so that the remaining provisions may be made effective on January 1, 1984.

Hon. David Walker: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator McElman: Go ahead.

Senator Walker: Did he write this speech himself and, if not, who wrote it for him?

Senator McElman: I do not know the relevance of the honourable senator's question but, of course, I am always happy to oblige such a genial gentleman.

Senator Walker: It depends on whether or not it is of any interest.

Senator McElman: Did the honourable senator want to make some further comments or does he want an answer?

Senator Walker: Go ahead.

Senator McElman: Good. Then, be quiet. The notes for this speech came from the department. In no sense do I put myself forward as an authority on hardly anything, let alone the unemployment insurance plan for Canada, which is very complex. There are people such as Senator Walker who have great and brilliant minds, and who understand all these things, but I am a poor country boy.

● (2020)

I have here ten pages, double spaced, of typewritten notes containing many changes in ink, reflecting your humble and obedient servant, Senator Walker. I would not pretend to suggest that I could do any of this without assistance from the departmental people.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, it is my duty to reply to the introduction by Senator McElman of Bill C-156, and despite the fact that some of his notes might have been prepared by somebody else, it is very obvious that he has studied the matter carefully and has arranged it in chronological form so that it can be followed very easily.

The amendments are pretty straightforward, as described by some of my colleagues in the other place, and really are motherhood issues as far as some parts of the country are concerned.

To explain our party's position on the bill would be repetitive, but I have an observation to make on the first amendment which has to do with the variable entrance requirements for claimants of benefits, and what served well in the past in those areas of unemployment. The thing that bothers me is that here again is a bill given to us in the Senate with a deadline. I was interested to read in the papers the other day where the Minister of Employment and Immigration obtained an agreement from the opposition parties in the other place to pass this bill in one day. Nobody, however, had the common courtesy to ask us here if we could do the same thing. Maybe our workload is different, but it is true that, in the past, this has always been the case; there is always a deadline. I do not know how long they had the bill there, but evidentally there was an agreement. If it were not for our method of pre-study in the Senate, we would have received the bill before the ink was dry and would have been expected to pass it in its entirety because it suited the schedule of the other place. This is wrong, very wrong.

Thankfully, however, some wise senators in this place introduced this pre-study method, and this did give us the opportunity to study this bill last Tuesday. Most members of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science who dealt with the bill were, therefore, able to question the minister and his very capable staff on the various aspects of the bill.

The bill will now continue in its present form as it was introduced in 1977 to maintain the qualifications for unemployment insurance benefits from 10 to 14 weeks. Recently I was looking at some papers from 1968, when I first entered the House of Commons, and it was dealing with unemployment insurance benefits. At that time to qualify for benefits a recipient had to have 30 weeks of insurable employment before he could receive benefits under the UI program. One would have hoped that 15 years later the economy would be such that, rather than having to change the bill to suit a situation of unemployment in Canada, we would have had a better economy and would not have had so many unemployed and would not have had to spend so much money in a situation of deteriorating unemployment.

● (2025)

Coming from an isolated area and a poor part of the country, as I do, I support this amendment because to revert to the 14-week entrance requirements would create an immeasurable hardship for thousands of people. Although by reverting to that 1977 category we would save some $500 million, it would be saved at the expense of the many unemployed people of this country and would create an emotional hardship to them and a burden to the social assistance costs of the provinces.

After the committee stage of the bill, honourable senators, it was interesting to note—and Senator Bonnell asked questions of the minister and his staff on this—the data as to beneficiaries in 1983.

In the letter we received from the minister, he indicated the sad tale that, according to preliminary data for March 1983, there were 964,958 male U.I. beneficiaries and over half a million female beneficiaries, for an overall total of a million and a half. This number was down from February, but was still an alarming figure. What struck me was the fact that there were 458,548 beneficiaries under the age of 25. Now, having that many young people on unemployment insurance—and they could only have worked for the shortest period of time—creates a problem that requires drastic measures to correct. We have to wonder what is happening to our country when we have half a million unemployed people under the age of 25. People in that age category will form our future citizenry and will have to produce the leaders of our country, and so I hope the wise minds in society will be able to introduce an effective recovery that will change this situation and put many thousands back to work.

The second amendment, honourable senators, I agree with since I come from a fishing area. That amendment provides flexibility in the regulations and will allow for assistance to supplement the incomes of fishermen and provide a small measure of stability. Thankfully, although the bill came upon us so quickly, I had the opportunity to discuss fishery problems with my colleague from the other house, the Honourable James McGrath, a former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He handled the bill in the House of Commons for my party. It is obvious from his advice that this amendment will help the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, as described by Senator McElman.

It is interesting to note that unemployment insurance for self-employed fishermen has existed since 1957, and from its inception has cushioned the financial effects of seasonal unemployment and unstable fish stocks and has provided substantial cash transfers to the entire Atlantic region.

It is also interesting that the role of unemployment insurance payments in affecting regional income transfers is illustrated by the fact that in 1982, if my arithmetic is correct, approximately $94 million was transferred to the Atlantic region alone. Thank God that that was the case, because I do not want to think about what the situation would have been had they been unable to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

So the amendment, besides putting into effect some of the recommendations of the Kirby Task Force, re-affirms and strengthens the government's power to make special regulations to promote stability in the fishing industry in the Atlantic region.

I would be repetitive if I indicated some of the other amendments that were in the various papers relating to the bill, but one of the good features is that, when the fishing season is bad, fishermen can do other things, such as repair boats and mend their equipment, yet still qualify for benefits because that work is not considered employment in the true sense of the word.

● (2030)

Turning now to the new amendments which were passed today on which we did not have too much information, it was interesting to note—and, luckily, I was in attendance at the committee meeting so I heard the minister and his officials—that the amendments deal with benefits for adoptive parents and maternity benefits. Without repeating what Senator

McElman said, as I indicated this afternoon this gives me another opportunity to talk about the work done with reference to the report They Served—We Care which put strong recommendations forward that would help Canadians.

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, which produced the report "Child At Risk," recommended maternity benefits and benefits for adoptive parents, and credit goes to Senator Bonnell, Senator McGrand and other members of that committee. It indicates that we are doing useful work here, because now the government realizes that the Child at Risk report had some good recommendations that are now being implemented.

I should like to read an interesting news release of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which brought to light some telling observations on some of the amendments and, particularly, on the maternity benefits. While I agree that it is logical that they should receive these benefits, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce had this to say:

> The Canadian Chamber of Commerce believes the proposals to ease maternity benefit rules and to extend the program to adoptive parents may be seen as an attempt to win political points while having working people and businesses pay the price.
>
> The estimated expense of $150 million would create no jobs in the private sector but would have to be paid by every employee and employer. It is felt, as well, that the cost figure given may be lower than would actually be the case.
>
> The proposals and their method of introduction will be seen as little more than political opportunism and are inconsistent with the constructive initiatives taken by the Honourable Marc Lalonde in his Budget of April 19th.

The following is what I should have read:

> If the federal government wishes to assist men and women in maternity benefits then it should be prepared to put the program under the proper banner—not the unemployment insurance system.
>
> Unemployment insurance must become an insurance vehicle for tiding people over unpredictable periods of unemployment and not simply a catch-all for political programs—regardless of their merit and desirability.
>
> Working people could have more take-home pay and businesses could recover faster if the authorities refrained from loading social benefits into the insurance facility.

That is something to think about, although with the economy the way it is I have no hesitation in supporting the amendments, and, hopefully, when we get a new leader in the Progressive Conservative Party, who will probably be the next Prime Minister of Canada, the economy will recover and we will not be paying out money but putting it into the hands of those unfortunate people who are without work in order to give them an opportunity to maintain a decent standard of living.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise first of all to support Senator Marshall in his view that this bill ought to carry, and also to say that the concept and the principle of unemployment insurance is one of the basic factors of our economic structure as well as an enormously valuable one, the improvement of which will generally be regarded as a good thing. Certainly it is with me.

• (2035)

I want to pursue a little further one of the points raised by Senator Marshall and link it with a comment made by Senator McElman when he introduced this bill, speaking as he did about the plan that apparently is afoot to re-examine some aspects of unemployment insurance to make it more suitable for present-day conditions. That is a point to which I wish to address myself because I think it is a task that ought to be undertaken without delay.

When we look at the bill before us this evening, we notice that there will probably be some increase in expenditure because of these amendments. I am not thinking so much of reinstating the rights of fishermen and others, which has probably been budgeted for already, but of the extension to married women and to those who are adoptive parents. I in no way object to that, but I say that it will probably alter the financial balance that was presented to us in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance respecting the financing of unemployment insurance.

I recall, and Senator Marshall has alluded to this, that on January 1 of this year there was a substantial increase in the unemployment insurance levy paid by employers and employees in the country. On January 1 of this year unemployment insurance premiums were substantially increased. For the average working man they were increased by $184 per year, and for the employer of that man they were increased by $160 per year.

Percentage-wise these are very substantial increases. In the first case, it went from $420-and-some-cents to another $184. I have not worked out the percentage, but quick mental arithmetic indicates it is at least a 33-1/3 per cent increase. In connection with the employer, it went from $300 to $460, which is a 50 per cent increase. If anyone had tried to increase any other tax in this country by that amount, I think there might have been a considerable uproar about it because it is a tax; it is a payroll tax. It is an additional payroll tax of $324 for every working person in the country, and that has an effect on this economy which we will have to take into account.

I mention that because, according to the figures given by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, the contribution that employers and employees made to unemployment insurance in 1982 was $4.8 billion. The minister calculated what it would be in 1986, which is some three or four years away. At that time employers and employees will be contributing $11.3 billion—an increase of about 225 per cent.

At the same time, the government will also increase its contribution. In 1982 its contribution was $1.784 billion, and its contribution in 1986 is expected to be $2.5 billion in round terms. That is an increase of about 142 per cent.

Honourable senators, we can see that over the next few years we are looking forward to an enormous increase in the levy of unemployment insurance on workers and employers, from $4.8 billion to $11.3 billion, and an increase in contribution on the part of the government from $1.7 billion to $2.5 billion. It is obvious from that comparison that the employers and the employees will certainly be paying the greater share of the increase, not the government in the general tax revenues.

These figures are based on the projected rate of growth in the gross national product that the Minister of Finance indicated in his budget speech was a 4.2 per cent increase in GNP over the period, which is considerably higher than some people are willing to settle for. I think it will be lower. However, let us hope that he is right and that we do get that kind of economic progress over time and that, consequently, unemployment is affected accordingly. But even if that is the case, we can see that there is going to be this enormous increase in the levy on employers and employees to pay for unemployment insurance and a much greater increase, in actual dollars and on a percentage basis, than the government will be asked to provide.

● (2040)

I think this is a matter that requires some consideration. The reason I say that is because the economic effects of a payroll tax are considerably different from the economic effects of taxation on the general revenue. In the case of the payroll tax, both the employee section and the employer section, I submit, become part of the wage bill for the particular industry. At the manufacturing basis where we will start, for example, there is a markup in order to get the finished price of the manufactured product, which marks up the tax contribution that has been paid. That is pursued, I think, through the wholesale and retail levels as well. Therefore, if there is imposed a wage tax at the bottom of the scale, as is done here, it has a multiplier effect by the time the price reaches the consumer. On the other hand, one can at least make the argument that money taken from the general revenue, as opposed to a wage tax, does not involve this same multiplier effect which I have described.

It may be said that that is all very well, but we still have unemployment insurance and we still have to pay for it somehow, and that is a pretty reasonable way of doing so. The point I want to make, however, and the matter that I think needs some further study, is that the whole problem of unemployment has changed over the last 10 years since unemployment insurance was begun. I think it has changed drastically over the last two years. We are into a new era and we have a new kind of problem to face. No longer are we concerned solely with seasonal unemployment for the fishermen in Newfoundland and in other places; no longer are we concerned with cyclical unemployment which affects the people in the manufacturing industry in central Canada and in other places; but we now have a new component. That component is structural unemployment. It has nothing to do with the old-fashioned idea of protecting a man who is on short-term work or whose unemployment is for a short period of time because of cyclical or seasonal reasons. We are dealing with people who are unemployed because the structure of society has made them unemployed.

[Senator Roblin.]

Even if it is said that a payroll tax is a good means by which to finance this, one has to ask whether it should be extended beyond the seasonal and cyclical burdens to take care of the structural burden as well. That is an important matter. I say that it is important because the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—I believe that is the gentleman concerned—has somebody in his department who has prepared a pretty pessimistic forecast about the course of unemployment in this country. We have not yet heard who this individual is, because I think he has been a little shy about producing the document. At any rate, it was pointed out that, in the opinion of that person, the structural unemployment is going to be an enormously difficult thing to handle.

I am not one of those who believe that that document is an accurate reflection of what we may expect, because although it is very easy to be aware of what jobs we are going to lose, it is a much more difficult proposition to have the imagination and foresight to see what jobs we are going to gain. We do know that, over time, however, there has been a development of our economic life which helps to make good on these jobs that are lost for technological or structural reasons. Over the next little while, however, I think we are going to find that we have a time gap here that has to be bridged.

Mr. Darcy McKeough, a former Treasurer of Ontario, made an interesting speech yesterday in Toronto in which he dealt with this subject. While he was not as pessimistic as the unknown report writer in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, he did underline the fact that there are thousands of people, at our pace of economic growth, who are not going to return to the jobs they had before.

The point I am trying to make is that structural unemployment is really with us and will probably continue to be for some time. If we consider the estimates of the Minister of Finance regarding unemployment over the next few years, as presented in his budget, we will find that we have to go five or six years down the road before we get below 10 per cent unemployment. I think that is a clear indication that even he expects a considerable amount of structural unemployment in the mix during the forecast period.

Honourable senators, that brings me back to unemployment insurance and the means by which we finance it. I would think that one could make a strong argument as regards seasonal unemployment and as regards cyclical unemployment to the effect that financing it on an insurance basis with the wage tax has a considerable amount of merit. It is a practical way of approaching the problem. But when the system is overloaded by taking on the structural unemployment problem, which has nothing to do with the employers or workers of Canada but is something quite different altogether, and when some of the social redistribution which is creeping into unemployment insurance—which may be good in itself—is taken into account, it seems to me that neither of those two classes of expenditures should be financed by a wage tax. Personally, I think many of them are good. If we are to have them, I think they should be financed by means of the general revenue of the government rather than the way in which it is done now. In my opinion, it makes a difference which way you do it. If the wage tax is overloaded, all you do is add to the costs of production, with all of the effects that flow from that in respect of our competitive position abroad and in respect of our own consumption here in the country.

I was glad, therefore, to hear Senator McElman hint—perhaps he did more than that—say that this question of re-examination of the unemployment insurance concept was in the works. I think that is a good thing. I do hope that, when it takes place, an examination will be made of the merits of separating from the wage tax system of support the system of support that is required for the structural unemployment that we have in this country and the system of support for those social redistributive measures which are creeping into the unemployment insurance system which are not really part of insurance at all but are something else. It seems to me that the advantages of looking into this system of financing are self-evident, and that we may be doing ourselves and the country a considerable service if we can determine which part should be paid for by the wage tax and which part should be paid for by the general revenues of the country.

When we consider the whopping increase that we had on January 1 of this year, and, although I do not wish to prophesy, when we consider the possibility of further increases of a similar nature related not to the regular concept of insurance but to the structural and social reasons, then I think we are going to be placing upon industry a burden which is not, perhaps, properly and equitably theirs to handle. I think that it would be in the public interest if we devised a more logical and rational system of financing unemployment insurance.

That is the point that I wanted to make in connection with this bill. If, at some time in the future—perhaps in the next Throne Speech—Senator McElman could write a paragraph that would include a study of the unemployment insurance concept, he would make me very happy.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Will the honourable senator permit a question? He made reference to the multiplier effect on the cost of production when employer and employee contributions were increased. Are those contributions not tax deductible, however, and do they not consequently lessen the impact that they would otherwise have?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wants to say that it affects the profit of the company, I think one has to say that it will affect the profit of the company. The point I want to make, however, is that these costs are built in and they are not completely passed on to the public treasury, no matter how you slice it, because no company pays 100 per cent tax. The most that is paid is 54 per cent, and a great many companies pay considerably less than that.

Therefore, the principle that I am espousing, that these are true costs within the business—they become built into the cost structure, and the multiplier effect can be seen in the way in which they are included in the cost structure—is correct. It is the same situation with regard to federal sales tax. The federal sales tax goes in at the manufacturer's level and everybody adds their bit on as it goes up the pricing scale. Yet with regard to the province that puts in a retail sales tax at the consumer level, that multiplier effect does not apply. It is the same kind of argument.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I rise for a few moments to give my support to this bill, because it does affect the fishermen in my area and it is putting into effect the recommendation of the Kirby Task Force, whereby the fishermen are able to draw benefits on their best 10 weeks of fishing rather than on the average of the last couple of years. It also guarantees, by becoming effective before June 4, that half a million Canadians or so will not lose their unemployment insurance benefits next week.

• (2050)

The main reason I support this bill is because of the two amendments that are before us this evening. As Senator Marshall said, people are taking notice of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science when they talk about They Served—We Care, which he spoke about so eloquently this afternoon, and our other report, Child At Risk, in which we made two strong recommendations to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Senator McElman mentioned that in 1981 somebody made a recommendation which the Unemployment Insurance Commission listened to. Let me tell you, honourable senators, that the Senate made that recommendation in 1980, and probably the other recommendation was copied from ours.

In October, 1980, we made two strong recommendations. One was that adoptive parents should be entitled to unemployment insurance just as much as a mother who had a new-born baby, because that process of bonding was necessary in order to give the child the parental love and guidance that the child needs in the first few weeks in its new surroundings. Now the minister has accepted that proposal and has added it here as an amendment, which I think is worthwhile. The second amendment has also been accepted, whereby the maternity benefits are now much easier to obtain.

Probably the greatest amendment of all was not mentioned by Senator McElman, and that is the one whereby a woman who is going to have a baby can draw her 17 weeks of benefits after the baby is born. But if she has an immature or premature baby, or a handicapped child, who has to stay in hospital for two or three months, she can take one or two weeks and then save the other weeks and go back to work; and then, when the baby comes home, she can take the other 15 weeks later on. Previously, when she started her unemployment insurance benefits for maternity leave she had to have 15 continuous weeks. She can now take a break, go back to work while the baby is still in hospital, while that immature or premature baby is getting big enough or old enough to go home, and she can now take a further week, or whatever is left of her 17 weeks, to be there to bond with that child, to give that child the love and care it needs. To me, that is a tremendous amendment, which we recommended in Child at Risk.

For those two reasons I wanted to stand up and support this bill. Senator Marshall said this bill is motherhood. I would say that this bill is more motherhood than most bills, because it protects the mother of the child; it protects the mother who has an immature or premature baby; it protects all mothers, even adoptive parents. I believe that is one reason why all parties in the other house were able to agree in one day to pass it through three stages, and why I am quite sure we in the Senate can do the same thing. For that reason, I pass on that piece of information.

I should like to add that one of the things the minister, or somebody from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, told us was that a one cent increase in the premium means $30 million revenue a year for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It does not take very much of an increase in premium to make a substantial increase in the revenue to the commission, because it is apparently a very big fund and multiplies very quickly.

With those few remarks, honourable senators, I support the bill.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator McElman speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, first of all I should like to thank Senators Marshall, Roblin and Bonnell for their interventions in this debate.

Let me say immediately that I share the feelings expressed by Senator Marshall about the lateness of arrival of this bill in the Senate, with the deadline attached to it. We are faced with this situation far too often. Perhaps in this case we can take into account the very special circumstances that appear to prevail in the other place just now, which make this a little different from some of the other occasions when we have had to face such deadlines. Of course, it would be quite inappropriate for me to be critical in debate of the conduct of its business by the other place.

Senator Marshall referred to the published reports of the reaction of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to the maternity benefits and the new benefits for adoptive parents. I note that their objection, as far as I could determine from reading those reports, was not to the principle of the amendments but to their cost. I can understand the Canadian Chamber of Commerce expressing such opposition for their constituent members. However, I stress that they did not come out against the principle involved in these two amendments.

Senator Roblin has quite properly referred to the wish, that I am sure all of us share, that the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and particularly the department, look for ways to improve the program and the act. I should point out that under the present minister some rather imaginative steps have been taken to use the unemployment insurance fund and the act in a fashion that has never been attempted before. The practice of work-sharing has been most usefully brought forward in the last number of months, and workers in plants that propose temporary layoffs can work up to three days less in a week and collect unemployment insurance benefits for those days not worked. About 260,000 workers in Canada have had the advantage of this program, with some 13,000 companies taking part in this program since it was instituted. I should mention to Senator Roblin that 2,000 Inco workers in Thompson had the advantage of that program.

[Senator Bonnell.]

There is innovation being implemented now, and I think the minister has shown that he is open to all constructive suggestions that will improve the use of the UI fund. As he stresses, he wants to make it more an employment program, an employment fund, than an unemployment fund, so I think there is some hope in that direction.

Senator Roblin also referred rather extensively to a payroll tax or wage tax. I can recall using the word "tax" quite effectively on earlier occasions in another milieu, as he did this evening. I think it is appropriate to point out that it is an insurance premium. Although I realize there are differences, we do not refer to the pension contribution deductions made from payrolls in the federal administration as a pension tax, for example, and we do not refer to the Public Service medical insurance plan as a payroll tax. We refer to these as premiums that we pay; and the employer also pays a share.

Senator Roblin: "A rose by any other name—"

• (2100)

Senator McElman: Granted the fund that is assembled through such premiums seldom covers the program, and there are always additional funds required from the general revenues of Canada to support the payments. In any event, although I agreed with many of the points raised by Senator Roblin, as I often do, I cannot accept his reference to these premiums as being simply a tax. Honourable senators, with those few remarks I commend the bill to the house.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McElman moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84 (NO. 2)

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-151, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), that this bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in speaking to Bill C-151, I shall make five points. The first will be under the heading of financial administration; secondly, I shall comment on the bill itself; thirdly, I shall comment about the contingency fund; fourthly, I shall refer to the status of the borrowing authority at the present time; and, finally, I shall present conclusions regarding borrowing in other than Canadian funds.

The two sections of the Financial Administration Act that are appropriate and applicable to the borrowing authority bill are sections 38 and 39. Section 38 provides:

> The Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to borrow such sums of money as are required for the payment of any securities that were issued under the authority of Parliament, other than section 39, and are maturing or have been called for redemption.

Section 39 deals with temporary loans, and provides:

> Where it appears to the Governor in Council that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be insufficient to meet the disbursements lawfully authorized to be made from it, the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to borrow, at such rate of interest and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve, for a period not exceeding six months, an amount not exceeding such amount as he deems necessary to ensure that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be sufficient to meet those disbursements.

Section 39 clearly is for temporary borrowings only, and section 38 and the general borrowing authority must be granted by Parliament.

Honourable senators, clause 2(1) of Bill C-151, as originally drafted, sought borrowing authority for 1983-84 of $14.7 billion. I will try to explain how that borrowing authority figure was arrived at. I am referring now to the original form of the bill.

A few months ago we dealt with Bill C-143, and Part II of that bill, passed last March, provided an interim borrowing authority of $14 billion for 1983-84. Part I of that bill conferred $5 billion of borrowing authority on the government for use in fiscal 1982-83, of which any unused amount—that is, any unused amount of the $5 billion—in excess of $2 billion was to expire on March 31, 1983.

As it turned out, there was $2 billion of unused authority available to be carried forward into 1983-84. Clause 2(2) of the original bill, C-151, provided that any unused portion of the $14.7 billion sought in that bill, to the extent that it exceeded $2 billion, would be cancelled on March 31, 1984. So passage of the original bill, C-151, along with the borrowing authority provided by Bill C-143—the one we passed in March—would have provided a total of $26.7 billion in new borrowing authority for 1983-84, plus a non-lapsing contingency of $4 billion.

The request for borrowing authority in 1983-84 was based on projected financial requirements—that is, projected at that time—excluding foreign exchange transactions, of $26.7 billion. I must be clear in what I am saying here. I do not mean that the foreign exchange transactions were $26.7 billion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are perfectly clear.

Senator Frith: As I read my notes, it sounded as though I was talking about foreign exchange transactions of $26.7 billion, whereas I am talking about a borrowing authority for 1983-84 based on projected financial requirements, excluding foreign exchange transactions, of $26.7 billion as set out in the budget, plus a contingency amount of $4 billion. That is the original bill, C-151.

As honourable senators are perhaps aware, the government agreed to amend the original bill so as to provide for only $10.7 billion of additional borrowing authority for 1983-84, on the understanding that, if necessary, it could return to Parliament to obtain the remaining $4 billion some time before March 31, 1984, and that debate in the House of Commons on the request would be limited to three days.

Senator Roblin may recall this better than I, because I heard it happening when I walked into the committee, approximately a year ago. I believe it was our committee that raised the request that these contingency funds, if they were contingency funds, should not be dumped in with the total, and that we should match our borrowing authority with the actual cash requirements provided for in the budget and we should have to come back for the contingency funds if they were needed. I believe that the principle that was raised in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is the principle that is reflected in the demand for amendment here, and the demand that was acceded to.

So the total borrowing authority available for 1983-84, if we pass this amended bill, would amount to $26.7 billion, an amount which is exactly equivalent to the forecast financial requirements. That amount is made up of the $14 billion provided for in Bill C-143, $2 billion carried forward from amounts provided for 1982-83, and the $10.7 billion which would be provided by the bill now before us—that is, the $14.7 billion, less the $4 billion, coming to $10.7 billion.

Honourable senators, we are now considering this borrowing authority bill because, as you will recall, the Minister of Finance, in his second reading statement on Bill C-143, promised—and I also made the same promise in sponsoring that bill in the Senate—that he would introduce a bill covering all of the borrowing authority needed for fiscal 1983-84 after the budget was presented to Parliament. When we presented Bill C-143 we were asking for interim authority as the budget had not yet been presented. That is why the bill currently before the house is being presented now. The timing is all the more appropriate as the amount of borrowing authority being requested is directly related to the financial requirements set out in the budget, and any questions relating to borrowing authority can be examined in light of the earlier debate on the budget and in the information on the government's fiscal policy supplied with the budget.

● (2110)

I come now to my third point, the contingency amount. As I mentioned earlier, to satisfy the request of members of the opposition, the government has agreed to tie the current request for borrowing authority for 1983-84 directly to the financial requirements for 1983-84, thereby giving up the request for a non-lapsing contingency amount at this time. However, it is important to remember that the $4 billion contingency amount must be quickly accessible to the government if it is needed.

One of the fundamental reasons for a non-lapsing contingency amount is the need to have an amount available to accommodate exchange market pressures and the effect they have on the level of official exchange reserves. In the foreign exchange market when the Canadian dollar is firm, the exchange fund account buys U.S. dollars and puts them into the official reserves. In order to finance this increase in official reserves, Canadian dollars must either be taken from cash balances or borrowed and charged. If they are borrowed, of course, they have to be charged against the borrowing authority, because you cannot borrow in excess of the amount authorized.

On the other hand, when the Canadian dollar is weak, the U.S. dollar reserves fall and these balances must be supplemented by drawing on the two stand-by credit facilities the government has with both Canadian and international banks or by other types of foreign borrowings. Many of these borrowings must be charged against the borrowing authority.

To describe what I have just been talking about in terms of the figures we are discussing, if you have a borrowing authority of $10.7 billion that you use for cash requirements and suddenly you need cash requirements in order to deal with foreign exchange pressures, then you have to charge it against the $10.7 billion that has been authorized. In this way you have an orderly plan for using that borrowing authority. So you need the additional amount mainly as a contingency borrowing authority.

Senator Roblin: Of course, it could swing the other way.

Senator Frith: Yes. One hopes, and, as a matter of fact, I think that is the reason why we raised the point, that there are times when this money is not needed. You should not have a contingency sitting there that you may not need, but if you do need it then you must go back to Parliament to get it. Such developments can happen quickly and extremely large amounts can be involved, so what you are really getting here is a contingency or what you might call a borrowing authority. But under the terms of this bill as amended, you have to go back to Parliament to get that contingency amount.

[Senator Frith.]

Events that took place in May and June of 1982 are a good example of one type of situation of that nature. In that period the dollar was under pressure and nearly $3.5 billion of borrowing authority was used for foreign borrowings. On the other hand, for the entire 1983-84 fiscal year the situation was the reverse and foreign exchange operations added $1.5 billion to the financial requirements.

Senator Roblin: I do not like to interrupt my friend but, surely, the date is wrong. We have not completed the 1983-84 fiscal year, so how can we know what has happened?

Senator Frith: I should have said "for the entire 1982-83 fiscal year." As a matter of fact, there was another typographical error earlier on.

Senator Roblin: Yes.

Senator Frith: I changed it in my copy but I did not change it in the other copy. The request for a non-lapsing contingency amount is not new and was always included when they were part of the appropriation bills. In recent years borrowing authority bills regularly included explicit or implied contingency amounts which enabled the government to continue with its borrowing program. These contingency amounts have been in the range of $3 billion to $4 billion from the latter part of the 1970s.

My fourth point deals with borrowing authority status. It brings us to an explanation as to how the borrowing authority situation ended up at the end of 1982-83, including the $5 billion borrowing authority provided by Bill C-143. The total amount of authority granted for 1982-83 was about $26.1 billion: about $23.1 billion of this amount was used, $9.7 billion through the issue of treasury bills, $4.9 billion through the issue of bonds and $7.6 billion as a result of net Canada Savings Bonds sales—net in the sense of redemptions. Foreign borrowing added a further $.9 billion to the use of borrowing authority. The foreign borrowing represented $750 million U.S. borrowed in the Eurobond market last June and a partial redemption of a Deutschmark maturity earlier last year. So there was about $3 billion unused, of which $2 billion was carried forward and about $1 billion was cancelled on March 31, 1983.

That brings us to the net amount of treasury bills raised under section 39, which is the section dealing with temporary loans.

I wonder, Senator Roblin, is that the same thing as Governor General's warrants?

Senator Roblin: No.

Senator Frith: In any event, it is as I mentioned in my introduction, the provision for temporary loans as distinct from borrowing authority.

Senator Roblin: I would be surprised if any Governor General's warrants were used while Parliament was in session.

Senator Frith: Of course, by using treasury bills, the temporary authority under section 39 was used.

Honourable senators will recall that in mid-February virtually all of the borrowing authority authorized for 1982-83 had been used. By early March it became apparent that Bill C-143 would not be passed for several weeks and, in fact, Royal Assent was not received, as I mentioned, until March 30. Projected financial requirements over the March-to-June period were extremely large, and in order to continue with a regular debt program that would satisfy those requirements it was decided to make use of the temporary powers granted by section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. Permission was sought from cabinet to use section 39 to authorize a total of $2.3 billion of net new treasury bill issues over the period from March 11 to March 31. However, due to CSB redemptions occurring during that period, which had the effect of increasing the authority—because when the CSBs are redeemed they revive a certain amount of borrowing authority—and since new authority was conferred in time to authorize the March 31 issue of treasury bills, total usage of section 39 amounted to about $1.4 billion. This amount was, in any event, charged to the new authority provided by Bill C-143.

Honourable senators, my fifth and final point is a point that we have been required to make on six previous occasions. I refer to the final clause of the bill which has recently become a standard clause. It is the clause that refers to the ability of the government to borrow and repay loans in foreign currencies. Over the years, Canada has borrowed and repaid funds in a number of currencies. In recent years, however, the clause been added to confirm Canada's right to borrow in foreign currencies. Bill C-96 which received first reading in the House of Commons in March 1982, proposes a number of amendments to the Financial Administration Act, including an amendment clarifying the government's ability to borrow and repay in foreign currencies. Once that amendment has been passed, there will no longer be a need to include this clause in borrowing authority bills.

Honourable senators, those are the five points that I wished to make in asking you to support Bill C-151.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

• (2120)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Friday, June 3, 1983, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the plan for tomorrow is that we will sit at 11 o'clock and deal with routine proceedings and Question Period. We will have the third reading debate on Bill C-156, and will hear Senator Roblin and any other senators who wish to speak in the debate on second reading of Bill C-151, the Borrowing Authority Bill, 1983-84 (No. 2). Thereafter, we hope to refer Bill C-151 to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance and postpone third reading of that bill until that committee has reported, probably some time next week.

In summary, tomorrow we will have: Question Period; third reading of Bill C-156; second reading debate on Bill C-151; and then Royal Assent on Bills C-160 and C-156 at about 12.30 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 5681)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1984

June 2, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which Supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, was referred, does, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, May 24, 1983, report as follows:

Your Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses from the Program Branch of the Treasury Board: Mr. Jean Jacques Noreau, Deputy Secretary; Mr. Hugh Mullington, Assistant Secretary, Crown Corporations; and Mr. Ed Stimpson, Director General, Budget Coordination Group.

Supplementary estimates (A) total $1,394 million in this first supplementary for the fiscal year 1983-84. The total 1983-84 estimates tabled to date are thus $88,855 million. Of the $1,394 million contained in these supplementary estimates, $24.8 million represent the net adjustment to items with a statutory authority. These payments are non-discretionary in nature. The remaining $1,369.5 million represent new spending authorities that Parliament is being asked to approve.

Treasury Board supplied the Committee with a list of $1 Votes included in these estimates, which is attached as an Appendix to this Report.

Letters of Comfort to Canadair Limited and The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited

The Committee learned that government has received an opinion from the Department of Justice to the effect that Letters of Comfort are considered to be an arrangement between the government and the creditor and are as binding as loan guarantees. The Committee felt strongly that because Letters of Comfort do not require the authority of parliament, as do loan guarantees, the government should seek the authority of parliament to convert all outstanding Letters of Comfort whether to Canadair Limited, or to The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited or any other company, as soon as possible.

Transfer of Program Responsibilities from the Minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion to the Minister of Agriculture

The Committee learned that responsibilities for the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Assistance Program have been transferred without the prior approval of parliament from the Minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion to the Minister of Agriculture. Witnesses informed Senators that such transfers can be made for any program under authority of the Public Service Rearrangements and Transfers of Duties Act. The Committee expressed its concern that a mechanism exists which allows a program transfer to have taken place, as is the case in these supplementary estimates, before the request for authority to transfer funds to the receiving department has been approved. This is further compounded by the fact that when the request for this authority to transfer funds appears in the estimates, no background information is provided indicating the reason for the transfer.

Financial Assistance to Canadair Limited and The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited

The Committee received information on financial assistance (payments, loans and loan guarantees) provided by the government of Canada to Canadair Limited and The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited. The Committee was unsatisfied with this information and requested that the Treasury Board provide a complete accounting of financial assistance to these two companies including assistance generally available through industrial assistance programs such as the Enterprise Development Program, the Program for Export Market Development and the Defence Industry Productivity Program. Senators also indicated that the information should include any loan repayments.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT,
Chairman

APPENDIX

ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1983-84

There are 2 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates. Both are in the Department of Agriculture and are related to the transfer of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration (PFRA) from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion (DREE). These are One Dollar Votes because the funds were included in DREE's Estimates initially and are now being transferred to Agriculture along with the program.

Page 10

Vote 5a	—Operating Expenditures ($31,399,900)	$1
Vote L16a	—Loans for development of community and industrial infrastructure ($26,000)	$1

The Operating Expenditures are comprised of salaries and wages and other costs associated with the transfer of 888 person-years. Details may be found on page 12 of the Supplementaries.

The Loans relate to two Interim Subsidiary Agreements on water development and are made available to the provinces to assist municipalities with the development and improvement of water sources.

May 24, 1983
Estimates Division

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 5683)

THE BUDGET, 1983

REVISIONS—DELAYED ANSWER TO QUESTION BY SENATOR TREMBLAY ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1983

BUDGET SPEECH ADDENDUM

(Insert after paragraph 1, page 3)

As most Canadians are now aware, I received a group of photographers in my office yesterday as part of a pre-budget "photo opportunity" session. A copy of the proposed budget speech was on my desk. I held it up and rapidly turned the pages. A cameraman was standing behind me and, unknown to me, photographed several pages of the proposed speech. The cameraman was thereby able to obtain some information about the contents of the proposed budget. This was clearly contrary to the spirit of this "photo opportunity" session, but the fact remains that the event occurred.

Traditionally, a budget leak involves premature disclosure of a tax matter. Fortunately this is not the case. However, in some quarters any matter or fact connected with the budget might be considered to be of this character. To remove any doubt, I have decided to change the portion of the budget which would otherwise have been prematurely in the public domain.

I have decided to increase the Special Recovery Program to $4.8 billion. This additional $200 million will be added to the Special Recovery Capital Projects, details of which I will give in a moment. The monies will be set aside as a special fund to be spent on projects akin to those already contemplated in the Special Recovery Capital Projects.

As a result of this action, the deficit and financial requirements of the Government for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 will be increased $100 million, $50 million and $50 million, respectively. Other appropriate adjustments should be made in reading the printed material distributed tonight. This will no doubt cause some confusion, since the printed material distributed across the country and in the House is no longer accurate. For this, I apologize.

There is some irony in all of this. During the past week, I have debated with myself and with my advisors about the precise nature the budget measures should take. My concern has been that in my desire to be fiscally responsible, I would not provide enough stimulus for the economy to secure the recovery and generate employment. Obviously, this is a matter of delicate judgement and there is no absolutely correct answer. Be that as it may, the events of the past 24 hours have led me to follow what my instincts have been urging me to do all along. If I err in this budget, I want to do it on the side of more jobs.

NOTE: In the budget speech, for:

	Amount	Should Read
Special Recovery Program	$4.6 billion	$4.8 billion
Special Recovery Capital Projects	$2.2 billion	$2.4 billion
Deficit 1983-84	$31.2 billion	$31.3 billion
Impact of budget measures on deficit:
in 1983-84	$1.8 billion	$1.9 billion
in 1984-85	$600 million	$650 million
Financial requirements for 1983-84	$26.6 billion	$26.7 billion

April 22, 1983
(Amended)

REVISED BUDGET TABLES*

The attached set of tables replaces certain tables that are included in Chapter 1, 2 and 5 of the printed budget document The Fiscal Plan. The revisions result from the addition of $100 million in 1983-84, $50 million in 1984-85 and $50 million in 1985-86 to the allocation for Special Recovery Capital Projects. In addition to increasing the allocation for this item, the total allocation for the Special Recovery Program, budgetary expenditures, total outlays, national accounts expenditures, the budgetary deficit, financial requirements and the national accounts deficit are all increased by these amounts. Tables in other chapters of the document are not affected.

Also included are revised versions of Table 1 (page 6) and Table 2 (page 7) of the section on the Special Recovery Program in the supplementary information portion of the document Budget Papers.

* A set of tables presented earlier had some typographical errors. These tables incorporate corrections of these errors.

The Fiscal Plan, page 6

Table 1.1 (Revised)
The Fiscal Plan
Government of Canada
Summary Statement of Transactions[1]

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
	(millions of dollars)
Budgetary transactions
Revenues	54,068	54,863	58,618	65,681	73,532	80,355
Expenditures	−67,674	−80,113	−89,918	−94,431	−100,182	−105,955
Surplus or deficit (–)	−13,606	−25,250	−31,300	−28,750	−26,650	−25,600
Non-budgetary transactions
Loans, investments and advances	−1,239	−387	−782	−1,519	−1,568	−1,545
Specified purpose accounts	−4,345	−170	3,800	4,225	5,790	7,580
Other transactions	2,169	2,307	1,582	1,094	−222	665
Net source or requirement (–)	5,275	1,750	4,600	3,800	4,000	6,700
Financial requirements (excluding foreign exchange transactions)	−8,331	−23,500	−26,700	−24,950	−22,650	−18,900
Total outlays	68,913	80,500	90,700	95,950	101,750	107,500
Percentage growth	17.6	16.8	12.7	5.8	6.0	5.7
Percentage of GNP	20.8	23.1	23.6	22.7	22.0	21.3
Program outlays[2]	53,745	63,580	72,750	76,650	81,525	86,375
Percentage growth	12.2	18.3	14.4	5.4	6.4	5.9
Percentage of GNP	16.2	18.2	19.0	18.1	17.6	17.1
Public debt charges	15,168	16,920	17,950	19,300	20,225	21,125
Percentage growth	41.9	11.6	6.1	7.5	4.8	4.4
Percentage of GNP	4.6	4.8	4.7	4.6	4.4	4.2
Budgetary revenue
Percentage growth	19.1	1.5	6.8	12.0	12.0	9.3
Percentage of GNP	16.3	15.7	15.3	15.5	15.9	15.9
Budgetary deficit
Percentage of GNP	−4.1	−7.2	−8.2	−6.8	−5.8	−5.1
Financial requirements (excluding foreign exchange transactions)
Percentage of GNP	−2.5	−6.7	−7.0	−5.9	−4.9	−3.7
GNP (billions of dollars)	331.3	348.9	383.9	423.0	462.5	504.8

(1) For comparability budgetary revenues and expenditures are adjusted to treat revenues and expenditures as if Canada Post had been a Crown corporation for all of 1981-82. The budgetary deficit and financial requirements are unaffected by this adjustment.

(2) Total outlays less public debt charges.

The Fiscal Plan, page 7

Table 1.2 (Revised)
Summary Table, Federal Government Budget Balances[1]
1972-73 to 1986-87

	Budgetary surplus or deficit(–)		Financial Requirements (excluding foreign exchange transactions)		National accounts surplus or deficit(–)
	(millions of dollars)	(percentage of GNP)[2]	(millions of dollars)	(percentage of GNP)[2]	(millions of dollars)	(percentage of GNP)[2]
Actual
1972-73	−999	−0.9	−1,308	−1.2	−198	−0.2
1973-74	−1,384	−1.1	−1,517	−1.2	186	0.1
1974-75	−1,733	−1.2	−2,139	−1.5	−47	0.0
1975-76	−5,463	−3.3	−4,774	−2.9	−3,918	−2.3
1976-77	−6,210	−3.3	−5,548	−2.9	−4,228	−2.2
1977-78	−10,289	−4.9	−8,449	−4.0	−9,399	−4.4
1978-79	−12,226	−5.3	−11,113	−4.8	−9,646	−4.1
1979-80	−11,480	−4.4	−10,445	−4.0	−9,308	−3.6
1980-81	−12,668	−4.3	−10,117	−3.5	−9,412	−3.2
1981-82	−13,606	−4.1	−8,331	−2.5	−9,894	−3.0
1982-83[3]	−25,250	−7.2	−23,500	−6.7	−23,500	−6.7
Projected
1983-84	−31,300	−8.2	−26,700	−7.0	−28,300	−7.4
1984-85	−28,750	−6.8	−24,950	−5.9	−24,750	−5.9
1985-86	−26,650	−5.8	−22,650	−4.9	−20,650	−4.5
1986-87	−25,600	−5.1	−18,900	−3.7	−17,200	−3.4

(1) All figures are adjusted so that historical data are consistent with current public accounting practices including the treatment of Canada Post as a Crown corporation.
(2) Percentage of GNP for calendar year ending three months before the end of the relevant fiscal year.
(3) Preliminary estimate.

The Fiscal Plan, page 12 & 13

Table 2.1 (Revised)

The Expenditure Plan by Envelope

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Economic Development
Millions of dollars	6,899	8,552	9,799	10,298	11,142	11,524
Percentage change	33.1	24.0	14.6	5.1	8.2	3.4
Percentage of total	10.0	10.6	10.8	10.7	11.0	10.7
Energy
Millions of dollars	1,608	3,351	3,799	3,753	4,309	4,511
Percentage change	−55.6	108.4	13.4	−1.2	14.8	4.7
Percentage of total	2.3	4.2	4.2	3.9	4.2	4.2
Social Affairs
Millions of dollars	27,579	31,950	37,251	38,386	40,710	43,112

Percentage change	12.0	15.8	16.6	3.0	6.1	5.9
Percentage of total	40.0	39.7	41.1	40.0	40.0	40.1
Justice and Legal
Millions of dollars	1,384	1,568	1,798	1,982	2,184	2,331
Percentage change	14.1	13.3	14.7	10.2	10.2	6.7
Percentage of total	2.0	1.9	2.0	2.1	2.1	2.2
Services to Government
Millions of dollars	3,657	3,403	3,897	4,313	4,560	4,833
Percentage change	33.9	−6.9	14.5	10.7	5.7	6.0
Percentage of total	5.3	4.2	4.3	4.5	4.5	4.5
Parliament
Millions of dollars	151	174	183	195	206	219
Percentage change	16.2	15.2	5.2	6.6	5.6	6.3
Percentage of total	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2
Defence
Millions of dollars	6,031	6,963	7,900	8,785	9,494	10,359
Percentage change	19.2	15.5	13.5	11.1	8.1	9.1
Percentage of total	8.8	8.6	8.7	9.2	9.3	9.6
External Affairs and Aid
Millions of dollars	1,702	2,170	2,432	2,752	2,876	3,278
Percentage change	19.8	27.5	12.1	13.2	4.5	14.0
Percentage of total	2.5	2.7	2.7	2.9	2.8	3.0
Fiscal Arrangements
Millions of dollars	4,734	5,449	5,708	6,019	6,210	6,853
Percentage change	21.1	15.1	4.8	5.4	3.2	10.4
Percentage of total	6.9	6.8	6.3	6.3	6.1	6.4

The Fiscal Plan, page 15

Table 2.2 (Revised)
Major Changes to Total Outlays Since the November 1981 Budget

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
			(millions of dollars)
November 1981 budget level	68,300	76,300	85,150	93,900	103,300
Changes between November 1981 and April 1983 budgets
Unemployment insurance	12	927	1,732	1,372	1,143
Canada Assistance Plan	112	269	355	256	155
Established Programs Financing[1]	−44	236	612	128	−453
Fiscal Arrangements	257	478	98	−223	−691
Petroleum Incentives Program	−940	610	200	—	—
Canadair and de Havilland equity	—	400	—	—	—
Petroleum Compensation Program	402	—	362	—	—
VIA Rail addition	—	132	218	221	258
Net program carry-forwards	−300	−200	500	—	—
Public debt charges	473	155	−65	−60	−50
Other changes	641	1,193	124	−1,103	−2,557
Sub-total	613	4,200	4,136	591	−2,195
Pre-budget outlays	68,913	80,500	89,286	94,491	101,105
April 1983 budget measures[2][3]	—	—	1,414	1,459	645

April 1983 budget level	68,913	80,500	90,700	95,950	101,750

(1) These changes exclude the savings from the impact of the 6&5 program.
(2) For details see Table 2.3.
(3) Includes the savings on Established Programs Financing resulting from the 6&5 program.

The Fiscal Plan, page 41

Table 5.1 (Revised)

Government of Canada Revenues and Expenditures
National Accounts Basis

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
			(millions of dollars)
Revenues
Direct taxes, persons	30,473	33,420	38,160	42,890	48,090	53,255
Direct taxes, corporations	7,781	6,900	8,965	10,295	12,720	14,440
Direct taxes, non-residents	1,163	1,175	1,185	1,245	1,340	1,435
Indirect taxes	19,209	16,805	15,230	17,920	20,210	22,325
Other current transfers from persons	24	24	24	24	24	24
Investment income	5,573	6,586	7,136	7,546	8,346	9,066
Capital consumption allowances	956	1,090	1,200	1,280	1,370	1,455
Total	65,179	66,000	71,900	81,200	92,100	102,000
Expenditures
Current goods and services	16,856	19,100	21,415	23,030	24,710	26,480
Transfer payments to persons	19,891	26,310	30,030	30,725	32,150	33,150
Subsidies	6,386	5,640	5,690	6,920	7,795	8,770
Capital assistance	867	3,090	4,390	3,790	4,365	4,750
Current transfers to non-residents	939	1,020	1,200	1,330	1,350	1,550
Public debt interest	14,260	16,700	17,630	18,975	19,830	20,740
Transfers to other levels of government	14,521	16,040	17,750	18,820	20,290	21,720
Gross capital formation	1,353	1,600	2,095	2,360	2,260	2,040
Total	75,073	89,500	100,200	105,950	112,750	119,200
Surplus or deficit(–)	–9,894	–23,500	–28,300	–24,750	–20,650	–17,200

The Fiscal Plan, page 42

Table 5.1 (Concluded) (Revised)

Government of Canada Revenues and Expenditures
National Accounts Basis

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
			(percentage of GNP)
Revenues
Direct taxes, persons	9.2	9.6	9.9	10.1	10.4	10.5
Direct taxes, corporations	2.3	2.0	2.3	2.4	2.8	2.9

Direct taxes, non-residents	0.4	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3
Indirect taxes	5.8	4.8	4.0	4.2	4.4	4.4
Other current transfers from persons	0.0	0.0	0.0	0.0	0.0	0.0
Investment income	1.7	1.9	1.9	1.8	1.8	1.8
Capital consumption allowances	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3
Total	19.7	18.9	18.7	19.2	19.9	20.2
Expenditures
Current goods and services	5.1	5.5	5.6	5.4	5.3	5.2
Transfer payments to persons	6.0	7.5	7.8	7.3	7.0	6.6
Subsidies	1.9	1.6	1.5	1.6	1.7	1.7
Capital assistance	0.3	0.9	1.1	0.9	0.9	0.9
Current transfers to non-residents	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3
Public debt interest	4.3	4.8	4.6	4.5	4.3	4.1
Transfers to other levels of government	4.4	4.6	4.6	4.4	4.4	4.3
Gross capital formation	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.6	0.5	0.4
Total	22.7	25.7	26.1	25.0	24.4	23.6
Surplus or deficit (–)	–3.0	–6.7	–7.4	–5.9	–4.5	–3.4
GNP (billions of dollars)	331.3	348.9	383.9	423.0	462.5	504.8

The Fiscal Plan, page 46

Table 5.5 (Revised)

Government of Canada Summary Financial Statement
Extended National Accounts Presentation

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
			(millions of dollars)
National accounts transactions
Revenues	65,179	66,000	71,900	81,200	92,100	102,000
Expenditures	–75,073	–89,500	–100,200	–105,950	–112,750	–119,200
Surplus or deficit (–)	–9,894	–23,500	–28,300	–24,750	–20,650	–17,200
Loans and other transactions
Loans, investments and advances	–1,178	–219	–804	–1,538	–1,610	–1,587
Cash versus accrual	1,626	966	1,660	926	–843	–549
Other transactions	1,115	–747	744	412	453	436
Net source or requirement (–)	1,563	—	1,600	–200	–2,000	–1,700
Total financial requirements (excluding foreign exchange transaction)	–8,331	–23,500	–26,700	–24,950	–22,650	–18,900

Budget Papers, page 7

Table 2 (Revised)

Special Recovery Capital Projects:
Sectoral Distribution Investment

	(millions of dollars)
Transportation facilities	650
Research and training facilities	290
High technology procurement	180
Vessel procurement	630
Resource development	170
Land and tourism development	220
Other investments	60
To be allocated	200
Total	2,400

APPENDIX "C"

(See p. 5684)

COMPULSORY LICENSING OF PHARMACEUTICALS

A REVIEW OF SECTION 41 OF THE PATENT ACT—DELAYED ANSWER TO QUESTION BY SENATOR MARSHALL ON TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1983

Background

During the 1960s, Canadians became increasingly concerned about the growing cost of medical care. A considerable portion of the public debate focused on the cost of prescription drugs. The federal government took the lead in examining this issue by commissioning three major studies. All three concluded that drug prices in Canada were too high.

The government then introduced several measures designed to exert downward pressure on drug prices. One of the most significant of these was an amendment to Section 41(4) of the Patent Act that would enable generic copies of patented drugs to be imported and sold in Canada on condition that a royalty fee be paid to the patent holder. This process is referred to as "compulsory licensing." Compulsory licensing to allow the manufacture of patented drugs had existed in Canada since 1923.

This amendment became law in 1969. By the early 1970s, the opportunity to import and sell copies of patented drugs had enabled a number of generic firms to offer consumers lower-priced alternatives to the drugs produced by the patent holders. Drug costs had by then become a concern not only for individual consumers, but also for the provinces, which had become involved in programs to reimburse, in part or in full, the price of drugs purchased by hospitals, senior citizens and welfare recipients. To moderate the costs of these responsibilities, several provinces developed programs to encourage druggists to substitute generic alternatives for more expensive drugs whenever available and not prevented by the prescribing physician.

In addition to reducing the prices of those drugs for which generic competition exists, compulsory licensing and provincial drug-substitution rules have also been responsible for the growth of a generic drug industry. However, the patentee companies state that the loss of market share has been concentrated unfairly among those firms who have developed important new products and has reduced revenues for investment in R&D and manufacturing.

The current policy review of compulsory licensing is timely for several reasons. The government has announced as a priority its intention to stimulate investment and expansion in the high-technology sectors of the economy. The experience and concerns of various segments of the industry, such as the patent-holding companies, must be examined. It is time to evaluate trends and developments during the 14 years that compulsory licensing to import has been in effect.

Canada is not unique in designing policies directed at the pharmaceutical industry. Many countries use other approaches to control drug prices and to promote industry growth. Countries such as Ireland and Puerto Rico attract pharmaceutical manufacturing facilities by offering generous tax and financial incentives. Canada is the only country currently using compulsory licences as a policy instrument.

The Canadian Pharmaceutical Industry

Pharmaceutical manufacturing in Canada involves compounding imported active ingredients into final dosage form. Research is primarily clinical, although of 138 firms operating in Canada, six report that they carry out some basic research functions.

Trends in aggregate data indicate that the industry has experienced steady growth since compulsory licensing was introduced in 1969. Pharmaceutical sales in Canada (about $1.3 billion in 1981) represent under two per cent of the free-world market for drugs. Close to 90 per cent of the Canadian market is held by multinational patent-holding firms, with the remaining share going to generic producers and the firms that produce insulin and vaccines. Employment in the industry in 1981 stood at approximately 16,000, of which 1,300 jobs were in the generic sector.

Since 1969, 290 compulsory licences have been granted for 62 drugs, 43 of which have actually entered the market. On average, the licencee's product went on the market 11 years after the patentee first introduced the new drug. However, in two cases, licencees' products have entered in less than five years.

Policy Alternatives

To generate further growth in this industry the Government of Canada has decided to change the Patent Act to rebalance the 1969 policy. During the process of examining alternatives, their potential long-term impact on the price of drugs must be considered. These concerns may necessitate a price-monitoring system based on either a comparison with foreign drug prices or on price trends of other products sold in Canada. Sanctions for prices in excess of guidelines could be incorporated into the Patent Act.

Three general approaches for changing the Patent Act have been developed:

- Variable royalty rates: Licences would continue to be granted, but rates would be set according to the level of research and development activity carried out in Canada by the patentee.

- Market exclusivity: Compulsory licences to import would be granted only after a specified number of years had elapsed following initial marketing of the drug. This would provide patentees with a period of market certainty on which to base future plans.
- Company-specific exemption from compulsory licences: Firms proposing specific performance and price commitments would qualify for an exemption from licensing to import. Failure to meet the commitments would result in a termination of the exemption for one or more products.

The impact of each approach on industrial development depends on its possible effect on the import and export behaviour of both generic and patent-holding firms. Industrial expansion would necessarily involve fine-chemical manufacturing in Canada, increased export of finished products, and additional research activity. The potential for domestic chemical manufacturing, import replacement and increased drug exports would be greatest in the long term if both generic firms and patentees were motivated to manufacture in Canada and actively seek markets abroad. Existing compulsory licences would not be affected and new licences would continue to be available for products to be manufactured in Canada.

Potential for increased investment in research and development appears to remain with patent-holding firms. Such investment may be more attractive under approaches that extend patent protection.

The government is seeking ways to stimulate growth in the Canadian pharmaceutical industry while maintaining its policy objective of moderating drug costs. Modifications to the Patent Act may serve to meet the dual objectives and three alternative approaches have been put forward. The approach selected and the specific amendments to the Act or Regulations that may be chosen will depend on the outcome of consultations with the provinces, companies in the industry, those involved in the delivery of health services and other interested parties.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 3, 1983

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 7, 1983, at eight o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA—FIRE ON BOARD DC-9 AIRCRAFT—INVESTIGATION IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure that it is unreasonable for me to expect the Leader of the Government to have an answer to this question, but in due course I wonder if he would give us a report on the terrible accident involving an Air Canada aircraft that is reported in this morning's press? I am particularly interested in knowing the arrangements for the investigation of accidents in the United States involving one of our aircraft. Will such an investigation be conducted by the Americans or by ourselves? What light can the minister throw upon the incident?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am appreciative of the way in which the Leader of the Opposition has put the question, because although my office attempted to get some up-to-date information with respect to the investigation I do not have a great deal to report in that regard. As to what is now being done, it is a fact that this accident is within the jurisdiction of the National Transportation and Safety Board of the United States, which is, by the way, conducting an investigation.

I can also advise the Senate that the NTSB has invited Canada to send an observer who will be on the investigating team. Indeed, Canada has designated an investigator from the Aviation Safety Bureau of the Department of Transport. He will be an observer and, more important than that, will be part of the investigation team.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for that information. I am particularly concerned because it is necessary to ensure that confidence in the activities of the state airline is not harmed or shaken, because that is the potential of an accident of this sort. I would therefore ask the minister—by the way, he is a minister without portfolio, is he not? I shall call him a minister, anyway.

I ask the honourable minister to give us whatever information he can at the next sitting, which will inform the public as to the nature of this accident and the steps that are being taken to ensure that it does not happen again.

Senator Olson: That is a fair question.

Hon. Jack Marshall: What—whether you are a minister?

Senator Roblin: I think he is.

Senator Olson: I never had any doubt that I was a minister, one designation being that of Leader of the Government in the Senate and the other being Minister responsible for the Northern Pipeline.

In any event, the tone in which the question was put is fair and reasonable. We will certainly endeavour to get that information.

Obviously, anything as tragic as this accident does raise a number of questions. However, I think that we here, and Canadians generally, should recognize Air Canada's history of safety—indeed, that of other airlines as well, but we are talking about Air Canada in this case. It has one of the best records, in terms of safety, in the world. No doubt that is due, in part, to the safety standards that we have set, and, indeed, the application of those standards up to that level and perhaps beyond by Air Canada. These measures have led to Air Canada's long history of a very high level of safety relative to any other airline in the world.

• (1110)

There are some press reports that speculate on what happened, how the fire got started and on how it was able to spread throughout the interior of the aircraft, if indeed that is so. One thing seems to be repeated, and that is that there was smoke, which made things difficult, throughout the interior of the aircraft. I have to advise honourable senators that, while we asked these questions this morning, it is still too early to obtain any definitive response to those questions that I am sure are in the minds of a number of people.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable sentors, I have one delayed answer. It is in response to a question asked by Senator Guay on May 31 concerning a visit to Washington on May 24 and 25 by a delegation of Canadian parliamentarians regarding the Garrison Dam project. As usual, it is a fairly long answer, and I would, therefore, ask honourable senators to agree that it be taken as if it had been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

In their capacities as Co-Chairmen of the Canada-Manitoba Ministerial Committee on Garrison, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Honourable Al Mackling, Minister of National Resources, Province of Manitoba, approved the sending of a delegation of parliamentarians to Washington on May 24-25 to express Canadian concerns on the Garrison issue to U.S. members of Congress and the U.S. Administration. The selection of participants was coordinated through the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy and the Honourable Al Mackling for the federal and provincial sides respectively. The Honourable G. L. Molgat and the Honourable Duff Roblin were invited to participate on behalf of the Senate but were unable to do so.

The three members of the House of Commons who participated in the delegation, Robert Bockstael, Jack Murta and Terry Sargeant, accompanied by an aide of the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy and two Manitoba parliamentarians visited a large number of U.S. Congressmen and Senators in three different groups. The Honourable Lloyd Axworthy had hoped to lead the federal delegation but was unable to do so due to other pressing business. He will, however, be meeting with members of the U.S. Congress on June 7 to discuss Canadian concerns over the Garrison issue. I am informed that due to the fact that the delegation paid so many calls in three different groups there is no official report per se. I can assure honourable senators however, that Canadian concerns on Garrison were conveyed to good effect as I indicated May 31. The delegation members reiterated the Canadian position that the development of any features of the Garrison project potentially affecting Canada should be deferred until agreement has been reached between Canada and the United States on modifications to the project design which would satisfactorily protect Canadian interests. As I also indicated May 31 the members of the Canadian delegation received assurances that such representations are effective in ensuring the Canadian views and concerns on Garrison are conveyed to the relevant law making bodies in the United States.

[Senator Olson.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 3)—THIRD READING

Hon. Charles McElman moved the third reading of Bill C-156, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3).

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received.

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

June 3, 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 3rd day of June, 1983, at 12.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sparrow, for the adoption of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act".—(Honourable Senator Donahoe).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this debate was adjourned by my colleague, Senator Donahoe, on behalf of Senator Nurgitz, who would like to speak to it the next time we meet, so perhaps it could be dealt with accordingly, unless anyone else wishes to speak in the meantime, to which, of course, we have no objection.

Other stands.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84 (NO. 2)

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for the second reading of Bill C-151, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, such enthusiasm at this time of the day is entirely out of place, in the Senate or anywhere else.

• (1115)

I would like to say that I feel rather uneasy that a bill of this character, which contains within itself the essence of the government's management of the economy for the last 12 years, should be passed in this chamber on the sole basis of the technical explanation of its meaning and effect given us last night by the Deputy Leader of the Government. Not that I fault his technical explanation. I think it was clear and complete, and if honourable senators are interested in the technicalities of the bill, they can do no better than read what he said to us.

However, it seems to me that we would be derelict in our duty if we were to let this bill go on such an introduction, because in my opinion it affects and contains within itself the fruits of many years of mismanagement of the conduct of our economic affairs. I am not going to speak at any length this morning, but I wish to place on record the views of the opposition in this chamber with respect to that record and also with respect to the budget which this bill reflects.

It seems to me that the greatest weakness in the budget—and there are a number—and in the five-year forecast that accompanies it, is the fact that it lacks any firm or believable program for the reduction of the deficit. When my colleague, Senator Murray, spoke on another motion—I believe it was yesterday—he gave, in my opinion, a first-class analysis of the problem that this budget and this bill presents. I am not sure that I am going to add anything significant to what he said, but I feel that on the occasion of the passage of the bill it is essential that it should be said, even if perhaps it is nothing very new to members of this chamber.

The fact is, of course, that the record of the government is a miserable one. The record of the government in the management of the economy of the country, insofar as governments are able to do that, is not a good one, and its record as a forecasting agency is even worse, particularly if one takes into account what has been happening in the past few years. I think even the Minister of Finance would be willing to agree with me on that—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Compared with what?

Senator Roblin: Compared with the facts; compared with what happened. The forecast of what was going to happen bore so little resemblance to what did happen as to make one wonder who is doing the forecasting—Maclean's magazine, or something like that; certainly not all the high-powered help in the Finance Department. All we have to do is take a look at what happened to the forecast for the deficit that we have been experiencing over the past period.

Senator Olson: When I said, "Compared with what?" I was not asking the honourable senator to make a comparison between a number of private organizations. I wonder if he would draw a comparison, if the record is all that bad, with the experience of other responsible governments, such as those of the United States, Britain, West Germany, and so on. If he does that, then I am sure he will agree that situation is not quite as bad as he is trying to make it appear.

Senator Roblin: The responsibility of my honourable friend, and my responsibility, has to do with the Dominion of Canada, if I may use that old-fashioned expression. The Leader of the Government can draw all the comparisons he likes with other countries—their performances may be good or bad, and mostly they are bad. If he wants to compare the record of what has happened in Canada with what has happened elsewhere, it is not very encouraging for us.

The point I wish to make is that we are dealing with what this government has been telling us. The fact that we are no worse than anyone else is pretty cold comfort. In fact, I would say it is no comfort at all; and I say to my honourable friend that the record of the government in achievement, and in its forecasting certainly, leaves a great deal to be desired. It is a miserable performance.

What standards are we to judge them by? Surely their own standards are the best to judge them by. In the election of 1980 we were given a clear outline of what the government's fiscal policy was in one respect. We had a clear outline with respect to how much money they were going to spend. They gave an undertaking—and it has been documented in this house before now—that they would keep the expenditures of the Government of Canada below the increase in the gross national product—not the real one, but the nominal increase in the gross national product including inflation. That was the undertaking.

• (1120)

If I look at any of the years between then and now—1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84—I see that that promise was not kept in any of them. In none of those years since this government assumed office in 1980 has it kept its fundamental undertaking in financial management, that it would keep the growth of expenditures below the growth of the gross national product. I have figures here that I could give to honourable senators, but I suspect that I can content myself with making the statement, because it cannot be controverted. The facts are clear. Whether you judge them by the public accounts system, which is incomplete, or the national accounts system, which is perfectly comparable, you will find that the gross national product rose by substantially less than the expenditures of the government. So on the basis of their undertaking we find that the performance of the government has not been very satisfactory.

Now we have to face the future and the future is contained in the forecast of the budget. As my colleague said to us the other night, the promise for the future is that the increase in expenditures will not exceed between 5 per cent and 6 per cent. They said the first time that the increase in expenditures will not exceed the increase in the gross national product, but they were not able to live up to that one. Now they say in this piece of paper called the "The Fiscal Plan" that is in front of us that the increase in expenditures will be kept within 5 and 6 per cent. I hope that it turns out to be correct. However, I must say that, if the past has any relevance to the future at all, if the past tells us anything of what this government is likely to do in the future, one has to look at that 5 per cent figure with a great deal of skepticism. I have to say that it is unrealistic, in my opinion, to expect that the government will live up to that promise more than it has lived up to any of its other promises.

Does the question of whether or not the government keeps its promises have anything to do with this bill? It has a lot to do with debt and deficit, which are the epitome of the government's policy in the substance of this bill. The results of their activities over the past few years have been an astronomical increase in the national debt, and we are adding to it by about $20 million in what we are doing today.

By 1986-87, according to the government's figures—and I suspect that they are not overestimated—the debt will be some $213 billion, or double what it is now. So in the next four years we will double the national debt in Canada. It took us from 1946 to 1976 to double the debt from $16.8 billion to $34.6 billion. That is, it took us some 30 years, a long period of time, to double the debt, but we are going to succeed in beating that record by doubling the debt in the next four years. Another way of looking at it is that the debt, according to the estimates the government provided to us, will be six times what it was in 1976-77.

Those are important figures. They are very large figures. They are almost impossible for us to grasp and it is equally difficult to assess what it means in terms of the ordinary citizen of this country and in terms of the government's finances—very difficult, indeed—but it is an effort that must be made, and this is a good time to raise some questions in respect of the matter now that this bill is before us.

The results in 1983 with respect to borrowing and with respect to the deficit are equally shocking. In this year of grace the deficit will be equal to 32.5 per cent of the revenues the government takes in. If we want to use round figures, the government is going to borrow one-third of every dollar it gets on a revenue basis. Can anyone relate that to his personal experience in either business or as an individual, and estimate how long this kind of deficit situation is likely to last?

[Senator Roblin.]

What about the interest? After all, our capacity to pay the interest is what keeps this whole thing going year after year. Out of every dollar we receive in revenue in 1983, 30 cents will go to pay the interest.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Shame!

Senator Roblin: Consider what could happen in terms of stimulating the economy of the country and doing the good things we would like to do for the poor or for other people in this land if that amount of 30 cents on the dollar, which now goes to support our debt, was available for these other purposes.

• (1125)

I say to my honourable friends that no one can realistically expect that we will have no deficit in this country and no one can say that deficits are necessarily bad. I have never said that. I do say, however, that this rake's progress, this continuation of deficit and debt over the last ten years, is something that cannot go on much longer and must be brought to a halt. There is a limit to this kind of thing; no one can prophesy how close we are to this limit but it is there, and we had better pay some attention to it.

When we go to support this deficit in the capital markets of this country, when we make a call upon the savings of the people of Canada, the estimate that has been provided by the Howe Institute is that in this year 50 to 60 per cent of the net savings of the people of Canada will be required by this government to support its deficit and its program. That is a very heavy burden to place on the economy of a nation. When you add to that, as did my colleague Senator Murray, the demands by other public bodies, we find that the portion of the net savings of Canada that is left over for business, for enterprise, for investment and for jobs is 18 per cent. The minister and the government are saying that they are exercising no pressure on the market. One reason for the lack of pressure is the high rate of interest. If interest rates were a little lower by, perhaps, one or two points, if they were less a burden on the productive plans of the nation, I think we would find a lot of people in the private sector back in the market looking for money, and then we would see a crowding-out situation.

I would like to point out to this chamber that there is not only pressure on the net savings of the people of Canada. We also borrow abroad and it might be of interest to this chamber to know that, in the last two years, borrowing by Canadian provinces, municipalities and corporations abroad has been higher than that by any other nation in the world. That surely indicates something about the state of the Canadian capital market. It indicates the stress that is on that market, and the government can say all they like about crowding out, but when that fact is in front of us, questions have to be raised about the accuracy of their view in the matter.

I do not intend to prolong this discussion because most of the points I wish to make are points that are relatively familiar to members of this chamber. I simply say that the government's solution to our problem is simple. It is more taxation; not, however, more taxation now, but later. When did this government ever deal with anything now? If there ever was a group of men and women who had the gift of procrastination and putting off the evil day, the ladies and gentlemen who form the Government of Canada exercise that talent to a high degree.

The idea is to borrow and tax, but not to tax now; tax later. According to the announcement that has been made, $6 billion will be taxed from the people of Canada in an effort to try and remedy this situation. This amount, although it will make a contribution, will not solve the problem because, as I have already indicated, over the next four years the national debt will double in spite of this extra taxation that the government is proposing to put into effect. Whatever happened to restraint? Although it is not a four-letter word, it is not a very popular word among the gentlemen on the other side. It is a word that they give lip service to from time to time, but it is exceedingly hard for ordinary people to see where the restraint comes in. It seems to me that, if one is dealing with problems of this nature, and if one is thinking of new taxes, as the government is, then restraint surely has to be part of the solution.

• (1130)

We have heard stories of what restraint has been exercised, but we do not see an effective application of restraint on government expenditures. Whenever the government tiptoes up to the problem, as the Minister of Finance did in connection with the universal programs a short time ago, it tiptoes back fairly quickly, and I do not blame them for that because this is a touchy problem. But, if the government is going to deal with the fundamental economic problems of this nation, it will not be able to tiptoe much longer because the facts will not allow that.

Charles Lynch made a cogent remark the other day which I feel inclined to endorse.

Senator Olson: Who is that?

Senator Roblin: Charles Lynch. He's a journalist. You may have heard of him.

Senator Olson: I don't read him very often.

Hon. David Walker: He doesn't think much of you either.

Senator Roblin: Well, I think you should try reading him because there is occasionally a little nugget in Charlie Lynch, and here is one of them. When talking about the government's policy, he says it is a "sour legacy." Reflect, on those words, honourable senators—a "sour legacy." He went on to state:

> —budget measures committing future governments—

Whether it is to be formed by my honourable friends opposite or others.

> —to astronomical deficits and built-in high unemployment.

A sour legacy and the result of expediency. It is a human failing to be expedient; it is a human failing to say: "Well, we will patch the thing up in the short term and let the future take care of itself." When you have been in office as long as my honourable friends opposite have been—something like 14 years—the short term has a habit of becoming the long term, and the short term catches up with you.

I think the government's policy can be described as being a series of well-meant, short-term expedient measures to get them over a particular hump—never facing a problem when they should, postponing decisions as long as possible, going in for gradualism when gradualism is obviously a fatal policy, and refusing to face the difficulties with an effective challenge to the problems they see in front of them, and the Canadian public are the innocent victims of that. So far they have been re-electing my honourable friends opposite, so I presume they must either be satisfied with them or they really do not understand what is being done to them.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The third alternative is that you might be wrong.

Senator Roblin: Yes, the third alternative is that I might be wrong. I admit that. I can recall being wrong on one occasion before.

An Hon. Senator: In 1943.

Senator Roblin: In '43, you say? Well, my memory is not that good.

Senator Walker: He is only laughing at his own joke, so do not worry about it.

Senator Roblin: I see. Well, the point of the matter is that we now have a measure before us that continues to invite us along the primrose path. It says, "Borrow now, pay later." I thought that slogan had been thoroughly discredited in the general public's estimation of the matter over the past few years, but not with respect to my honourable friends. They say, "Borrow now, pay later; borrow now, tax later; borrow now and commit the biggest single growth area in the expenditures to interest payments; handcuff ourselves when we cannot do any good when good is required; and, above all, leave the whole mess for somebody else to look after later on."

Honourable senators, you will be surprised to hear, after that diatribe, that I intend to vote for this measure because the government has left responsible people no possible alternative. There is no way one can decline to support the measure because of the need that has to be met, but to say that by supporting the measure one condones the policy that made it necessary is something else altogether.

That I cannot condone; that I cannot excuse; that I condemn. I vote for the measure but condemn the policy.

Senator Olson: If Senator Roblin agrees, I have one or two questions for him.

First of all, the whole thrust of his speech was to really accuse the government of being flexible in responding to conditions that change from time to time. He also levelled a great deal of criticism at forecasts that did not turn out.

In a situation where there were economic conditions—some of which were very important—beyond the borders of Canada, would he have recommended that we remain inflexible in dealing with social programs and other measures which would ease some of the pain?

• (1135)

Senator Roblin: Of course not, honourable senators, of course not! One cannot load on the people of this country the consequences of my honourable friend's mistakes all in one blow. Of course not! That cannot be done. But I say to my honourable friend that when times were good—and we had some good times in the last ten years—when it would have been prudent to reduce the debt and the deficit and have none, they did not to it. If you look back at the past six or eight years, some of which were good times, the deficit of this country never sank below $10 billion. That was when money was worth a lot more than it is now. If the government had followed a prudent policy then of reducing its deficits or eliminating them when times were good, it would then have the power to do the good things that should be done and which it now finds itself so hard pressed to put into effect.

I say to my honourable friend that I do not think he should in one fell swoop throw the burden of his mistakes on the people of this country. I think the people of this country will hold him responsible for having worked the government and the nation into that position.

Senator Olson: I think my honourable friend is now arguing about what might or should have been done six or ten years ago, and so on. In the government's determination to bring down inflation, however, we set up the six-and-five program. The opposition, both in this house and in the other place, and the public have criticized us every step of the way.

Did I take it from the honourable senator's speech that from here on he is going to help the government to achieve those goals instead of again criticizing every single item where the six-and-five is being applied so that we can reach some of those targets?

Senator Roblin: I like my honourable friend's questions. I hope he has a few more. If my honourable friend has any memory at all, he will remember that we on this side of the house did not oppose six-and-five carte blanche. We opposed selective application of six-and-five to old age pensioners and widows, and people of that sort. We did not oppose six-and-five. My honourable friend can count on us that any time he comes up with a practical suggestion that is good for the country, we are not going to dig in our heels to oppose him but are going to urge him on. I say to him, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The only way we can judge my honourble friend is by what he and his colleagues have done. That is the record. For him to say I should not make reference to that, seems to me to be a position that is hard to justify.

Senator Olson: We welcome your support.

Senator Roblin: I also say to my honourable friend not only is the record of the past unsatisfactory, but if he takes a look at the figures that are contained in the fiscal forecast produced by the Minister of Finance he will see that he is leading us down the same garden path for four years to come.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: Senator Roblin said one other major thrust as a solution was to get interest rates down—I think he said by one or two more percentage points—but he failed to advise in that speech, which is very important, how much they have come down. Would he like to acknowledge that they have come down somewhere between nine and ten percentage points within the last ten months?

Senator Roblin: Well, I would be happy to do so, but the Minister of Finance in the committee told us why. He said that it was not because of the policy of the Government of Canada but because American rates had come down, and that is a good thing. I am happy about that and I want to see more of it. I said to the Minister of Finance in the committee, and I say to this minister, "I want to encourage you to make that trend effective to the point where our interest rates are down another one or two points."

Senator Olson: We are doing a good job, but just not getting it done fast enough.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is doing a good job of riding on the coattails of his American friends, and I do not object to that because no reasonable man would maintain that the American economy has no effect in Canada. Of course it has. When we talk about interest rates we are going to get into a different argument, which is not in this debate, about the attitude of the government with respect to the Canadian dollar, because it is the Canadian dollar which is the touchstone, the talisman, of interest rate management by the Bank of Canada today and, therefore, the government. That is the point that we have to get into if we are going to talk about interest rates.

I want to say to my honourable friend that the biggest, single thing that his government can do to improve the economy of Canada these days is to get those interest rates down. The ability to finance the purchase of a car at 8.9 per cent, because the dealer is making a special offer, has made the car business boom—nothing else. When you see what has happened to the construction of houses when interest rates have come down a little, you can understand that that great underpinning of the Canadian economy is highly sensitive to interest rates. It seems to me that if you want any proof of the importance of interest rates, just look around and you will see it.

• (1140)

My honourable friends have been following a policy of tying the interest rate to the Canadian dollar, and I am saying to them that they should now consider the advisability, not of abandoning the Canadian dollar to whatever depths it might sink—because I think it is pretty strong and, in fact, the minister was boasting about how strong it was—but of using that fact in order to bring interest rates down a little more in this country.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition asked me if I proposed to speak this morning on this bill, and I indicated that I would not. I am going to vote for this bill, Bill C-151, and I am going to vote for it for exactly the same reasoning that compels the Deputy Leader of the Opposition to say that he is going to vote for it. However, I want to express one thought that I think should be borne in mind. This is a bill to provide supplementary borrowing authority. The government was completely unfettered when it drafted the original bill. Criticism had not yet been levelled, and the government decided to ask for borrowing authority in the amount of $14.7 billion. But the bill was amended in the House of Commons, and the authority that we are being asked to approve now is not to exceed in the whole $10.7 billion, a difference of exactly $4 billion. If the government can manage the affairs of the country with a borrowing authority of $10.7 billion, then why in the name of conscience did it ask for $14.7 billion? What was it going to do with the additional borrowing authority?

Honourable senators, I have some doubt as to how much borrowing authority is really needed because I think there may be unexpired borrowing authorities which would enable the government to carry out the business of this country without this new burden of debt. Of course, the new burden is necessary because of the government's economic policy!

The only thought I want to leave with you is that the government, when it thought that it could get away with it, felt it should have nearly $15 billion worth of borrowing authority. It is finally settling for a little more than $10 billion, and it thinks that we will not notice the difference, but we do know that at least the other $4 billion will not be added unnecessarily to the burden already borne by the Canadian public.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I have to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-151.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have only two or three points to make in reply on second reading. I appreciate that Senator Donahoe, who spoke last this morning, was perhaps not present yesterday evening when the explanation was given as to the $4 billion.

Senator Donahoe: I know it was a compromise.

Senator Frith: Of course, he has not had an opportunity to read last night's Debates of the Senate. Therefore, I will deal with deal with that point first.

The original bill did ask for a borrowing authority of $14.7 billion, and the present bill does ask for $10.7 billion, a difference of $4 billion. The original request was for $10.7 billion plus $4 billion as a contingency or standby. Honourable senators, as I explained yesterday, a contingency amount is necessary and always has been as part of the borrowing authority for any government, no matter of what party, in order to respond to foreign exchange pressures. A request was made in the other place that the $4 billion, which was asked for as a contingency, be not included in the borrowing authority but that it be set aside, and, if the government needed that contingency of $4 billion, it should come back to Parliament and ask for it on the basis of a limit of three days' debate. As honourable senators know, a contingency amount is necessary for any government. It is not really a matter of policy; it is a technical requirement of any borrowing authority. The amounts of a contingency fund are often very high, and the need is usally in an emergency.

A request was made by the opposition, and the government acceded to it, but it does not change in any way the amount of borrowing authority asked for. It simply divides it into two instalments. From the outset the government has asked for $10.7 billion so that it can plan its cash requirements, and, if it requires it, it will ask for the additional $4 billion for contingency. The $4 billion is set aside, and the government can come back and ask for it on a limit of three days' debate in the other place.

Honourable senators, I will now deal with three points raised during Senator Roblin's intervention.

First, I agree with two points he made. Essentially, the bill before us now is a technical bill and should really be supported or not supported on the basis of its technical efficiency or deficiency. We agree that it is a bill in the usual form and that it is technically correct.

I also agree with Senator Roblin's point that we must connect the borrowing authority with the budget because any budget requires borrowing authority. Even if you are budgeting for a surplus, you still need a borrowing authority. Even a Liberal budget, which received a Roblin gold medal, would still require a borrowing authority. Therefore, I believe it is quite appropriate for him to use the borrowing authority debate as an occasion to expound his views on the budget. This is quite understandable and correct, especially in light of the fact that he asked questions about the budget forecast during the debate of Bill C-143, the interim borrowing authority. When he was told that he would have to wait for the budget, he accepted that.

We have now, in fact, tied the borrowing authority cash requirements precisely to the budget forecasts and the budget requirements. Therefore, as I say, I think it is appropriate for him to have made his views known on the budget while debating the borrowing authority. Even though his views on the budget were very negative, he still intends to support the borrowing authority bill. I believe that is a logical and sound position for him to take.

Honourable senators, that leads me to the last point. I do not want to sit down without making it clear that, while I think it is appropriate for Senator Roblin to discuss and criticize the budget during the debate on the borrowing authority, I emphasize that we on this side believe it is a good budget. It is a budget that has been supported widely throughout the country. It is a recovery budget, and I think it is already beginning to work both psychologically and practically as a recovery budget.

Honourable senators, we will support this bill, but, of course, we do so for different reasons. We do so not only because it is necessary and technically correct, but because it is a part of what we consider to be a most salutary budget.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

• (1150)

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

PROPOSALS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the Budget Speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on 19th April, 1983.—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): This order has been adjourned in the name of Senator Murray. That is a mistake, is it not?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, I believe that Senator Murray simply adjourned the debate to leave it open for some other honourable senator, but I am not sure.

Senator Roblin: Yes, that is correct. I recall that now. Therefore, I do not think that Senator Murray would object to anyone else speaking on this topic this morning. I must say that I am not aware of whether any other member of the opposition wishes to continue this debate; probably not.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we did indirectly debate this topic this morning through speaking to the borrowing authority bill. I must say that I was encouraged to perhaps have more Friday morning sittings. I found the debate this morning very engaging.

Hon. Jack Marshall: It would be even better to sit on the weekends; why not Saturday or Sunday?

Senator Frith: Perhaps we could put this order over until next Tuesday to see whether any other honourable senator wishes to speak to it.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

• (1230)

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Salaries Act;

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3);

An Act to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 7, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 7, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, June 9, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the motion that implements the experiment that we have been trying for some weeks now, that is, to sit on Tuesdays at 8 p.m., and on Thursdays at 2 p.m. This leaves Wednesday mornings open for caucus or other exigencies, and Wednesday afternoons for Senate committee meetings.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government what committees will be sitting tomorrow afternoon?

Senator Frith: The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to deal with Bill C-151, the borrowing authority bill. That is the only notice I have received so far.

Senator Flynn: There is only one committee meeting?

Senator Frith: As far as I know at this moment, yes.

Senator Flynn: Do you not think that that committee could hold its meeting at a later time? In fact, my question is: Why not adjourn until Tuesday of next week?

Senator Frith: Do you mean adjourn the Senate this evening until Tuesday of next week?

Senator Flynn: Yes, because if we have nothing to deal with in the Senate tomorrow, will we have something worthwhile on Thursday?

Senator Frith: The Leader of the Opposition and I never seem to be able to agree on what is worthwhile and what is not worthwhile. There is something ironic about my thinking we should meet for Question Period when the Leader of the Opposition thinks we should not.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: But you don't have to listen to the answers.

Senator Frith: All that Senator Donahoe has done is add to the irony, but as far as this week is concerned, the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to examine the borrowing authority bill is good reason for the Senate to sit on Thursday. If that committee reports to the Senate on Thursday that means we can have third reading of the bill at that time, including debate, if necessary. That was the plan we set up last week. This is the reason why I think that, given the option of adjourning this evening until Tuesday, it would be better to adjourn until Thursday at 2.00 p.m. to consider the report and possibly have third reading of the bill.

Senator Flynn: I am wondering why the leader does not think it would be useful to have a Question Period tomorrow when he thinks we should have one on Thursday. The deputy leader says it is important to have a Question Period, so why not have one tomorrow?

• (2010)

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, as one who feels that our Progressive Conservative friends across the way need all the support they can get at their convention—

Hon. C. William Doody: Don't be nasty!

Senator Buckwold: —my question to the deputy leader is: Why would we not sit tomorrow and leave Thursday free so that honourable senators across the way are able to spend their time at what I think is an important political event?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Buckwold: I am just wondering why we need to sit on Thursday. Were the Senate to sit tomorrow I am sure the National Finance Committee would be given leave to meet at the same time.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the irony continues. This plan of sitting on Tuesdays and Thursdays and leaving Wednesday open for committee meetings is a result of consultation between the government leadership and the opposition leadership.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: When was that arrangement made?

Senator Frith: If it is important to know the exact date of those meetings, I will take that question as notice and endeavour to obtain the information, but I do not think it is relevant to what I am saying at the moment. If we are going to have committee meetings on Wednesday afternoons, we forgo Question Period on that day.

As to the question put by Senator Buckwold, the answer is the same. We asked whether it would be desirable, in view of the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party is holding a leadership convention this weekend, for the Senate to sit on Tuesday and Wednesday instead of Tuesday and Thursday, and we were told it would be quite satisfactory to continue—

Senator Flynn: You were told by whom?

Senator Frith: We were told by Senator Roblin. I am sorry to have to quote him when he is not present, but he said it would be quite satisfactory to continue with this plan, which many honourable senators have found satisfactory, notwithstanding the fact that this convention is taking place. We try to run this house to the satisfaction of all honourable senators, or a majority of them, and if we are being told that they do not wish to continue with this system then we will make the necessary changes to accommodate that wish.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, would the deputy leader explain to us why last week, when we were scheduled to sit on Tuesday evening and Thursday afternoon, we ended up sitting on Thursday afternoon, Thursday evening and again on Friday morning? Is there any possibility that a similar potion or dose will be administered this week.

Senator Frith: That is not likely, but possible. I know that a hard-working senator like Senator Donahoe is always pleased to extend himself in order to accomplish the work of the Senate. Those sittings took place last week because we announced that they were to take place.

Senator Flynn: Oh, I guess that is enough.

Senator Frith: Has everyone had enough?

Hon. Charles McElman: Not really.

Honourable senators, it seems to me that what Senator Frith has been talking about is a general arrangement that was made. To a general arrangement, there are always exceptions. This week in Canada there is an exception. The Progressive Conservative Party, one of the two traditional—Senator Donahoe: —great parties.

Senator McElman: As Senator Donahoe says, one of the two traditional, great, free enterprise parties of Canada, is going to hold a national convention and that convention begins on Thursday.

• (2015)

An Hon. Senator: They will have a new leader.

Senator McElman: They will have a leader selected by that convention; a leader who at some point in time, God forbid, may very well become Prime Minister of Canada. It is a very important event for Canada. It seems to me that when you make an arrangement you must always be prepared to make exceptions to it. Therefore, this week, since we are not overburdened with legislation—

Hon. Jack Marshall: We have not been overburdened for five years.

Senator McElman: —and not overburdened with committee activity, it seems to me that we should rearrange whatever committee activity we have and whatever legislative duties we have, and provide for the delegates within this chamber to that convention of that other great party in Canada an opportunity to participate fully in the proceedings. I urge the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the house leader to arrange the schedule accordingly.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator McElman, as usual, is exactly right. There are always exceptions to prove rules, and when you have a general policy there are always exceptions to it.

I presented precisely that position—although not as eloquently, of course, as Senator McElman—to the opposition. I asked, "Should we not then make an exception this week and not sit on Thursday? Would it be better for you, members of the opposition, if we did not sit next Thursday?" The answer I received was, "No, that is fine; we can sit on Thursday. I think we can probably hold our breath until the Senate adjourns on Thursday."

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I would ask the Deputy Leader of the Government what committees will be meeting on Thursday.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I receive no private information about Senate committee meetings. I receive the same yellow sheets, the same white sheets, the same yellow sheets modifying the yellow sheets, and the same white sheets modifying the white sheets that every senator receives, including the senator who has asked me what committee meetings there will be. According to my notes, on Thursday there is to be a meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages at 3.30 p.m. in Room 112-N. That is the only information I have. Committee meetings are scheduled in accordance with the notices that appear on each senator's desk.

Senator Flynn: Could the deputy leader not ask Senator Lafond to inform him of the program each week?

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I am afraid that I am no better informed since I receive only the same notices. Where and when committees will meet depends on the decisions of individual committee chairmen.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE SENATE

REFORM—PREPARATION OF GREEN PAPER—ANNOUNCEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Recently I asked the Leader of the Government a few questions about the green paper on Senate reform announced by the Prime Minister.

The Leader of the Government told us at the time that he was not aware of such a document being drafted. The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Reform of the Senate has had numerous sittings over the past two weeks. Having heard interesting witnesses such as Senator Frith and others who have aired their views before senators—

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: And Senator Roblin—

Senator Asselin: And Senator Roblin—who have aired their views before senators and Members of Parliament, I believe that the general feeling among committee members is that we ought to have the green paper before the committee so as to know the intentions of the government, for it may possibly make a few suggestions on Senate reform. If we receive the green paper—let us say this fall in October after we have heard a number of witnesses—it will have a certain aspect of partisanship and it will be difficult for members of the majority to remain neutral with respect to the propositions of the government.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he has sought information and whether he can tell us today if that green paper is being drafted and if he has had discussions about it with his colleagues. Does he know when that green paper will be presented to the Senate and the House of Commons so that it may be referred to the Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate?

• (2020)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Asselin slightly misunderstood my comments of the other day.

Hon. Jack Marshall: The Prime Minister said it in the House two days ago.

Senator Olson: Perhaps I might be permitted to finish what I was going to say. I do not believe I said that I was unaware of a green paper. I am aware that one is being prepared. Whatever I said is on record. I am not sure of the day on which these questions were raised, but I know that on one occasion, at least, when Senator Asselin was particularly curious about this paper, I did acknowledge that I was aware of such a green paper.

I should tell Senator Asselin briefly that I have had some discussions about this matter, particularly respecting his main point of interest, the timing involved. I hope, and I have some reason to believe, that it will be presented to the committee before the summer recess. I am not certain of the implication of his comment about partisanship and so on, but I can assure Senator Asselin that it will be the usual objective analysis of the situation.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): As long as "the usual" means what we think it means, there will be no problem.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Last week I asked him a question regarding the problems of the grain handlers on the west coast. If I remember correctly, he assured us that the government is keeping an eye on the situation.

I notice that a similar question was directed to the Prime Minister in the other place. The indication was given that at this time the government is not planning on interfering—not even to the extent of appointing a conciliator or mediator.

Could the minister tell us the stage at which the government will consider appointing a mediator? Does the government intend to let the situation follow its course, either to a strike or a lockout situation?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the Minister of Labour and his assistant deputy minister, Bill Kelly, are keeping a very close watch on the situation and are in contact with the parties involved. Work is continuing; there is no slowdown; grain is being delivered through the port at rates that are normal for the work that is going on.

The government feels that the right course at the present time is to ask the parties involved to get together and to settle their differences. It has been suggested to them that, if they wish to have a conciliator step in, there should be some prior indication that the parties are willing to give some ground. That indication has not yet been forthcoming.

Certainly, I have nothing to add to what has been said in the other place. All I can say is that the government is keeping a close watch on the situation in the hope that the parties themselves will settle their dispute. If, at some point the situation warrants further intervention, that will be considered.

Senator Steuart: I have a supplementary question. Could the minister indicate whether the parties are at the negotiating table? Has either side, or have both sides, asked for a mediator or for conciliation?

• (2025)

Senator Argue: They are not meeting at the moment. They have wired the government asking for a mediator at this time. The government felt that it would not be constructive to comply with the request at present; that the most constructive thing to do was to ask the parties to negotiate and, through normal collective bargaining, to settle their own differences.

[Translation]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT WITH QUEBEC'S PARTICIPATION

Hon. Martial Asselin: Last week I asked the Leader of the Government to seek information concerning the Prime Minister's statement on the francophone Commonwealth which he had discussed with French President Mitterand at the Williamsburg economic summit. The Leader of the Government told me that he would obtain some information and make a statement. Is he ready to make that statement?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I am sorry, honourable senators, but I have to report that the answer to that question is not included in the delayed answers I have this evening. I do have another, but it is not in reply to Senator Asselin's question.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have learned this afternoon that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is going to appear before the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages. The minister promised me that he would make a full statement on the use of French in his department.

It will be recalled that two weeks ago I questioned him about the use of French and the problems francophone sportsmen are facing with his department, and he told me he was taking care of that. He was supposed to make a detailed statement in the Senate. Would the minister make a statement in the Senate now, tomorrow or the day after, or does he prefer to make the statement before the joint committee?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, it is my intention to present a report on this subject to the Senate, as I promised I would. Frankly, I am of the opinion that, out of deference to honourable senators, it would be more appropriate for me to make a full statement to the Senate before I appear before the joint committee. I think that would be the proper and appropriate thing for me to do.

I have discussed the matter with my officials, and I had planned to present that statement in the Senate within a few days. I do not yet have the specific date, but certainly before the summer recess.

With respect to appearing before the joint committee, negotiations are under way between officials in my department and the offices of the joint chairmen of the committee to determine the best date for me to appear.

Senator Asselin: Would it be possible for the minister, before making a statement in the Senate, to provide a copy of it, say about 12 hours in advance, to the official opposition?

Senator Perrault: I will certainly endeavour to have copies made available in both of Canada's official languages as far in advance as possible. I understand the report is in its final stage of preparation. As I said a moment ago, under most circumstances it is appropriate for a minister to present a report to the Senate before appearing before a committee in connection with that report.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, apparently it was intimated in committee today that the minister will appear before the committee, possibly on June 16. Did I understand the minister to say that he would present a report to the Senate before the end of the session? The end of the session will be June 30.

[Senator Asselin.]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Nobody knows.

Senator Bosa: How does the minister reconcile these two things? Will he give us an undertaking that we shall have the report in the Senate before he meets with the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages?

Senator Perrault: I am sure that the members of the joint committee will be the first to agree that it is appropriate for that report to be presented in the Senate before the minister appears before the committee. That is a courtesy I think honourable senators should be extended. Communication was made today with the office of the joint chairman of the committee, Senator Murray, in which I understand it was suggested that on Thursday or Friday of this week it may be possible for me to appear before the committee. However, I cannot say whether or not the report to the Senate will be ready before that time. I repeat, it would be my hope to give the Senate the advantage of hearing the contents of that report before I appear before the committee.

● (2030)

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, in that case I presume that consideration should be given by the joint chairmen to the possibility of the report being made to the Senate before the minister's appearance before the joint committee. That might be to the advantage of the committee. The question is: Would it be advantageous to the Joint Committee on Official Languages were it to await the outcome of the minister's announcement in the Senate prior to his appearing before the committee?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I believe that would be the appropriate course of action. There is no hesitation on my part to appear before the committee. With respect to bilingualism in the department, as I stated earlier, progress has been made and more progress is required. That is freely admitted. Progress has been made in recent weeks and months in the area of extending bilinguilism in the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the steering committee has taken into consideration the possibility of not meeting later than June 23—

Senator Bosa: June 21.

Senator Guay: The honourable senator says June 21—would it be possible for the minister to make an announcement before that date, so that it may be given consideration by the committee by that date?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, every endeavour will be made to provide the report by that date. To a certain extent I am in the hands of the departmental officials who are in the process of completing the report and having it translated. All I can do is pledge that I will do my best to have the report in time for the summer adjournment, so that I will be in a position to meet with the committee.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LTD.—1983 CAPITAL BUDGET

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister of state responsible for Canadair. Did he, as minister, table by April 15, in both houses of Parliament, in accordance with the Financial Administration Act, the capital budget of Canadair for the 1983 financial year; and if not, why not?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, Canadair is not one of the scheduled companies required to file such a statement.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, may I say that I anticipated that reply from the minister, who has been trying to avoid Parliament with regard to the Canadair fiasco. I would point out to him that Treasury Board has stated that it has a legal opinion—which I presume was obtained from the law officers of the Crown—to the effect that Canadair is a crown corporation that is covered by the Financial Administration Act; and that it meets the two requirements, that is, it is wholly owned by the government and is a corporation that reports to Parliament—or, at least, is supposed to report to Parliament—through a minister.

● (2035)

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I would appreciate it if Senator Phillips would show me the legal opinion in question. Certainly I am not aware of it.

With respect to the question of trying to avoid Parliament, Senator Phillips may not be aware that I appeared before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Public Accounts, along with officials of Canada Development Investment Corporation, and that I spent this afternoon appearing before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. In both committees I tabled a 60-page report on Canadair's financial and business affairs. I have given several hours of testimony today and I expect that I will continue with my report in the course of the next week.

The report I tabled today was as a result of my undertaking to the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the other place, given on December 6 and repeated on February 24, that I would bring to those committees a full report on the affairs of Canadair.

Should Senator Phillips rise to his feet to ask me why I have not taken such action in the Senate, I want to point out that the supplementary estimates requesting $240 million for Canadair are before the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the other place and that the balance sheet of Canadair, audited for the year ending December 31, 1982, was made available by me last week to the Public Accounts Committee, and their proceedings are based on the receipt of that financial statement. I also want to tell Senator Phillips that Canadair has not previously had its financial statement made available to committees in the other place.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, the honourable senator partially guessed my next question. It is not, "Why the House of Commons first?" but, "When will the minister make a statement in the Senate on this very important subject, as he indicated in his earlier answer?"

Senator Austin: I circulated to honourable senators today copies of the 60-page report on Canadair to which I have just referred. I am not sure whether the honourable senator has received his copy, but if he has not he should receive it in tomorrow's mail. If the Senate wishes to debate CDIC and its subsidiary companies, I would be very happy to go through a "Hayden" study, if it is in the interest of honourable senators that such a motion be proposed.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have one brief question for the minister arising from the financial statement prepared by the auditors. The statement states that the money requested is necessary to provide the company with working capital required to ensure that the company will continue as a going concern. If a corporation that has a $1.5 billion loss in 1982 is "a going concern," how would the minister describe the situation had it been reversed and we were talking about a $1.5 billion profit?

Senator Austin: Certainly I would not be asking Parliament for additional funds if there were such a profit. The phrase "as a going concern" was included by the auditors to indicate that the company continues in the ordinary course of its business.

The purpose of the request for $240 million is that certain interests, responsibilities, payments to suppliers and obligations which currently exist be met by Canadair. I said in evidence before the committee of the other place that I shall be back in the fall seeking additional funds, and that at that time I shall table a corporate plan dealing with the Canadair Challenger, our expectations that that very fine aircraft can find a market and that it can be produced on the basis that there will be no substantial additional loss in cash terms.

● (2040)

ROYAL VISIT

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES, THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES—NOVA SCOTIA—OFFICIAL DINNER—GUEST LIST

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Recently, included in the mail delivered to me was an agenda dealing with the visit to this country of Their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Wales. The entries on that agenda indicate that Their Royal Highnesses will visit Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Ottawa.

One is struck by the fact that there will be no official dinner given by the Government of Canada for Their Royal Highnesses in Ottawa, yet there will be an official dinner in Nova Scotia hosted by the Prime Minister of Canada. That would not seem unusual if that were, in fact, the only dinner they were to attend, but the Premier of New Brunswick is going to host a dinner on their behalf, as is the Premier of Newfoundland and as is the Premier of Prince Edward Island.

When it comes to Nova Scotia, however, even though the premier of that province is anxious to act as host, it is not considered adequate or satisfactory that he should do so, and the federal government is to be the host on that occasion. That, in turn, puts upon the federal authorities the duty or obligation of making up the guest list.

The dinner, I am told, is to be for 750 persons. I am also informed by the Chief of Protocol for the Province of Nova Scotia that when the decision was made for the guest list to be prepared in Ottawa he sent the Nova Scotia protocol list, consisting of some 204 names, to Ottawa. That list included members of the Legislature, senators and members of Parliament.

This morning I read in the newspaper that the Progressive Conservative members of Parliament for Halifax are not invited to attend the dinner and have been told that they should be satisfied with appearing at a reception in Ottawa to which they will be invited. However, in their home province, among their own electorate, it seems that they are not considered adequate persons to be invited to the dinner. Likewise, the Progressive Conservative senators for similar areas are not invited to the dinner. I presume I have not been invited, since the time of the dinner is approaching and I have not received an invitation.

My question is simply this: If some senators from the province of Nova Scotia are invited to be guests at that official dinner and others of a different party are not, will the Leader of the Government be kind enough to tell us the criteria used in making that selection?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want to say that I do not accept the reasons alleged by Senator Donahoe. A number of matters in connection with a royal visit are the subject of negotiation between so-called Protocol and Buckingham Palace. I will take that question as notice at this time.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I would like to remind the minister that he was not requested to accept my comment; he was asked to provide some information. If the Leader of the Government is not prepared to accept my premise, my supplementary question is: Is he prepared to make inquiries to ascertain whether or not what I say is correct; and if so, is he prepared to tell us the criteria that were used?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have just said that I will do that. However, I would not like Senator Donahoe, or any other senator, to assume from the fact that I have taken the question as notice to seek further information that that means I am going to reply specifically to the kinds of allegation he has made.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody: Perhaps the Leader of the Government can inform me whether Senator Austin has gone for the evening, or whether he will return to the chamber. I wish to ask a supplementary question to that of Senator Phillips' on Canadair.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I do not know whether or not he will be back tonight. Perhaps word could be sent to him respecting Senator Doody's question. I can assure you, however, that he will be attending to some important business.

Senator Doody: I hesitate to mislead the Senate by stating that the questions are important; the answers, however, might be.

Senator Olson: The one is related to the other.

MEMBERS—DEDUCTIONS FOR NON-ATTENDANCE

Hon. Azellus Denis: I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. In an ordinary session we are allowed to be absent from the Senate for 21 days, after which we pay a "fine" for every day we are absent. However, this session has lasted for over three years now, which is much longer than a session ordinarily lasts. Is it the intention of the government to abide by those same rules respecting the number of days a senator may be absent without penalty?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the members of this and the other house are aware of what happens to that statutory requirement when the session lasts as long as this one, which I think is now the longest in history. I shall not go into the reasons for its having lasted as long as it has, but I have to advise Senator Denis that the Senate and House of Commons Act merely says "a session", and that means from the opening until prorogation. There is no provision in that act for any exception; it is for the whole session, no matter how short or how long.

Senator Denis: Is there any way to change the law as it now stands, either by introducing a bill or by amending the Constitution?

Senator Olson: As I understand it, this provision is not part of constitutional law; it is part of the Senate and House of Commons Act. The only way that can be changed is by an amendment to that act.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Leader of the Government. I have examined that problem and, in my opinion, it requires a very simple amendment. Would the government support such an amending bill, were it to be introduced in this chamber?

All of the provisions in the Senate and House of Commons Act with regard to remuneration are on an annual basis. Section 37, which is the one dealing with the penalty after 21 days of absence in a session, refers to a session rather than a year. It is a mistake that was made when the other amendments were made.

If the Leader of the Government is saying that if an honourable senator brings in such an amendment the government will support it, we could do so tomorrow. No, not tomorrow. I had forgotten that we are to adjourn until Thursday, but we could continue with this on Thursday.

• (2050)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition will recognize that he is making representations now as to what might be done. I am aware that it might be as simple as that, but I am sure he is aware that I should not give commitments on behalf of the government before I have consulted with the government.

PLACEMENT OF NATIONAL FLAG IN CHAMBER

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I was absent for a few days last week so I may be mistaken, but I think the Canadian flag used to be more prominently displayed in the chamber. It now seems to be relegated to the corner. I do not know what the reason for that is, but I certainly deplore the change.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NORTH ATLANTIC SALMON AGREEMENT—RATIFICATION BY CANADA

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Molson on May 31 concerning the ratification of the North Atlantic Salmon Agreement by Canada. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Canada signed the Convention for the Conservation of Salmon in the North Atlantic Ocean on March 18, 1982 and intends to ratify it by the Fall of this year. Canadian ratification will bring the convention into force. The main factor in determining the timing of Canadian ratification is the protection of salmon of Canadian origin harvested off the west coast of Greenland. The agreement in the form of an Exchange of Letters between Canada and the EEC concerning their Fisheries Relations provides a specific limit on the amount of such salmon that may be harvested until December 31, 1983 or until the convention enters into force, whichever comes first. The convention does not contain a specific limit. We have, therefore, preferred for the 1983 fishing season to rely on the legally binding provision limiting interception in the Canada-EEC Agreement. Since this provision lapses in any case at the end of this year, we will ratify the convention before December 31, 1983.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

QUEBEC-MAGDALEN ISLANDS—PLIGHT OF FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to questions asked by Senator Asselin and Senator Thériault on May 31, 1983, regarding the fishing industry in the Magdalen Islands. The answer is fairly long, and I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I am informed that the problem has been resolved because of an intervention by the Senate. I think the Senate should be given recognition for that.

Senator Olson: I am aware that there has been some improvement, and that perhaps the problem has been solved, but I cannot, with certainty, join with Senator Asselin in the reason he gives for it.

(The answer follows:)

On June 3, 1983, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced that an agreement has been reached between the governments of Canada and Quebec which will allow Madelipêche Inc. of the Magdalen Islands, to participate in the current fishing season.

The Government of Canada is very pleased with the agreement made with Quebec for the following reasons:

(1) Madelipêche, a Pêcheurs Unis du Québec subsidiary, is finally able to re-open its operations. That is the reason why the Government of Canada made available, one month ago, necessary funds required to allow Pêcheurs Unis and its subsidiary, Madelipêche, to operate normally while waiting for Dr. Kirby's report.

(2) The fishing vessels belonging to Madelipêche and seized by the Quebec government one month ago, are leased to Madelipêche, as suggested a month ago by the Government of Canada.

(3) Quebec has accepted that a board member will be appointed to Madelipêche by the Government of Canada. This board member will be Mr. Laurie Delaney, who is a resident of the Magdalen Islands. Accordingly, Madelipêche is no longer an exclusive provincial agency.

(4) Taking the population as hostages in an attempt to secure the licences from the Government of Canada did not succeed. Blackmail is always reprehensible. Licences have been issued on a strictly temporary basis, and for the present fishing season only, without committing the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on any future decision.

(5) Madelipêche will not be able to take legal action to claim the $2.7 million during the current fishing season. This is one of the reasons why the Government of Quebec has, through a unique piece of legislation, placed Madelipêche under trusteeship. If Madelipêche were to pursue legal measures, it would automatically lose its temporary licences.

(6) The Quebec government acknowledges that the seizure it effected would have led to a chain of similar legal actions on the part of the hundred or so creditors of Pêcheurs Unis, and consequently, would have led Pêcheurs Unis to bankruptcy, which provides employment for almost 2,000 persons.

(7) The Quebec government has committed itself to preventing Madelipêche from suing Pêcheurs Unis and all other creditors will also avoid taking any legal action. All the creditors will be treated equally, as requested by the Government of Canada from the beginning. The Quebec government chose to proceed unilaterally by seizing fishing vessels.

(8) The commitment by the Quebec government has practically eliminated the disastrous effects of the seizure and the threat contained in Bill 23. Madelipêche will not be able to sue Pêcheurs Unis during the current fishing season. Each one of the hundred or so creditors will have to forgo any legal action that would place them in a more favourable position than that of other creditors.

(9) The other creditors, who had not proceeded with seizures, acknowledge that the agreement with the Quebec government safeguards the above principle, and the seizure that it carried out has not put it in a more favourable position.

Under the terms of this agreement, which is indicated by the exchange of letters attached, Mr. Jean Garon, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in Quebec, has accepted the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans' request to appoint Mr. Laurie Delaney, of the Magdalen Islands, as a third member of the board of Madelipêche. Mr. Garon has also permitted SOQUIA (Société québécoise d'initiatives agro-alimentaires) to lease to Madelipêche the six trawlers that were owned by Madelipêche up to April 25, and that are now the property of SOQUIA following their seizure by the provincial authorities. In addition, Mr. Garon has assured Mr. De Bané that Madelipêche will not demand payment during the current fishing season of the $2.7 million owed to it by Pêcheurs Unis du Québec.

This firm commitment made by the provincial authorities finally allows the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to grant Madelipêche the six fishing licences requested by the company, which is in keeping with existing federal fisheries policy.

The agreement allows the Magdalen Islands fishermen to participate directly in the trusteeship of Madelipêche decreed by Quebec. Besides, it protects the plant workers of other Pêcheurs Unis plants, and the fishermen who supply these plants, against forced unemployment during the current fishing season as a result of any legal action intended by Madelipêche, despite the provincial trusteeship.

The only disappointment is that Madelipêche did not re-open at the same time as other Pêcheurs Unis plants, and that it took almost one month for the Quebec government to accept the position of the Government of Canada, which had been accepted by all the other creditors, without exception.

[Senator Olson.]

Text of telex

June 2, 1983

TO: Mr. Jean Garon
Minister
Agriculture, pêcheries et alimentation
200 Chemin Ste-Foy
Québec, Québec
G1R 4X6

FROM: Pierre De Bané, P.C.
M.P. (Matapédia-Matane)
Minister of Fisheries and Oceans
Ottawa, Ontario

Dear Mr. Garon,

This is to let you know formally what has been mutually agreed upon to allow the re-opening of Madelipêche during the current summer fishing season.

I hereby confirm that I will issue Madelipêche the six requested licences for the current season, without further committing myself, after receiving your firm commitment on the following points:

(1) that Mr. Laurie Delaney, from the Magdalen Islands, will be appointed a board member of Madelipêche;

(2) that the six trawlers now owned by SOQUIA will be leased to Madelipêche;

(3) that you will personally assure that Madelipêche, as a creditor, will not claim the $2.7 million owed by Pêcheurs Unis du Québec to Madelipêche, by taking legal action during the current fishing season.

Yours truly,

Pierre De Bané

Text of telex

Québec
June 2, 1983

TO: Mr. Pierre De Bané
Minister of Fisheries and Oceans
Ottawa

Dear Mr. De Bané,

This is to let you know that:

(1) I intend to appoint Mr. Laurie Delaney, from the Magdalen Islands, as a member of the board of Madelipêche.

(2) the leasing by SOQUIA of six trawlers (of which SOQUIA is the owner) to Madelipêche will be executed.

On another matter, I will ensure that Madelipêche, as a creditor, will not claim the $2.7 million owed to Pêcheurs Unis du Québec by means of legal action. On the contrary, I will make sure that Madelipêche will wait for the results of a public inquiry, unless either or both of the concerned parties decide to improve their position after having known what this letter is all about.

Jean Garon
Minister, Agriculture, Pêcheries et Alimentation

ORDER PAPER

WRITTEN QUESTIONS NOS. 59 AND 43—REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question relates to Question No. 59 on the Order Paper.

I was informed, after two years and two months, that I should call the person responsible for parliamentary returns in the PMO regarding this question. I called that person and was advised that the reason the answer was delayed for such a long time was that information from various departments of government had to be gathered. That indicated to me that the person I was speaking to did not even know what the question was all about. To tell me that he had to gather information from various departments was utterly and absolutely ridiculous.

I am wondering if there is any way I can obtain an answer to this question, bar asking the two personnel in the freedom of information office, because that is my next step.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise me if I am on the right course?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know whether Senator Marshall is on the right course or not, because I have a little problem when reading the questions in trying to conceive what the answers may be. In many cases, Senator Marshall is asking for opinions, not facts. I think that he is asking for interpretations and many other things, and I know that those kinds of questions are very difficult to answer.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Embarrassing, too.

Senator Olson: Perhaps not so embarrassing, but my experience in this chamber and in the other place is that questions on the Order Paper are supposed to seek information as to fact. I think there is a great deal of opinion sought in this particular question.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government can camouflage as much as he wishes, but I give him credit for more common sense.

Hon. Robert Muir: Read the question.

Senator Marshall: I shall read the question. On April 1, 1981—over two years ago—I asked the following questions under Question No. 59:

1. What department or agency of government was responsible for invitations to the various functions related to President Reagan's visit?

Is that an opinion?

2. What are the qualifications of Mr. L. H. Amyot, Chief of Protocol for the Canadian Government, and what were his instructions in the preparation of the invitation list, relative to the U.S. President's visit to Canada?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is a question of fact.

Senator Marshall: The third question is:

Was the table of precedence followed in making up the invitation list and if not, why not, and what were the reasons?

4. Who were the Parliamentarians (Senators and M.P.'s) invited to the event at the National Arts and Culture Centre?

The only mistake I made was not following the advice of the Leader of the Government and calling every member of Parliament an M.P. I call those in the Senate senators.

5. Who were the guests invited to the event related to the U.S. President's visit, at the Arts and Culture Centre?

That is very simple. There must be a list.

6. Who were all those invited to the event related to the address by President Reagan to the joint session of the House of Commons and the Senate?

7. Were all Parliamentarians (Senators and M.P.'s) allowed to bring a guest, or guests, and if so, what are the details?

That is very simple as there must be a list somewhere.

8. Was any distinction made as to whether or not the Parliamentarian was a Member of the Government or not?

Again, that is very simple.

9. Were any Provincial Premiers invited to any of the events related to the U.S. President's visit and, if so, who were they?

10. Were any mayors invited to any of the events related to the U.S. President's visit and, if so, under what circumstances were they invited and who were they?

There must be a protocol list somewhere.

11. In what manner and through what process were invitations allocated to government parties and opposition parties?

Again that would be found in the protocol list. There might even be people in this chamber now who were in a position at that time to answer those questions.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: People who have since retired?

Senator Marshall: Yes, people who have since retired and have been appointed to the Senate.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, supplementary to the question asked by Senator Marshall, Question No. 43 has been on the Order Paper since January 15, 1981. I should like to inform the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the CBC asked questions seeking similar information a year ago, and it took that corporation only one year to obtain the information.

This question has been on the Order Paper now for two-and-a-half years, and if the information can be given to the CBC in one year, surely it can be given to the Senate in two-and-a-half years.

I am sure that Mr. Regan, the honourable member for Halifax, would much rather have seen the information given to the Senate than the CBC.

Senator Olson: I will take that question as notice.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government did not answer my question. Since the person responsible for parliamentary returns gave me an answer which I found to be unacceptable, and since he told me that he would have to gather information from various government departments when that information is to be found in the PMO or the PCO, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise me as to how I should go about obtaining the information? I am sure he does want to co-operate.

Senator Olson: I do want to co-operate, and shall, therefore, make further inquiries on this.

Senator Marshall is also aware of the fact that there are some hookers in what he asks. In paragraph 10 he asks whether any mayors were invited and, if so, under what circumstances were they invited and who were they. That is not factual, but opinion, as I mentioned a few minutes ago. They have to wait until that information comes in.

Senator Flynn: What?

Senator Olson: Senator Marshall asks:

> —under what circumstances were they invited and who were they?

In the next paragraph he asks:

> In what manner and through what process were invitations allocated to government parties and opposition parties?

● (2100)

I have agreed to be as helpful as I can in satisfying this enormous curiosity of Senator Marshall, but it does not change the position, and I think he understands that these are not simple facts that he is asking for.

Senator Flynn: Do you think that answer is worth anything?

Senator Marshall: I want to explain to the Leader of the Government that—

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government is putting his stupidity on the record.

Senator Marshall: —my main purpose in asking that question was to uphold the honour and the status of honourable senators. It is the first time where protocol was not followed, and someone in the Prime Minister's Office decided to extend an invitation strictly on political grounds which is against all reasoning in this country. I say again to Senator Olson, as Leader of the Government in the Senate, he should press for an answer as to why senators are downgraded in the eyes of the office of the Prime Minister. That reasoning is ridiculous and stupid, and it is time we did something about it.

[Senator Phillips.]

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED—REPORT REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 2, the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill S-32, to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I should like to speak briefly to the committee's report on Bill S-32, involving what is known as the "revolving door syndrome," as well as the problem of preventing inmates released under mandatory supervision and returned to jail for some breach of their parole from obtaining a further remission.

At the request of the Solicitor General, our first witness at the committee hearings, we heard from a wide range of witnesses, as I indicated in the comments I made last week in response to the question of whether the Senate ought to give further instructions to the committee. In my view, and certainly in the view of the opposition, it would be hard to imagine the committee giving a broader cross section of the Canadian public an opportunity to be heard. I am speaking now in fairness on both sides of that issue. For example, we heard as witnesses attorneys general, parents of victims, the corrections' people—that is, the Solicitor General's employees—and the secretary of the association representing approximately 12,000 of the Solicitor General's employees who are corrections' people and parole officers. We also heard witnesses from the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society and the various help groups.

The most amazing aspect of all of that—I regret that my colleague from Manitoba, Senator Guay, is not interested in the problem—is that no matter what part of the spectrum these people filled, they were all somewhat in agreement that the bill did nothing to address the problems that the Canadian public was facing.

With a great deal of credit to our chairman, Senator Neiman, and to the members of her committee, we attempted slowly but persistently to persuade the minister responsible that what we needed was a different kind of legislation. The key question before the Canadian public is not whether somebody loses another 20, 30 or 40 days of remission, but that out of 14,000 inmates in Canadian federal institutions a minimal number would be affected. This point was particularly impressed upon us when we met the mother of a 15-year old girl who was murdered by a man released under mandatory supervision. In that case it was certainly implied, if not said, that certain information was known to the authorities but they felt their hands were tied and released this particular inmate.

The committee went about its work trying to convince the minister that what we needed was remission which really dealt with the problem. We told the minister not to deal with measles and mumps, but with coronaries.

I am pleased to say that in principle the report itself, regardless of some technical difficulties of translation—which, I understand will be addressed later this evening—deals with the kinds of things that would have stopped, for example, Clifford Olsen, a person known to the authorities to be dangerous and a menace, being released to commit another crime.

What we are now looking at in the report presented by Senator Neiman is a somewhat emasculated version of Bill S-32. By way of explanation, that bill originally proposed that if an inmate is released under mandatory supervision—which, I am sure all senators realize, occurs after he has served two-thirds of his sentence—and if he breaches one of those conditions of his release, or commits another offence, he is brought back to the penitentiary to serve the rest of his term, and never again is able to earn further remission. The committee decided to delete that portion of the bill which dealt with the question of where a parole officer, in his judgment, thought that the inmate had committed some minor breach of the conditions of his release, such as visiting a drinking establishment.

The bill has now been amended, as the report shows, so that where a person is released to serve roughly the last third of his sentence under mandatory supervision and where he commits a further offence—which the best legal mind we could find in this country for free told us means a federal offence, such as an offence under the Criminal Code, the Narcotic Control Act and other related statutes—he would serve that last term within the institution without further opportunity for remission; that is only if he or she is convicted of an offence.

I should now like to address for a moment, for those honourable senators who are concerned with the civil liberties aspect, another serious problem. The original proposal of the minister who came before us was that the National Parole Board could rule, if, in their judgment they thought a person might be dangerous, that that person serve the rest of his sentence within the institution. We thought that that was harsh and not that much different from the gating, which has now been determined by the Supreme Court of Canada to be illegal. I am more than satisfied with the amendments proposed by the minister, and ultimately moved by Senator Frith in committee, which deal with those inmates who are obviously about to commit another offence. I should like to be clear, because both the Solicitor General and his deputy were clear and the intent of the legislation is reasonably clear. We are not talking about getting into the area of guessing who might or who might not commit offences. We are talking of those inmates who show an obvious intent, on the day of their release under mandatory supervision, to commit another offence.

• (2110)

In each of the 10 or 12 instances of "gating" that have occurred over the last nine months the Parole Board would have had the right to request the Attorney General to conduct some sort of quasi-judicial review and to make an application to the courts. That application is very similar, if not identical, to the various provisions relating to dangerous offenders in the Criminal Code. All of the safeguards would be built in. It would be a normal court process. I do not want to go into all of the details of section 689 of the Criminal Code, which deals with psychiatric reports and various requirements.

I might say as well that an accused has an opportunity, following a finding of the court against him, to appeal to the provincial court of appeal. It could be an appeal based on fact, on law, or on a mixture of both.

A person's civil liberties are well protected under the present proposed amendments. I know my good friend, Senator Hastings, was deeply concerned about this.

Honourable senators, while I could not get terribly excited about the original Bill S-32, I regret that the minister did not come forward immediately with a new bill but that he chose to proceed by way of amendment. The committee heard the instructions on the amendment and has now come back with a full report.

Therefore, I see no reason why this matter should not go forward. In broad terms, this is a whole lot better than what Senator Frith normally calls "half a loaf." I begrudgingly admit it is about seven-eighths of a loaf. On considering my last remark, honourable senators, I would say that it is probably a whole loaf, and I see no reason why, for the purposes of cleaning up the various technical problems, the matter ought not to proceed back to committee. It is to be hoped that the Senate will ultimately see fit to approve the report and proceed to third reading of the bill as quickly as possible.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as Senator Nurgitz has pointed out, a couple of technical amendments should be made in order for the committee to present the Senate with a truly whole and properly cooked loaf.

Senator Nurgitz: It is whole, but not cooked.

Senator Frith: From consultations with Senator Nurgitz and the chairman of the committee, it would appear that, rather than try to make these technical changes—one involving printing and one involving some of the wording of the proposed amendments—here in the Senate, we should send the bill back to committee. Senator Neiman informs me that the committee will meet tomorrow in order to clear up these technical matters.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Tomorrow afternoon?

Senator Frith: Tomorrow afternoon. This would mean that, rather than have the Senate wrestle with these technical changes, the committee could present us with a report that it unexceptionally supports. We could then deal with the bill on that basis.

Therefore, honourable senators, in amendment, seconded by Senator Bosa, I move:

> That the report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further consideration and report.

In moving that motion in amendment, I would mention that the chairman of the committee assures me that she believes the committee will adopt these small changes tomorrow and that we can have the bill reported back for debate, with a motion to adopt, on Thursday.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, June 9, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 9, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84 (NO. 2)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Douglas D. Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

June 9, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which was referred Bill C-151, "An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority" has in obedience to the order of reference of Friday, June 3, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You mean later this day.

Senator Frith: Later this day.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I think the Deputy Leader of the Government should tell us why he wants leave to proceed today. My understanding is that no arrangements have been made for Royal Assent to this bill if it is passed today. I should like to know why third reading should be moved later this day.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition is quite right, there will be no Royal Assent today. If we follow the appropriate rule or tradition, we will not abridge the rules respecting third reading unless there are good reasons, one of which could be that we are providing for Royal Assent the same day. So if we move third reading later today it will be an exception to that practice. I ask that there be an exception, because it would mean that the officials in the Department of Finance have a bit of lead time on their planning. Even though the legislation is not effective until it is assented to, they would know that it had passed all legislative stages and they would, therefore, have that lead time for planning. If the Leader of the Opposition remains unpersuaded, we will put it off until Tuesday.

Senator Flynn: I understand that Senator Phillips is ready to speak on third reading, so we are willing to give leave to have third reading moved later this day.

Senator Frith: Then I ask, with leave, that my motion to be put, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (1410)

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FURTHER REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Joan B. Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 9, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred for further consideration its Report on Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of June 7, 1983, examined the said Report and now reports Bill S-32 with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, clause 1: Strike out line 7 and substitute the following:

"23. Subject to subsection 24(5) and 24.11(2) the Com-"

2. Page 1, clause 2: Strike out lines 16 to 19 and substitute the following:

"2.(1) Subsection 24(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"24.(1) Subject to this section and sections 24.11 and"

3. Page 2, new subsection (2): Add, immediately after line 4, the following:

"(2) Section 24 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) An inmate is not entitled to be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence

according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission,

(a) where a court directs pursuant to section 14.7 of the Parole Act that the inmate shall not be so released, or

(b) prior to the completion of

(i) the hearing and determination by the court of the application in respect of the inmate pursuant to sections 14.1 to 14.7 of that Act to determine whether a direction referred to in paragraph (a) should be made, or

(ii) an appeal by the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection 14.8(2) against the dismissal of the application referred to in subparagraph (i).

(4) When a direction referred to in subsection (3) is made in respect of an inmate, the inmate

(a) shall forfeit all statutory and earned remission standing to his credit, whether accrued before or after the coming into force of this section; and

(b) is not entitled to be credited with earned remission in respect of the sentence he is serving at that time.

(5) Any remission of sentence forfeited pursuant to subsection (4) shall not thereafter be remitted or recredited pursuant to section 23 of this Act or subsection 20(3) of the Parole Act."

4. Page 2, clause 3: Strike out line 10 and substitute the following:

"and the mandatory supervision is revoked as a result of a conviction for an offence,

5. Page 2, new clause 3.1: Add, immediately after the heading "PAROLE ACT" that follows line 29, the following

"3.1 Subsection 9(1) of the Parole Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (a) thereof, the following paragraph:

"(a.1) prescribing the times when and the manner in which a review of cases of inmates pursuant to section 14.1 is to take place;"

6. Page 2, new clause 3.2: Add, immediately before line 30, the following:

"3.2 The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 14 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"DIRECTION NOT TO RELEASE INMATE ON MANDATORY SUPERVISION

14.1 (1) In this section and sections 14.2 to 14.9,

"court" means a superior court of criminal jurisdiction;

"court of appeal" means

(a) in the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Court of Appeal, and

(b) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the Appeal Division of the Supreme Court;

"prosecutor" means the Attorney General of Canada and includes counsel acting on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada;

"superior court of criminal jurisdiction" means

(a) in the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court,

(b) in the Provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Supreme Court,

(c) in the Province of British Columbia, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeal, and

(d) in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and New Brunswick, the Court of Appeal or the Court of Queen's Bench.

(2) The Chairman or a division of the Board shall, at the time and in the manner prescribed by the regulations, review the case of every inmate who is sentenced to imprisonment in or transferred to a penitentiary and is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence within the meaning of section 687 of the Criminal Code.

(3) Where, after reviewing the case of an inmate as required by subsection (2), the Chairman or members who conducted the review are of the opinion that the inmate should not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission, on the grounds set out in paragraph 14.7(a) or (b), they shall refer the case to the Attorney General of Canada,

(a) except in the circumstances described in paragraph (b), not later than ninety days prior to the earliest day on which the inmate may be entitled to be released from imprisonment; and

(b) where the Chairman or members who conducted the review form the opinion less than ninety days prior to such day on the basis of

(i) behaviour by the inmate that occurs within those ninety days, or

(ii) information provided to the Chairman or members within those ninety days that could not reasonably have been provided earlier, as soon as practicable after the opinion is formed.

(4) Where the case of an inmate has been referred to the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection (2), an application for a direction under section 14.7 that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment may be made, within fourteen days of the referral, to the court having jurisdiction in the place in which the inmate is in custody.

(5) An inmate is not entitled to be released from imprisonment prior to the completion of

(a) the hearing and determination by the court of the application in respect of the inmate pursuant to this section and sections 14.2 to 14.7, or

(b) an appeal by the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to subsection 14.8(2) against the dismissal of the application referred to in paragraph (a).

(6) An inmate who is in custody by virtue of subsection (5) shall be deemed to be serving his sentence.

(7) This section and sections 14.2 to 14.9 apply in respect of persons who were sentenced to imprisonment in or transferred to any class of penitentiary before or after the coming into force of this section.

14.2 (1) Where an application in respect of an inmate has been made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), the Court shall hear and determine the application except that no such application shall be heard unless

(a) at least fourteen days' notice has been given to the inmate by the prosecutor, following the making of the application, outlining the basis on which it is intended to found the application; and

(b) a copy of the notice has been filed with the clerk of the court.

(2) An application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) shall be heard and determined by the court without a jury.

(3) For the purposes of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), where an inmate admits any allegations contained in the notice referred to in paragraph (1)(a), no proof of those allegations is required.

(4) The production of a document purporting to contain any nomination that may be made or given by the Attorney General of Canada under sections 14.1 to 14.9 and purporting to be signed by the Attorney General of Canada is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof of that nomination without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the document.

14.3 (1) On the hearing of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), the court shall hear the evidence of at least two psychiatrists and all other evidence that, in its opinion, is relevant, including the evidence of any psychologist or criminologist called as a witness by the prosecution or the inmate.

(2) One of the psychiatrists referred to in subsection (1) shall be nominated by the prosecution and one shall be nominated by the inmate.

(3) If the inmate fails or refuses to nominate a psychiatrist pursuant to this section, the court shall nominate a psychiatrist on behalf of the inmate.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to enlarge the number of expert witnesses that may be called without the leave of the court or judge under section 7 of the Canada Evidence Act.

14.4 (1) A court to which an application is made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) may, by order in writing,

(a) direct the inmate in relation to whom the application is made to attend at a place or before a person specified in the order and within a time specified therein, for observation, or

(b) remand the inmate in such custody as the court directs, for a period not exceeding thirty days, for observation,

where in its opinion, supported by the evidence of, or where the prosecutor and the inmate consent, supported by the report in writing of, at least one duly qualified medical practitioner, there is reason to believe that evidence might be obtained as a result of such observation that would be relevant to the application.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a court to which an application is made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) may remand the inmate to which that application relates in accordance with that subsection

(a) for a period not exceeding thirty days without having heard the evidence or considered the report of a duly qualified medical practitioner where compelling circumstances exist for so doing and where a medical practitioner is not readily available to examine the offender and give evidence or submit a report; and

(b) for a period of more than thirty but not more than sixty days where it is satisfied that observation for such a period is required in all the circumstances of the case and its opinion is supported by the evidence of, or where the prosecutor and the inmate consent, by the report in writing of, at least one duly qualified medical practitioner.

14.5 Without prejudice to the right of an inmate to tender evidence as to his character and repute, evidence of the character and repute of the inmate may, if the court thinks fit, be admitted on the question whether the inmate should be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission.

14.6 (1) The inmate shall be present at the hearing of an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4) and the court shall order, in writing, the person having the custody of the inmate to bring the inmate before the court.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may

(a) cause the inmate to be removed and to be kept out of court, where he misconducts himself by interrupting the proceedings so that to continue the proceedings in his presence would not be feasible; or

(b) permit the inmate to be out of court during the whole or any part of the hearing on such conditions as the court considers proper.

14.7 Where, on an application made pursuant to subsection 14.1(4), it is established to the satisfaction of the court,

(a) that the inmate is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (a) of the definition of that expression in section 687 of the Criminal Code and the inmate constitutes a threat to the life, safety or physical or mental well-being of other persons on the basis of evidence establishing

(i) a pattern of repetitive behaviour by the inmate, of which that offence forms a part, showing a failure to restrain his behaviour and a likelihood of his causing death or injury to other persons, or inflicting severe psychological damage on other persons, through failure in the future to restrain his behaviour,

(ii) a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour by the inmate, of which that offence forms a part, showing a substantital degree of indifference on the part of the inmate as to the reasonably foreseeable consequences to other persons of his behaviour, or

(iii) any behaviour by the inmate, associated with that offence, that is of such a brutal nature as to compel the conclusion that his behaviour in the future is unlikely to be inhibited by normal standards of behavioural restraint, or

(b) that the inmate is serving a sentence imposed in respect of a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (b) of the definition of that expression in section 687 of the Criminal Code and the inmate, by his conduct in any sexual matter including that involved in the commission of that offence, has shown a failure to control his sexual impulses and a likelihood of his causing injury, pain or other evil to other persons through failure in the future to control his sexual impulses,

the court may, by order, direct that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law solely as a result of remission, including earned remission.

14.8 (1) Where a court directs under section 14.7 that an inmate shall not be released from imprisonment, the inmate may appeal to the court of appeal against that direction on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact.

(2) The Attorney General of Canada may appeal to the court of appeal against the dismissal of an application for a direction under section 14.7 on any ground of law.

(3) On an appeal against a direction made under section 14.7, the court of appeal may

(a) quash such direction or order a new hearing; or

(b) dismiss the appeal.

(4) On an appeal against the dismissal of an application for a direction under section 14.7, the court of appeal may

(a) allow the appeal, and

(i) by order, direct that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment prior to the expiration of his sentence according to law, solely as a result of remission, including earned remission, or

(ii) order a new hearing; or

(b) dismiss the appeal.

(5) A judgment of the court of appeal allowing an appeal pursuant to paragraph (4)(a) and directing that the inmate shall not be released from imprisonment has the same force and effect as if it were a direction of the court pursuant to section 14.7.

(6) The provisions of Part XVIII of the Criminal Code with respect to procedure on appeals apply with such modifications as the circumstances require, to appeals under this section.

14.9 Where a court, pursuant to section 14.7, directs that an inmate shall not be released from imprisonment, the court shall order that a copy of all reports or testimony given by psychiatrists, psychologists or criminologists and any observations of the court with respect to the reasons for the direction together with a transcript of the trial of the dangerous offender be forwarded to the Solicitor General of Canada for his information."

7. Page 2, clause 4: Strike out line 30 and substitute the following:

"4. Subsection 15(2) of the said Act is"

8. Page 4, clause 7: Strike out the heading immediately after line 7 and substitute the following:

[Senator Neiman.]

"COMMENCEMENT AND EXPIRY"

9. Page 4, new clause 8: Add, immediately after line 9. the following:

> 8. Subsections 24(3) to (5) of the Penitentiary Act, as enacted by subsection 2(2) of this Act and paragraph 9(1)(a.1) and sections 14.1 to 14.9 of the Parole Act, as enacted by sections 3.1 and 3.2, respectively, of this Act shall cease to be in force three years after the coming into force of this Act."

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I understand that the chairman of the committee wishes to explain the purport of the amendments.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the plan is to ask that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day, at which time the chairman of the committee will have an opportunity to explain the report, and honourable senators an opportunity to debate it and ask questions. We could then deal with the motion for adoption and with the next legislative step to be taken, as we may see fit at that time.

Therefore, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), that the report be taken into consideration later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN SECURITY

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-157

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, June 14, 1983, I will move:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-157, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto," in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate;
>
> That the Committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;
>
> That the Committee have power to act jointly with any committee appointed by the other place to examine the subject-matter of the aforementioned Bill; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to request that House, if it deems it advisable, to appoint a committee to act jointly with that already chosen by this House.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g):

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, June 14, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

[English]

Honourable senators, the motion is for adjournment until Tuesday next at 2 p.m., rather than at 8 p.m. If leave is granted, I will explain why.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the motion is to adjourn until Tuesday next at 2 p.m., rather than at 8 p.m., because, first, the other place has an order for third reading of the Canagrex legislation for Monday. The Agriculture Committee has done a pre-study on Canagrex. The chairman of that committee informs me that he needs at least a further couple of days to complete that pre-study and further study when the legislation comes to the Senate. That is the first consideration, namely, that I want to give the Agriculture Committee a head start on its work.

• (1415)

The second consideration is that we will be sitting next week on Wednesday to give the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on National Defence an opportunity to present its report. The chairman tells me that the report will be ready for presentation on Wednesday and that the timing of the launching of the report coincides very well with that day.

So we wish to sit on Tuesday at 2 o'clock, to give us a head start; and on Wednesday, for the purposes I have just mentioned; and then perhaps it will not be necessary to sit on Thursday.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Is it contemplated that if we sit at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, in the normal course of events we will sit that evening as well?

Senator Frith: I cannot guarantee that we will or will not sit on Tuesday evening. The plan is to sit on Tuesday afternoon.

Then, if there is anything left on the Order Paper at 6 o'clock, we will sit on Tuesday evening.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Can the deputy leader inform us whether Royal Assent will be given to some of the bills we may pass today or on Tuesday afternoon, before 6 o'clock on Tuesday? The information may be useful to some honourable senators.

Senator Frith: I understand the purport of Senator Flynn's question. I shall explore the matter to determine whether Royal Assent is possible on Tuesday, and I shall support any effort to make it come to pass, and try to have word on the matter before we adjourn today.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

MEMBERS—DEDUCTIONS FOR NON-ATTENDANCE

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the absence of senators. This session of Parliament has lasted for three or four years and, personally, I think it is unfair that senators may be absent for only 21 days during the course of a session, because they lose so much money per day. The Leader of the Opposition suggested the other day that the government amend the law, and the Leader of the Government said that he would consult his colleagues. Has the Leader of the Government consulted his colleagues, and if not, when does he intend to do so? When can we expect an answer to this question of amending the law to eliminate this situation and to correct the injustice it creates for some honourable senators?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have had informal discussions with some of my colleagues and the conclusion is, without getting into the formality of the matter, that it would not be possible or convenient to make that amendment between now and the end of June, when the House of Commons has an order to adjourn. However, I want Senator Denis and others to know that the reply which I gave the other day, which may have seemed a little crisp, covered the facts. I agree that this is a much longer session—and perhaps I could say that it is even three times longer, since it is now more than three years since the beginning of the session—and that the law was probably intended for a session of 12 months' duration. I understand the difficulty and sympathize, because if you do a little simple arithmetic you find that that means seven days in a year rather than what was intended, namely, 21 days.

● (1420)

Senator Denis has referred to an ordinary session and I merely repeat what I said before. The Act does not tell us what an ordinary session is. It merely says that a session is from the opening until the prorogation, and we will have to abide by that in the meantime.

Senator Denis: I urge the Leader of the Opposition not to take too long to decide about it, because the government—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He is not the Leader of the Opposition—at least not yet.

Senator Denis: Please let me finish my question. You have so many opportunities to speak. I would like to know if we could have an answer to my question before the Senate is abolished.

Senator Olson: I can say yes to that.

Senator Flynn: On a question of privilege, Senator Denis referred to the Leader of the Opposition instead of to the Leader of the Government. Perhaps it is because of the way the Leader of the Government replies to any suggestion. It is always no, no, no.

Senator Olson: Senator Denis was obviously remembering the situation as it was some months ago—

Hon. Martial Asselin: It will be the future for you.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT WITH QUEBEC PARTICIPATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): On June 2 last, Senator Asselin asked whether the government had made a final decision that participation by Quebec in a francophone summit would not be necessary; whether Quebec could be a participating government in any summit of French-speaking countries, just as it is with respect to the Cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency; and whether the cabinet had decided in advance that Quebec would not attend that francophone summit.

The answer is that the project has been discussed at various times with other governments, and reviewed recently in direct conversations with French officials. These discussions have been positive but not conclusive as yet, and no final decision has been taken.

Secondly, the government envisages a summit which would consider a wide range of political topics, most of which would not be of concern to provincial governments, while the ACCT formula concerns the management of cultural and technical co-operation, matters which are of interest to Canadian provinces.

With respect to the question of whether the cabinet had decided in advance that Quebec would not attend that francophone summit, the answer is no.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—CANADA-FRANCE MARITIME BOUNDARY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The next response is to a question asked by Senator Marshall on June 2 last concerning the maritime boundary between Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon. The reply is not particularly long and I will give him a choice. I can either read it, or it can be taken as read.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I love the sound of your voice. Please read it.

Senator Olson: The issue of the Canada-France maritime boundary in the area off St. Pierre and Miquelon was not raised in the discussions between Prime Minister Trudeau and President Mitterrand at the Williamsburg Summit. The last round of negotiations on the boundary delimitation took place at the end of January. Little progress was made at that time. The Canadian delegation made it clear that, although we recognize the special good neighbour relationship between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland—and, indeed, all of Canada—we are not prepared to accept the French claim to a 200-mile exclusive economic zone for the islands.

In a letter of April 25, 1983 to Prime Minister Mauroy of France, Prime Minister Trudeau proposed an arrangement of mutual restraint and forbearance by both sides in regard to fisheries inspection in the area off St. Pierre and Miquelon, and that negotiations on the boundary delimitation resume in the spring of 1984.

• (1425)

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84 (NO. 2)

THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-151, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, two weeks ago the attention of the western world was focused on the economic summit held by the seven western industrial nations in the town of Williamsburg. Many Canadians, including members of the opposition party, were pleased with the presentation made by the Minister of Finance when he urged those governments to reduce their deficits in order to avoid the demand for borrowing by governments so that the money would be left free for the development of private industry, where the jobs are, with the reduction in the deficits and the borrowing stimulating the recovery.

Today we have a bill before us requesting authority to borrow $10.7 billion. I think it would be appropriate, honourable senators, to name this bill the "Williamsburg bill" because the amount borrowed is directly in contravention of the presentation made by the Minister of Finance at Williamsburg.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What else is new?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): That depends on how you add the numbers.

Senator Phillips: Senator Olson will be interested to know, I am sure, that if the United States, following the Williamsburg Conference, borrowed money as Canada has, on a per capita basis it would borrow approximately $150 billion, which would make a considerable dent even in a country as large as the United States.

This past week the economic attention of Canadians has been focused on Canadair, the fiasco of fiascos. Perhaps it would be interesting to recall that Canadair had a humble beginning in 1977. The federal government, not by approval of Parliament, but by order in council—cabinet approval—invested $50 million in Canadair. We were told that we were going to receive numerous technological benefits and their spin-off effects.

The first thing Canadair did was acquire the rights to an American designed executive jet. Even then the cabinet ministers had a rather extensive interest in executive jets. Canadair obtained the rights to the Lear jet and proceeded to modify that aircraft until it could not meet its specifications and the designer withdrew from the project.

The next step Canadair took was to decide to purchase the engines for the jet in the United States. Apparently there is no great skill or technology involved in developing jet engines, so we did not need that type of technology in Canada. That was too mundane. We were told that it was far better to concentrate on the airframe and furnishings of the jet and leave the engines to someone else. Officials from Canadair followed that pattern.

Honourable senators will be interested to know that, from a humble beginning involving an investment of $50 million, the amount invested has grown and developed into $1.4 billion—well, it is actually more than that because there will be a supplementary estimate for $240 million coming up, so the $50 million has actually grown and developed into approximately $1.75 billion. That looks like a nice profit but it is a deficit. Something went wrong along the way and we now have a $1.75 billion deficit. The accountants, the officials and even the cabinet minister responsible for the corporation say it is gone with no hope of recovery. Perhaps we should be thankful that they went to the United States to produce and build the engine for the aircraft or the deficit would have been doubled.

• (1430)

Canadair is now reduced to the stage of building water bombers and there is some confusion about the number although the government announced that 16 were to be built but only 4 were ordered. In addition, Canadair has a contract for building parts for a United States military transport. The contract will be somewhere in the vicinity of $500 million to $700 million. It is rather strange that with all the skills and technology we developed at Canadair we are making parts designed in the United States with United States technology. We have lost $1.75 billion—money that belongs to the shareholders of Canadair, who are in reality the taxpayers of Canada.

We frequently hear government announcements concerning the special recovery projects and the $2.4 billion allocated to those projects over a four-year period. If we look at those projects, we will find that technology receives $180 million over four years. Canadair has received $1.75 billion supposedly for technology.

I ask the Leader of the Government and the Minister of State for the CDIC what type of development we can expect from that $180 million. Based on the experience of Canadair, it seems to me that we are going to get very little development and very little benefit.

A further examination of the list of projects indicates that agriculture and forestry receives $40 million over four years. Agriculture employs 473,000 Canadians; forestry employs 88,000 Canadians. The 7,000 or less employees at Canadair received $1.4 billion last year. Surely, there must be some balance respecting these matters, and the number of people employed in an industry should receive some consideration. Perhaps the government just does not care about the number of unemployed. Perhaps they do not care if the number goes to 2.5 million. The fishery projects on the Atlantic coast are listed as receiving $140 million. There are 78,500 fishermen, and to compare that number with the number of employees at Canadair again indicates the number of people affected by the measure.

● (1435)

The $1.4 billion loss last year, on the basis of 7,000 employees at Canadair—and I do not believe that was the actual number throughout the year—averages $200,000 per job. Honourable senators, a $200,000 taxpayers' loss per year must have raised a few questions somewhere within the inner sanctum of cabinet. Surely someone must have caught on? Surely someone must have taken a coffee break and considered this matter? Surely, honourable senators, someone made some inquiries? I should like the minister to tell us what type of replies were received from Canadair and what the government did about it.

The government approved extra grants to Canadair last year. If the normal pattern and procedure were followed, and I presume it was, the minister responsible for the Treasury Board and the officials of the Treasury Board would have had to approve those grants. They must have looked at the status of Canadair. The officials of the Treasury Board normally examine these things very thoroughly, and I cannot see these highly-paid officials glossing over the report from Canadair. As a further safeguard, a cabinet committee comprised of at least three cabinet ministers approved that grant.

Who were the three cabinet ministers who approved the $200 million grant recently given to Canadair? What kind of report did they study? What kind of a warning did they give their colleagues respecting Canadair? I hope Senator Austin will make note of my questions and give me some satisfactory reply.

Honourable senators, I do not like to add further to the difficult times Senator Austin has been experiencing lately by referring to the fact that he has been avoiding parliamentary reports on the CDIC for the last year. I will skip that part of my notes because I do not want him to have too rough a week. However, I would make a suggestion to him, as a friend.

[Senator Phillips.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Watch this one.

Senator Phillips: I would suggest that he has been too busy with the British Columbia patronage committee. I would suggest that he return those responsibilities to Senator Perrault and that he get on with looking after his responsibilities, such as Canadair.

I would remind the honourable minister that each of those corporations within the CDIC has great potential. He said himself that they could be of great benefit to Canada. I would suggest that the minister get on with the management of those corporations, bring out the potential that was envisioned when CDIC was established and, perhaps, we will see some dividends, not only in technology, but we may even see the odd cash dividend coming to the Receiver General.

Honourable senators, let us have a look at the management of CDIC by Senator Austin. The first thing he did was to take in Joel Bell, a refugee from the PMO, as part-time chairman of the board. The corporation lost $1.4 billion last year. Honourable senators, there must be some mistake; he should have been a full-time chairman. Then there is Maurice Strong who, honourable senators will remember, had a nomination as a Liberal candidate in Toronto for three months. When he found out he was not going to be Prime Minister, he resigned. The minister proceeded to give these two gentlemen a no-cut contract. I would say that it is "no cut," "no publicity" and "no information," because no one knows the salary they are getting. In this chamber, honourable senators, I asked for that information. I have not received it and I hope that Senator Austin is now ready to tell us about those salaries and those contracts.

● (1440)

I suggest to honourable senators that one of the great difficulties in dealing with Canadair at this time involves those contracts of the chairman—or the part-time chairman—and the president, in that, through the contracts, they have more control over the company than does the minister. The former president of Canadair was dismissed. I suppose somebody has to be the fall guy. I think perhaps he enjoyed the fall, because I understand that he got a very pleasant golden handshake before he took it. Perhaps we could be informed about that golden handshake.

Honourable senators, in reading the auditor's report, I noticed a list of subsidiaries of Canadair. Canadair Ltd. contributed to the loss of the company last year. What does Canadair Ltd. do? What do the other subsidiaries do? How much does each subsidiary contribute to the extravagant loss incurred by Canadair last year?

The borrowing authority makes it possible for the government to deal with a number of other favourites, such as Maislin Industries Limited. I am disturbed by rumours I have heard to the effect that the government now plans to take Maislin Industries Limited under the CDIC. Can the minister tell us about that? Can he also tell us how much is being paid for the corporation and the amount of subsidy it will receive this year?

The government, under the guise of austerity, has been changing a number of established programs—programs that have contributed to the development of this country. Presently before Parliament in the other place is a bill to change the Crowsnest rate. It is the view of the government that the Crowsnest rate costs the taxpayers too much and that more of the cost must be passed on to the wheat producer in western Canada.

Honourable senators, consider the loss incurred by Canadair. I am speaking now of the final loss, not the $1.75 billion. I believe that the loss will more likely be $2.5 billion, because, in a rare moment of honesty, the Minister of State responsible for the CDIC said that he would be back to Parliament, although he could not tell us how often or for how much. We can safely assume, therefore, that the loss will be at least $2.5 billion. That amount, honourable senators, would have paid the Crowsnest rate subsidy for the next five years. The cabinet had its choice to make, honourable senators—the Crowsnest rate or Canadair—and it chose Canadair. I wonder which stand was taken by Senator Olson and Senator Argue on that issue? That is a matter which affects western Canada, their regions. Provincial governments were opposed to it and they were silent, but they participated in the development of Canadair. Small wonder that the Prime Minister says that senators are not doing their jobs and that they should be elected.

Honourable senators, I do not want to neglect my own region. The maritime freight rate assistance will be reduced, as well, in the name of austerity. It will now cost Prince Edward Island potato producers seven cents more to ship a 10-pound bag of potatoes to Toronto. The potato producers do not receive the support that Canadair received. One would think there is a certain technology in farming and in fishing. Are we not as proud of that technology as we are of the technology we import from the United States?

When I see a fiasco of this nature, I always look for an ex-Trudeau cabinet minister. It is not difficult to find an ex-Trudeau cabinet minister in this fiasco. Jean-Pierre Goyer is the vice-chairman of the board of directors of Canadair. Every time an ex-Trudeau cabinet minister bobs his head, it costs the taxpayers of Canada $1 billion. Alastair Gillespie, Donald Macdonald, Judd Buchanan and now Jean-Pierre Goyer—what a list!

It appears that we do not have money for essential services. I read the auditor's report and I noticed a reference to expenses concerning marketing. I found myself asking: What marketing services are required to give away a plane free of charge and to throw in $8 million to boot? What kind of marketing expense can you develop at that rate? Do not tell me that there was any difficulty involved in giving away a plane plus $8 million. I am sure there are a good many people in Canada who would have taken an offer like that without having had a loss in the marketing of those aircraft.

There was an amount of $341 million written off for obsolescence. Honourable senators, that is a lot of obsolescence. Can the minister give us some information on that matter? I consider the cabinet to be obsolete, but I do not think we could write off $341 million for it.

The most disturbing aspect of this issue is that yesterday the Prime Minister said that the government would continue to pump money into Canadair. What else can it do? It owns the company. Honourable senators, I ask you: Would a chartered bank continue to loan money to an organization that operated in the same way as does Canadair? It is rather odd that the federal government maintains an agency to supervise the chartered banks in order to protect the shareholders and depositors of those banks, yet the taxpayers' money is allowed to go unsupervised, and we have watched $2.45 billion go down the drain in a seven-year period.

I would ask the Minister of State responsible for the CDIC to take this opportunity to make a full and complete statement before Parliament—not before a parliamentary committee of the other place. This is a chamber of Parliament and its record is full and available to every Canadian. I would ask the minister to take this opportunity to come clean and to give us all of the details. I further request him to apply the philosophy of Williamsburg to Canadair and to the deficit.

• (1450)

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I am pleased to have this opportunity to discuss CDIC and Canadair.

Senator Frith: After such a friendly intervention.

Senator Austin: I ask honourable senators leave to table, in both official languages, a report on Canadair Ltd. which I made to the Standing Committee on Public Acounts and to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in the other place, and I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to today's Debates of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is this the 60-page report the minister referred to on Tuesday, which he said would be distributed to members of the Senate?

Senator Austin: Indeed it is. Do I understand the honourable senator has not received a copy?

Senator Roblin: The minister understands correctly.

Senator Austin: I am surprised, because I specifically instructed that copies be delivered to honourable senators. I understand from murmurs in the chamber now that a number of senators have received copies.

Senator Phillips: On your side.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Perhaps, like the royal dinner list, only to Grits.

Senator Austin: In any event, the tabling of the report will provide that information to all honourable senators. I express my regret if, by some inadvertence, it was not delivered to honourable senators opposite, because my instruction was specific that it be delivered to all senators, and indeed to all members of Parliament.

May I have leave to have it printed as an appendix?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the report be printed as an appendix to Debates of the Senate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 5755.)

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, a great deal of information about Canadair, in fact all of the information that is obtainable and is relevant, is contained in the report which the Senate has now agreed to have printed as an appendix.

I scarcely know how to tackle the prolific errors that Senator Phillips introduced into this chamber about Canadair and the events of Canadair. He has misused statistics and he has misused information about Canadair. I will do my best to provide honourable senators with a short summary. I did take notes of some of the words used by Senator Phillips in his presentation.

I want honourable senators to know that in the Canadair program for the Challenger project the company has been successful in producing a highly competitive executive jet aircraft.

Senator Roblin: Then why can't we sell it?

Senator Austin: The Challenger 601, and also now the Challenger 600, has more than exceeded the specifications originally required. The Challenger 601 has easily passed all of the tests for range, fuel efficiency and so on. The words of support we are receiving from the professional aviation industry on the 601 and the 600 are very encouraging indeed. People who make these judgments and on whose advice purchasers rely agree that the Challenger is the most competitive product in its field. I hope we can therefore put to rest, once and for all, any question about the technology.

On the financing of Canadair Ltd. and the Challenger project, my report of June 7 contains the detailed story. I regret to say that losses have been required to be written off in the vicinity, now, of $1.4 billion. These are losses brought about by mounting costs, some of which were not within the control of Canadair management and some of which were within their control. Several hundred millions of dollars of these losses are attributable, in my opinion—and I have carefully studied the operation of Canadair, and have had expert assistance in doing so—to an excess of management optimism in decisions on development. For example, management believed that they could put a brand new aircraft technology into commercial production and market it two and a half years after start-up. The average industry time is five years. Indeed, it took five years, the average industry time, to bring the Challenger to commercial distribution.

Management started off with an aircraft with certain specifications on weight and power, and as they developed their design they began to change fundamental specifications, and lost quality control in production as they proceeded. For that reason, when the Challenger 600 began to fly it was too fat, it was overweight, and it was underpowered. When adjustments had to be made they were extremely costly, because customers of the Challenger were not prepared to buy a plane different from the one they had specified as suitable to their requirements, so a good deal of money was spent in meeting those adjustments, and time was lost.

The Challenger did not meet either Canadian or U.S. specification and performance requirements when it was submitted; it was rejected and there was a long list of deficiencies in the aircraft, which cost money to correct.

So it went. The government found that, from an initial commitment of $106 million, with cash requirements of $128 million—and I am talking in 1977 dollars—to put the Challenger 600 in the air, costs were mounting by the tens of millions of dollars. I should like to point out to Senator Phillips that when the Clark government was in office the costs of the Challenger program almost doubled, and nothing was done by the Clark government about the Challenger program except to pay the cheques as they were requested by Canadair.

One of the salient features of what took place was the optimism of Canadair's management on marketing. As costs mounted the optimism about the number of aircraft that could be sold also mounted. The order book was full; people were beating down Canadair's doors for the aircraft. Those representations were made continuously to the Government of Canada, whether it be in 1979, 1980 or 1981, and the government, making some inquiries, testing the market to some extent in 1981, saw that, while there was disagreement about the size of the order book, there was a substantial sales potential that was capable of being checked independently, and so the program went on.

What turned out to be decisive was the withdrawal of customers, beginning in May 1982, who began to give by way of explanation the changed economic environment. Then the order book began to shrink. However, costs to produce the plane did not shrink. As the order book shrinks the unit cost is harder to recover from a shrinking marketplace. In addition, there were false starts with the Challenger 610 program. Inventory was, of course, ordered against these optimistic sales projections, and a lot of inventory that it is not possible to use now exists in Canadair's possession. We have inventory for planes that cannot be sold and we have inventory for designs that have been changed. These are reasons for the cost.

● (1500)

With regard to the question of engines, I would like to tell Senator Phillips that our engines for the Challenger are acquired from the United States: the Avco Lycoming for the 600; and now the GE engine for the 601. I would be an enthusiastic investor on behalf of Canada in aircraft engine manufacturing if I could see a domestic market and, on the basis of a good domestic market, an export market. But, first, we have to make an airplane that we can sell and that has a dependable market. We can then make engines and other parts in this country.

The Challenger aircraft, respecting labour and parts, is 67 per cent Canadian. The balance is technology which we acquire from elsewhere. I have no apology to make for the engines being acquired elsewhere. That is a sound business decision, and in other contexts Senator Phillips, I am sure, would urge on me sound business decisions with respect to products that are being made for commercial distribution.

I want to make it clear to honourable senators that the government is committed to staying in the aerospace industry, whether it be Canadair or de Havilland. The reason for that commitment can be expressed simply: Canada is the fourth largest user in the world of fixed wing aircraft and the fifth largest user of helicopters. That means that we buy a lot of technology and labour from other countries; and the only possibility of getting offsets is by having the technology so that we can make some parts of those aircraft in Canada.

Honourable senators have seen that with respect to the F-18. I do not want to get into a discussion of whether Quebec and Ontario had equitable shares in F-18 manufacturing. Canada has had the ability to negotiate 100 per cent offsets for the F-18, and we continue to negotiate offsets in all areas of acquisition—and the international business world thinks that we are quite shrewd to do so. But we cannot carry that game forward without the capacity to manufacture.

Whether we do it very well is indeed the question with respect to the management of Canadair and, to some extent, de Havilland. I am sorry that I have had to give Parliament such a horrific report with respect to the Challenger program and the performance of Canadair's management. Regrettably, the truth is the truth. It is my belief that we have had a demonstration in Canadair of the vital importance of the Government of Canada being able to more closely supervise the investments which, for reasons of public policy in the decisions of government from time to time, have to be made.

Canadair and de Havilland were acquired for the reasons I have just mentioned, namely, industrial strategy and remaining in the aerospace industry. What happened was that the government lacked the machinery to closely supervise. The government, in effect, behaved as a reasonable but passive shareholder with respect to Canadair. It appointed a board of directors, almost entirely all of whom were people with senior business experience, active in highly successful private corporations.

From time to time one or two public servants would also sit on the board. One of the interesting facts for honourable senators to know is that the average time of a public servant sitting on the board of Canadair was nine months—scarcely enough time to really grasp the problems of a commercial operation as complex—

Hon. R. James Balfour: Like the Clark government.

Senator Austin: —as Canadair is. I would say to the honourable senator that it was not a cheap shot in any way. It was a statement for the record. If he wants to look at some cheap shots he should take a look at Senator Phillips and his many observations that have no basis in fact. Those are cheap shots. If the honourable senator is interested in facts—and I give credit in believing that Senator Phillips and other honourable senators are interested in fact—I will tell him—

Senator Phillips: We are interested, but we are having difficulty getting them.

Senator Austin: —that the problem the government has had in connection with its investments in these corporations is in knowing how far to be involved in the process of governing commercial operations. As I have said, the standard we applied was that of a passive, reasonable investor. It is now clear, from the results in Canadair, that the standard that must be applied to crown corporations that make products for sale in the commercial market is that of a controlling shareholder.

Let me give honourable senators an illustration. With respect to Canadair, the company was purchased from General Dynamics. It was a wholly-owned subsidiary. General Dynamics controlled its production lines, its business decisions and its financing. It very closely supervised its investment. When we acquired the company, we did not put that kind of commercial control capacity into Canadair. In fact, as I have said, we became a passive but responsible investor. We relied on the professionalism of the management and the board of Canadair to set the targets, which we approved, and to achieve the targets, while we stood back and passively observed.

As I have said, the government did not have the capacity to be a financial holding company, a player, or controlling shareholder investor in Canadair. That is one of the reasons why CDIC has been created. It is one of the reasons for producing within government control and ownership a commercial and professional capacity to manage investments.

I am not prepared to debate with honourable senators whether the government should be an investor from time to time in the private sector of the economy. I should think that subject had been settled many decades ago. The question is how to do it in a way that is commercially effective and in a way, when public policy purposes have been served, that investment can be sold. So the government lacked the capacity to be a controlling shareholder, and it lacked the capacity, before CDIC, of privatizing investments.

Therefore, the machinery had to be created, and instead of a deputy minister and assistant deputy minister—and those are competent people—being asked to carry a burden beyond their time and their duties as public servants advising in the policy process, we have come to the realization that we must have professionals who are there for a good period of time; and they will behave, in terms of these operations, just as they would behave if they were in the private sector and the operation was in the private sector.

Honourable senators, I do not propose to go on at length, but I wanted to share with you some of the premises of the issues raised by Senator Phillips. I believe that I have been able to obtain, in Maurice Strong and Joel Bell, two people with excellent business background and outstanding skills for the job of operating a holding company of the quality of CDIC. I have every confidence in them and the performance of CDIC, and I believe there will be little objective criticism.

I have two pieces of information I should like to give Senator Phillips—information which I have previously given him. Neither Mr. Bell nor Mr. Strong currently has a contract. Mr. Bell is an employee, and Mr. Strong is the chairman of the board and an officer of CDIC. Bill C-158, which is before the House of Commons, contains authorization for an employment contract for a term of up to five years. That bill also contains provision for the Governor in Council to, at any time, dismiss either the president or the chairman. So I am not trying in any way through this legislation to prevent any government from dispensing with the services of these gentlemen. That allegation is unwarranted.

● (1510)

I want to tell honourable senators something about the characteristics of CDIC, particularly one which seems to be overlooked. The government, through CDIC, has responded to the Auditor General's recommendation that there be more control over government investment. It has done so by creating the CDIC and giving it the commercial capacity to deal with these investments. In addition, under Bill C-158, the CDIC has added to its normal reporting responsibilities of a crown corporation two very unusual provisions. The first provision is that CDIC report to the public as if it were a company holding shares traded on a recognized Canadian stock exchange. This means that the company will make its audited reports, as well as the audited reports of its subsidiaries, available, and it will report quarterly with respect to both the financial performance of the company and its subsidiaries, separately and in a consolidated fashion.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: But the corporation will not be examined by the Auditor General.

Senator Austin: I will come to that point later.

A further part of my point is that the rules of timely disclosure under securities practice will also apply to CDIC and its subsidiaries. If there are changes in material facts, henceforth they will be disclosed in a timely way. In other words, the situation at Canadair where no financial statements were made available to Parliament or to the public and where, indeed, changes in material fact could be ignored by the management of Canadair and even ignored in terms of transmitting them to their directors, never mind their shareholders, will not be able to take place.

The second main change in practice with respect to the accountability of CDIC is covered by a provision in Bill C-158 that every year the capital plan of CDIC, which includes the capital plans of its subsidiaries, will be laid before Parliament. Therefore, the use of the funds of the corporation will be known and disclosed to Parliament every year. If there is any desire to debate the documents, there are simple procedures in this house and in the other place to fulfil that desire.

As to Senator Deschatelets' question about the Auditor General, let me be clear on the issue. The issue is not one of attest audits. There are a number of private companies in this country that are as competent as the Auditor General to audit the financial reports of corporations. The question that is in issue, with the Auditor General in particular, is the question of a comprehensive audit. A comprehensive audit is, in effect, a search mission on the performance of the company or a reflective view of the success of various decisions as to their wisdom or good luck some three or four years after they were taken. Such a comprehensive audit approach is not part of the commercial practice of this country or any other country. The question of whether we obtain directors from the private sector and ask them, for practically no money, reward or recognition at all, to submit themselves to a new standard of judgment by the Auditor General of Canada is one that has very interesting significance as to our ability to recruit private sector people to work alongside government, thus enabling the government to have the benefit of their advice. I have been told by one person whom I have approached to become a director, "I don't know why I should risk public reprobation in statements of the Auditor General. Why should I be made to look like a fool in case the management or the board collectively takes difficult decisions that do not turn out to be perfect?" That is the problem.

I have no desire to prevent proper reporting and accountability on behalf of CDIC and crown corporations. That is not the issue. Under our parliamentary system the minister is responsible for reporting to Parliament. I intend to maintain that responsibility, and I believe that my behaviour with respect to Canadair and CDIC demonstrates the quality of the accountability that I think should be applied to our parliamentary practice.

Senator Phillips asked about Mr. Fred Kearns, the President of Canadair, and has spoken about a golden handshake. I can tell him that Mr. Kearns met with his board, discussed the concerns which the shareholder, the Government of Canada, had with respect to management and suggested to his board that he take early retirement, a suggestion his board unanimously accepted. No settlement arrangement has been made with Mr. Kearns. He will continue as a consultant while the analysis of Canadair's affairs continues, and a committee of the Canadair board has been established to make the decision as to what severance arrangements are appropriate in the case of Mr. Kearns. With respect to Jean-Pierre Goyer, who is Vice-Chairman of Canadair and has been a director for approximately two years, he has been an outstanding director and was one who was most concerned at an early stage with respect to the financial and operating conditions of Canadair.

There was a question about whether a bank would put money into Canadair. I do not know where Senator Phillips has been, but perhaps he is unaware of the exposure of the industrial world's banking system to the communist bloc, to countries in Latin America and to one or two other countries around the world. Senator Phillips mentioned Williamsburg earlier. Perhaps in his research he missed the part of the discussion dealing with the overhang of national debt and corporate debt and the vulnerability of the world banking system to the consequences of a loan of a good deal of depositors' money in one way or another. I want to be very clear that in the development of aerospace technology the world experience has been high development costs and substantial overruns. This is true in the United States and in every industrial country that has produced an aircraft to fly. Poor Howard Hughes produced a wonderful airplane at great expense to himself. He was considered to be a financial genius, and he could never make any money out of the Spruce Goose, as it was called.

● (1520)

Countries with the industrial competence of France and Britain have lost billions of dollars in the Concorde. The United States has had a number of aircraft companies that have been rescued. The Lockheed 1011 has a loss potential of over $2 billion. The Japanese have had notorious failures in producing aircraft and selling them commercially.

What happens in those countries is that those exposures are not noticed so much because defence contracts largely cover the development costs, and in the United States, major aircraft companies are allowed to develop the aircraft after the United States government has paid the development costs through the period of trial and error.

The British Aerospace Company has suffered very considerable civilian losses, but it is carried by its defence contracts, and perhaps those defence contracts to some degree subsidize its operations.

None of this is an excuse for the Canadair performance, but I think it is fair to ask that Canada's experience be taken in the perspective of other countries. It is regrettable that some substantial money will be lost by the Challenger project, but what we must do now is be practical and pragmatic Canadians. The question is: Can we sell this technology from here on in if we do not have to carry the development costs, including the debt exposure? Can we sell the product on the basis that we can carry the costs of its production and sales from here on in or, even, can we make a profit?

I have said in the committee in the other place that my objective is to return in the fall to Parliament with a corporate plan for the Challenger project showing what it will cost us to go on from here; how much money it will take us to stay in business with the Challenger. I hope I can show you that we can turn it around if we do not have to carry the costs to this point; and if I can show you that, I will be asking you to finance the required funds to the turn-around point or, if there is a shortfall, I will tell you by how much. Parliament will then undoubtedly decide whether or not it wishes to produce the Challenger at a loss.

Those are the salient items on which I wanted to report. I have given you as complete a statement as I can, both in the oral explanation I have just made and in my report, and I will be delighted if honourable senators wish to ask me questions after they have considered the information and the views I have expressed.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a few questions for the honourable minister. I am intrigued by the fact that Mr. Kearns, the former president of Canadair who was blamed before the committee of the other place for the failure of Canadair, has now been hired as a consultant. May I ask what his function and duties will be as a consultant? Will he be a consultant on how to repeat the same mistakes or to correct them?

I should also like to remind the minister that I am still interested in the salaries being paid to Mr. Joel Bell and Mr. Maurice Strong. The minister left me with the impression that they were perhaps working gratis. If they are being paid, however, I should like to know their salaries and the benefits they receive.

Senator Austin: With respect to Mr. Kearns, he is a man who has been with Canadair for 35 years. He has a great deal of information that will be useful to the government concerning Canadair, its sales, its relations with customer networks and its relations with suppliers, and he is prepared to make that information available to CDIC for some time to come. In my view, that is of advantage to CDIC and to the government's investment in Canadair.

With respect to the salaries paid to Messrs. Bell and Strong, Senator Phillips knows that, under the appropriate legislation, I am not permitted to reveal the salaries of individual public servants.

Senator Phillips: There is no such legislation.

Senator Austin: At this time I am not prepared to respond beyond the bounds of the legal system that controls me.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, after listening to the statements of Senator Phillips and Senator Austin, I have come to the conclusion that it would probably not be expedient to attempt to conclude this debate this afternoon. I, for one, would like to have a chance to read the 60 pages of material the minister has provided. It may be that after reading that I will be content with his explanation, but I must say that, so far this afternoon, I have gained one impression, and that is that the minister has satisfied himself that it was not his fault and that no responsibility or culpability attaches to the government. It is not relevant whether there are some Frenchmen or Americans who cannot run their aircraft industry properly. I must say I appreciate his zeal in reporting to this house, but reports are not good enough. Ministerial responsibility is also a factor to be considered, and I think further examination of the genesis of this unsatisfactory affair and the part the government played in it is certainly worthy of the attention of this chamber.

It is on that ground that I intend to move the adjournment of the debate, in order that I shall have an opportunity over the next few days to read the 60-page report. It may be that the concerns which the minister has aroused this afternoon will be satisfied by what I read. If not, I intend to continue the discussion. I therefore move that this debate be adjourned.

Senator Frith: Just before the motion is put, I take it that honourable senators have not lost sight of the fact that we are dealing with the borrowing authority bill. The statement that will appear in the record can be used in Question Period as long as senators wish to ask questions about it. However, the Canadair question plays a comparatively small role in the borrowing authority, it seems to me, and I would ask Senator Roblin whether he would consider dealing with the Canadair question during Question Period, rather than continuing to have it dealt with under the borrowing authority, in view of the fact that this statement has been tabled and will appear as part of the record.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for his effort to be helpful, but I do not think I will accept his advice. It seems to me that we are being asked to approve the borrowing program of the government, and certainly this item is a substantial portion. I do not regard $250 million as an inconsequential amount.

Senator Frith: Out of $26 billion?

Senator Roblin: I would not regard it as inconsequential if it were out of $126 billion. It is part of the borrowing authority that is requested and, before we deal with the bill as a whole, we have every right to consider it and investigate it in this manner.

Senator Frith: I am not suggesting that you do not have the right to consider it—

Senator Roblin: Then, if my honourable friend agrees with me, I shall adjourn the debate.

[Translation]

Senator Deschatelets: On several occasions the minister has made references to Bill C-158, which was first introduced in the other place. I am very much interested in the issue of government investments and its underlying philosophy, as are a number of my colleagues. I wonder how far the government intends to go in its acquisition of companies, and so forth. I have made enquiries, and was told that the latest comprehensive list of federal investments in corporations and enterprises was published in 1981. Could we perhaps get a complete list from the minister as soon as possible?

● (1530)

[English]

I should like an up-to-date list of all companies in which the government has a total or partial interest.

Hon. Martial Asselin: A financial interest.

Senator Austin: I shall endeavour to obtain such a list and make it available to honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

PENITENTIARY ACT
PAROLE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FURTHER REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the further report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill S-32, to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act, which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. Joan B. Neiman moved the adoption of the report.

[Senator Frith.]

She said: Honourable senators, I believe all of you have received this afternoon copies of the amended report of the committee. This report is almost the same as the report which was submitted to the Senate on June 2. As you will recall, that the bill was referred back to the committee so that the committee could deal with a few technical amendments.

If you will look at the copy of the report dated June 9, you will see that we have set out in the margins what the amendments are so that you are able to see just what has occurred.

Briefly, the amendments consist of the addition of a word such as "shall", which you will see on the first page. That amendment was made to make the meaning of the clause clearer. That was done in two cases.

In both the English and French versions we took out the Latin expression mutatis mutandis and substituted an appropriate English and French phrase. Apparently that phrase is no longer in with the Department of Justice.

There happened to be a couple of omissions of numbers of subclauses, and in one case, two small paragraphs of the French version were omitted.

That really amounts to all the amendments which we made to the report yesterday. Members of the committee had no questions, and everyone seemed satisfied with the explanations given.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, we recognize the fact, and are prepared to say as much to the chairman of this committee, that very important work has been done by its members on this legislation. We consulted Senator Nurgitz who is responsible for this bill on our side of the house and also the deputy chairman of the committee, Senator Donahoe. Since only technical corrections are involved, we have no objection to having this report adopted.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I do not wish to hold up this bill on third reading because, coming from British Columbia, I am sure you can understand that I am anxious to see it passed.

I should like to congratulate the members of the committee on the thorough work they have obviously done and for presenting this report to us today. However, I regret very much that, having had the report in its final form with the amendments put on our desks in the chamber just an hour ago, there really was not time to consider, even with the well-expressed explanations from the chairman, exactly what the amendments deal with.

I will not hold the bill up now, in any event, but I do regret not having the time to sit down and check the report and the amendments, which are perhaps technical in nature, with the original bill. I want to see this bill passed. It certainly has my support.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not recall whether Senator Bell was here last week or not, but perhaps her concern omits one step—that is, the report presented today deals essentially with technical amendments, as she has said. The substantive amendments were the subject of a report made to the Senate last week. So, there has been a great deal more time given to consider the report and the amendments than simply from Tuesday to today. There have been months of consideration given to the subject.

The motion to adopt the report today followed a reference back last Tuesday simply for technical purposes. That should not obscure the fact that a great deal of time was given to the members of the committee and all honourable senators to consider the substantive amendments.

The only thing that is being abridged, if anything is being abridged, is the pure question of some technical amendments, and certain changes of words in the English and French version, which arose from translation.

Senator Bell: I should like to thank the deputy leader for clarifying the situation.

Although I followed the progress of this bill as closely as possible, I have to admit that I cannot think of two subjects at the same time. I was very much interested in the discussion on the borrowing bill this afternoon between Senator Phillips and Senator Austin. While I tried to follow the technical amendments to the report, I could not quite get my brain into a schizophrenic state to be able to do so, but such things as changes respecting mutatis mutandis intrigue me very much, and I would have liked to follow that to see if that is a suitable Senate amendment or not. Thank you for your explanation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to make an observation in support of the view taken by Senator Bell.

Our rules declare that we have a time interval for these various activities that we undertake, and the reason for that is that all members of the Senate are not members of the various committees, so they need an opportunity to consider what the committee has done when they sit in the chamber.

We gave leave on this occasion in order to short-cut the procedure, but perhaps some of us should not have given that leave. To be told that it is unreasonable to complain about it when we are faced with this time situation is, I think, a work of supererogation on the part of the deputy leader. I think it would be better if he accepted Senator Bell's complaint with good grace rather than trying to justify it. I think that she is within her rights, and perhaps some of us in the future will be less inclined to give leave if we find that it is being used in the way the deputy leader has used it.

● (1540)

Senator Frith: Senator Roblin again mentions the question of rights. First, I certainly hope I did not give Senator Bell the impression that—

Senator Roblin: An apology would be in order.

Senator Frith: —she was not within her rights.

My second point is that I was trying to give an explanation to Senator Bell of some events which took place last week that seemed to me to put into context her concern. She, in turn, appears to have agreed and has thanked me for that explanation. I am sure that she also appreciates the fact that Senator Roblin seems to feel that I have in some way indulged in an act of—what was it—supererogation?

Senator Roblin: The word is "supererogation," and it is a good word. It means a superfluous gesture, and that is what my honourable friend indulged in.

Senator Frith: The gesture was made to Senator Bell, and she did not think it superfluous.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You assume that.

Senator Roblin: How do you know what she thought?

Senator Frith: She said so, and I assume that what she told us is what she thought.

Hon. Joan B. Neiman: Honourable senators, as you know, Bill S-32 has been before us for several months. I have been very fortunate in my committee to have the conscientious and careful consideration that has been given to the bill by a number of committee members who have followed it through the numerous hearings we have had. I think the minutes of those committee meetings would make very interesting reading for all honourable senators.

The whole field of corrections is a complicated and frustrating one. It is one I have been interested in since I was a law student, and that is more years than I care to admit at this point. When I first came here, eleven years ago, I immediately joined this committee and worked with Senator Goldenberg who was at that time studying the various aspects of parole, and for that reason my interest has continued. There are no easy solutions to the problems of trying to balance the right of an individual to be treated fairly with the right of society to be protected. We often make mistakes and will continue to make them.

In this bill the government endeavoured to propose amendments in areas it saw fit. Our committee has worked very hard in proposing variations on those amendments. I believe that we were unanimous in the conclusions we reached.

If Senator Bell would refer back to the Debates of the Senate of May 31, June 2 and June 7, she will find complete explanations of what we did at that time.

Honourable senators, I commend this bill to you for your approval on third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask for leave to revert to Notices of Motions, and I am taking it for granted that Senator Roblin will say: "That depends on what for." The reason is to give the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, Subcommittee on Estimates, which is scheduled to meet at 1.30 p.m. on Tuesday, leave to continue its meeting past 2 o'clock on that day, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate will be sitting.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is there a reason why this is necessary?

Senator Frith: The reason is that when I asked that we sit at 2 o'clock I had forgotten that that subcommittee was meeting at 1.30 p.m. I feel it only fair to give the subcommittee this permission because I more or less sprang a 2 o'clock sitting of the Senate on its members.

Senator Roblin: I must share my prejudice with my honourable friend and tell him that I generally take the view that we should avoid these overlapping meetings. Can he not get in touch with Senator Doody, the chairman of the subcommittee, to find out if we can avoid the overlap? I am not going to stand in the way of a motion, but I should appreciate it if my honourable friend would arrange for some other time to be adopted.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is reasonable. Perhaps the motion can be agreed to, so that the subcommittee will have permission to meet if I cannot arrange to have its meeting either postponed or cancelled.

[Translation]

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday, June 14, 1983, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 14, 1983 at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5748)

CANADAIR LTD.

REPORT BY THE HONOURABLE JACK AUSTIN TO THE STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, AND THE STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, ON TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1983

By a coincidence of events, two standing committees of the House of Commons are meeting on the same day to examine Canadair Ltd., a government-owned aviation company. The interests of the two committees are different. The Public Accounts Committee will be concerned with the financial statements of Canadair, the accounting methods employed and the auditing of such statements. The Finance Committee will be concerned with the policy decisions of the Government with respect to Canadair, the success of the Government in carrying out that policy and the basis of the request by the Government for an additional $240 million.

But in fact, both committees need an information base and therefore it is appropriate to make the same report to the two committees. However, after tabling this report I will be asking Joel Bell, President of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, to respond to the questions of the Public Accounts Committee. He is accompanied by other expert witnesses. In the afternoon, I will appear before the Finance Committee, accompanied by Mr. Bell, to deal with questions on Government policy and the matter of $240 million in additional funding for Canadair Ltd. In the evening, Fred Kearns, President of Canadair, and other corporation officials will appear.

Mr. Chairman, we are here today to help Parliamentarians in every way we can to review the situation at Canadair Ltd. and provide as full an analysis as can be done. Parliament and the public deserve a full accounting of what has transpired.

CDIC is here today because the Government, on November 23, 1982, assigned it the task of finding solutions to problems at Canadair that the Government had identified during 1981 and 1982. It was the belief of the Government that in view of Canadair's obvious troubles a greater shareholder presence was necessary. CDIC was assigned that shareholder role and has been instructed by the Government to adopt a commercial perspective in its activities at Canadair.

Mr. Chairman, I am also here today for the specific purpose of seeking $240 million to meet the cash needs of Canadair for the balance of this year. This request represents the most realistic commercial decision that could be made at this time. It results in the lowest amount of funds that is necessary under any scenario. It is as well the only scenario that would generate future revenues from past investments.

This statement may surprise Members of the Committees. But what has to be taken into account is the fact that all of the $240 million would have to be spent even if no additional Challengers were produced. Canadair's greatest cash requirements in the immediate period ahead are for interest payments on existing debt and payments to suppliers for contracted deliveries of parts and components.

Continuing to produce additional Challengers does result in some additional labour costs. It also keeps people working. But the Challengers that will be produced will result in additional revenues that much more than cover the incremental labour costs. Canadair will earn revenues that it would not have if it didn't proceed with the Challenger program. It will have the additional benefit of using up some existing inventory of parts and components and paying down some purchase commitments.

Canadair will only be producing a number of aircraft to cover firm orders and a limited number for potential new orders. Should these open positions not be taken up by new orders, currently contracted deliveries for 1984 and 1985 can be made from this production and production can be reduced in the future.

Moreover, as I shall discuss later, termination costs for the Challenger program would also be an additional expense of several hundred million dollars.

Without this additional cash, Canadair will not continue as a going concern.

In reporting on Canadair, I want to be as informative as possible. The public and Parliament deserve nothing less. But Mr. Chairman, while I am committed to providing a full report to the Committees we must all be careful not to play into the hands of Canadair's competitors and destroy the company's prospects for future sales and success, by discussing publicly what are confidential commercial matters. There are some issues which would be better left to in camera discussion where we can be candid with Members of the Committee without doing damage to Canadair's competitive position. In particular, it would not be appropriate to discuss publicly future marketing, sales and production plans.

In addition, some of the details of commercial arrangements should be pursued in camera since it would prejudice Canadair's business interests to lay them out in front of our competitors. Moreover, customers and suppliers in many cases do not like and do not permit us to discuss their business affairs publicly.

Mr. Chairman, as I said, in the Government's view, the funding of $240 million makes enormous sense. The Canada Development Investment Corporation and Canadair's board and management are working to develop a business strategy for the future. CDIC and Canadair expect to be able to report to Parliament before the end of the year on the outcome of this analysis. In the meantime, the most sensible option is to provide the funds that Canadair needs to continue to produce Challengers.

It is, of course, the responsibility of Government to make the policy decision that Canada should have a strong aviation/aerospace industry and that it should receive public support.

This judgment is not based on some esoteric desire to participate in the industry because of its exciting technology. It is based on business calculations which admittedly, like all business calculations, include some degree of risk. But it is important to keep in mind that Canada does have the second largest fleet of commercial aircraft in the world. We are the world's fourth largest user of helicopters. We are the world's fifth largest aerospace producer. We believe Canada's aerospace activities can, with the right strategy and support, make a profit. CDIC and Canadair are currently working to develop such a strategy.

We should recognize aerospace is a growth industry that can strengthen Canada's technological base, serve as an active source of export earnings and provide well-paying and highly-skilled jobs. But we can participate in this industry only if we have a base of Canadian corporations that can design, engineer and produce aircraft, aircraft engines, aircraft subcontracts and parts and components and which can also serve as vehicles through which Canada can participate in the growing number of international joint ventures that are being set up to share the risks of new programs and to provide access to markets.

In coming to this view, it is worth noting that Canada is not the only country to realize the importance of an aerospace industry and to give it public support. It is a high-risk and capital intensive industry and nations which have strong aerospace industries provide public support in a variety of ways. They fund research and underwrite development costs with grants and loans that are repayable only if the program succeeds. They provide a strong base of demand through military contracts and look for commercial derivatives from military projects. They use government procurement powers. In many cases they own national airlines and use that purchasing power to support their industry. They participate directly through equity investments. I think it is fair to say that every country with a dynamic aerospace industry has a high level of deliberate public support.

The fact is that most countries find some way to have the government absorb the costs of developing new technology and products in the aerospace sector:

—In the U.S., defence and space spending account for most significant aerospace industry developments. The Boeing 707 was developed jointly with the KC-135 military tanker. The DC-10, Lockheed-1011 and Boeing 747 were developed based on technological research into wide-bodied aircraft while competing for the C-5A military transport contract. The initial engine for the DC-8 and the Boeing 707 was first developed for military use while the wing geometry was based on designs from the B-47, B-52 and B-66. The early U.S. business jets were widely used by the U.S. military.

—In Europe, grants, reimbursable advances and equity investments have long characterized all new developments of aircraft designs.

—In Japan, a newly-emerging participant in the high-precision airframe business, a public civil aviation development corporation serves as a publicly-supported umbrella for the country's entry into aerospace manufacturing.

Canada cannot expect to be different. But to date most of the public support for Canadair has been through loan guarantees instead of direct cash support. This has burdened the company with high interest costs and has the effect of placing the company in peril if the venture thus funded does not prove to be an immediate success. I would point out that some aircraft which did not immediately gain high sales volumes did, over time, turn out to be highly successful and profitable products. de Havilland's Twin Otter is a good example. Cessna's Citation and the Gulfstream are others.

It is also important to keep in mind that we now have in the Challenger an attractive product by any objective assessment. The plane provides comfortable, long-range transportation, with considerably less fuel consumption and a lot less noise than the competition. The aircraft is, in fact, the only new-technology large business jet on the market today. The competition have developed different versions of 1960s technology—we have developed a 1980s state-of-the-art aircraft with significant growth potential on this more recent aerodynamic and engine base. The aviation industry has learned things over the years which have been built into the more recently designed Challenger but which were not known or required when the competitive planes currently on the market were designed. These are not forecasts or promises. They are today's reality. We are proud of this fine aircraft.

It is true that it cost us too much to get to the stage we are at with the product today and that the excessive cost is a reflection of earlier deficiencies in design, management, manufacturing control and financial control in the company. It is true that the sales to date are below desirable levels. The critical point is to recognize that we have a good product and to separate our assessment of our financial problems from a judgment on the product.

The Government has made a substantial commitment to Canadair since it acquired the company in January, 1976 for $46.6 million. Debts of Canadair guaranteed by the Government of Canada total almost $1.35 billion. Late last year Parliament approved a $200 million equity investment in Canadair. At the time I advised members of the Finance Committee we would be seeking additional funds.

Some Members may ask whether additional money should be invested. Others will be concerned that there will be further requests for funds in the future. If I did not believe an additional investment was justified, I would not be here today. But as I have indicated, there are sound commercial reasons for the additional funding. However, I must acknowledge that further funding and financial restructuring will be needed. CDIC, with Canadair's board and management, is in the process of rebuilding and restructuring Canadair. But that will take time and money as experience with Chrysler and Lockheed has shown. Companies are not turned around overnight nor are they turned around with additional resources.

While I have said that this Government is committed to building a strong aerospace industry in this country, I would have to admit there have been difficulties and disappointments. But to quote the Prime Minister, we are not about to lose our nerve. What we are going to do is to try harder, to make changes where they are necessary, and to apply sound management and commercial know-how to ensure that Canadians participate in this vital, exciting and high-technology industry.

Canadair has had a long and important history in Canadian aviation. From 1920 to 1944 it operated as a division of the British-owned Canadian Vickers and during World War Two played a vital role in helping meet Allied war needs. In 1944, with the war coming to a close, Canadian Vickers decided it wanted to concentrate on its shipbuilding activities and withdraw from aircraft production. Thus in 1944 Canadair became a Crown corporation, reflecting the Government of Canada's desire that the company continue to operate as an integral part of the country's aviation industry, an industry which as a result of its wartime efforts had gained considerable international recognition.

In 1947 Canadair was returned to the private sector when it was purchased by the U.S. submarine manufacturer, Electric Boat Co., a predecessor of what was to become General Dynamics.

Canadair manufactured 3,800 aircraft between 1943 and 1974 and employed a peak of 13,495 people in 1953. Of these 3,800 planes, almost 3,000 were sold to the Canadian Government, primarily for military purposes. This dependence on military sales, the cornerstone of airframe manufacturers the world over, became the principal cause of Canadair's problems in the early 1970s and the reason for its U.S. parent's declining interest in the subsidiary. Military procurement by the Government of Canada had fallen significantly from the late 1960s and this had a dramatic negative impact on a company whose business had been built primarily around military sales to the Canadian Government. By 1974 Canadair had only 2,400 employees. In 1969 sales were $138 million; in 1974 sales were only $43 million.

The decline of Canadair was obviously a matter of great concern. Canadair represented a high level of production skills. It was an important vehicle through which to obtain military and commercial aviation manufacturing offsets for Canada. As a result of our foreign purchases from suppliers with a base of defence procurement support, it could provide larger and more modern equipment sought by modern defence forces. Canada lacked the critical mass to remain its own supplier of these larger and more sophisticated aircraft. If we lost this base in Canada, however, we would be unable to retain the capacity to benefit from manufacturing components and carrying our subcontracts for foreign-built aircraft for which Canada was and remains a leading market.

Nor could the Government be unmindful of the decision in 1959 to terminate the Avro Arrow. That decision had cost the country dearly. Some 13,500 employees at Avro and Orenda Engines were laid off, including more than 1,500 with engineering and high technology backgrounds. A critical mass of top engineering and technology talent left Canada and went to work in the U.S. space program and aviation industry.

The 25th anniversary of that fateful decision occurred in March. Some 2,000 people showed up at a trade centre in Toronto to, in the words of the editor of Canadian Aviation, "pay homage to the greatest technological achievement in Canadian history, an achievement which, for Canada, was akin to the U.S. reaching the moon". Regrettably, as the editor added, "the Arrow passed into history without being given an opportunity to show what it could do".

When the Government reviewed the company in 1975, Canadair possessed the necessary engineering and operating expertise to compete successfully in various areas of the aviation industry including designing and manufacturing surveillance drones for some NATO countries, meeting the rigid specifications demanded by a manufacturer of military and large commercial aircraft of its subcontractors, developing, in the Water Bomber, a unique aircraft for world markets, and conducting research and development related to these activities.

It is true, as well, that Canadair's engineering, marketing and management skills necessary for it to remain a major aviation company had been allowed to deteriorate. At the time the Government was trying to decide whether to acquire Canadair, the company had only 150 engineering employees.

It was against this background that in 1975 the Government of Canada was faced with a critical choice: Should it allow Canadair to shrink, become mainly a maintenance centre for the military and no longer an active and important player in the Canadian aviation industry; or should the Government exercise its option to acquire Canadair to help ensure a strong Canadian presence in the aerospace industry?

Canadair was, after all, one of the only two aircraft manufacturers in Canada. To reduce Canada's ability to produce aircraft, thus denying Canadians jobs and high-technology component manufacturing an important market, would increase Canada's trade deficit in manufactured goods. It would also signal a Canadian reluctance to face the risks of high technology.

Thus the decision by the Government of Canada, in January, 1976, to acquire Canadair, with the intention of returning it to the private sector when the opportunity arose in the future.

At about this time Canadair embarked on the development of a new business jet, the Challenger. The Challenger evolved into a wide-bodied business jet competing with the U.S.-made Gulfstream and the French-made Falcon 50.

The difficulties that emerged with the Challenger program are at the root of Canadair's financial troubles today, as I shall discuss later. But essentially, the plane cost more and took longer to develop than was expected, failed to meet its presold specifications, was delayed because of problems with its initial engine manufacturer and in the certification process, encountered break-in problems, failed to achieve projected sales targets and ran head-on into the recent global recession.

As a result, increasingly severe financial problems have emerged at Canadair although their full implications were not clear until last year. Identification of the financial difficulties was, I must say, seriously hampered by the excessive optimism of Canadair itself and in particular its over-optimistic projection of sales, and its limited disclosure of information.

It is my intention to focus principally on the Challenger business jet program in today's presentation since it currently represents about 60 per cent of Canadair's sales and 50 per cent of its employment and is the reason why Canadair faces such serious financial difficulties today.

But before doing so we would be remiss if we did not point out that Canadair has a wide range of other business activities that in total are profitable and which represent significant engineering and manufacturing capability as well as the application of high technology. These include subcontracts for high precision parts of the Boeing 767, the F-18 fighter, the Aurora long-range patrol aircraft and the C-5B U.S. Air Force transport plane, the largest aircraft in the world. In addition, Canadair designs and produces surveillance drones for export markets. And, as I have mentioned, the company has developed an international market for its CL-215 water bomber.

Mr. Chairman, with this background, I would now like to turn to the Challenger business jet program whose development began at about the time the Government of Canada acquired Canadair in 1976.

Canadair began work on the Challenger in 1976 when it acquired the original conceptual design from Bill Lear, the late well-known U.S. aircraft innovator. The business jet market had appeal because of its steady growth and apparent potential for the future. The medium-to-large business jet market was seen to be an industry growth centre for the next several decades. However, embarking upon the plan was a major task for Canadair since its design and engineering staff had never undertaken the development of an aircraft as complex as the Challenger. Moreover, at the time that Canadair undertook the program, the company's engineering staff was at an all-time low.

In addition, Canadair decided early in the development process to expand upon Lear's concept and make the aircraft more spacious and hence potentially more attractive to business purchasers. Canadair decided to increase the length and diameter of the fuselage, to produce a wide-bodied business jet that was more spacious than business jets then on the market. Lear disagreed with these changes to his concept and withdrew from the project as a result of Canadair's changes. He retained, though, a property right in the form of royalties on future deliveries of that aircraft.

Canadair created additional problems for itself by attempting to take the Challenger from concept to commercial production in about 30 months, or roughly half the industry's normal five-year design-to-production process. Because of its then lack of engineering management depth, compounded by the selection of an unproven engine, Canadair committed itself to performance specifications and a design and certification schedule it could not meet.

Even so, Canadair told the Government in 1976 that the Challenger could be brought to the point of commercial production for a cost of $106 million, with peak financial requirements of $128 million, by the Fall of 1979. It was estimated that if a total of 136 aircraft could be sold and delivered by mid-1982, all development costs would be recovered. This was the basis for the Government's go-ahead for the program. In June, 1977, Canadair predicted it would deliver 236 Challengers by June 30, 1983.

While its larger size made the Challenger more appealing to potential buyers, the extra weight the new design added to the plane created serious problems. By 1978, Canadair had a Challenger jet that could fly but it could not meet the specifications.

Frequent modifications to the aircraft were necessary to try to reduce the weight and extend the range. Many such modifications were made after production of the Challenger 600 had begun under the rapid schedule which had been established to permit early penetration of the market. In the case of early production Challenger-600s, modifications were made while the planes were in customer's hands at completion centres where interiors are installed. These after-delivery modifications or retrofits were particularly costly. A few entailed up to 20,000 manhours of work per aircraft. This can be compared to the 65,000 manhours required to build a Challenger today.

The original specifications of the Challenger CL-600 called for a 32,500 pound plane that would carry five passengers a theoretical 4,000 nautical miles and be able to fly from a 5,000 foot take-off field length. When the decision was made early on that marketing requirements made a larger aircraft than the original Lear design desirable, only a belated attempt was made to restudy the weight and specification impact.

As a result, despite the fact that changes impacting the weight and therefore the performance specifications were made as ongoing design changes, the engineering specifications on which the aircraft were sold remained constant from September, 1976 to November, 1978, except for a very minor 200-lb. weight increase.

It was only with the issuance of certification in August, 1980, that the full impact of these changes became public knowledge. An IFR (Instrument Flight Regulations) range of 3,200 nautical miles was set and that could be achieved only with additional fuselage fuel tanks and a 25 per cent weight increase to 40,400 pounds. The necessary take-off field length was increased to 6,800 feet. (Subsequently, it has been certified at 5,400 feet.)

The need to make significant modifications to the CL-600 and the failure of the CL-600 to meet specifications hurt Canadair in a number of ways. The direct costs of making the modifications were substantial, probably in the order of $300 million. Parts in production had to be scrapped and suppliers were paid for parts that could not be used. The need for modifications delayed the start of commercial production and the delivery of aircraft to customers. Some customers cancelled aircraft because of these delays and the failure of the Challenger-600 to meet specifications. At the same time modifications were necessitated by corrective notices issued by regulatory authorities, known as Airworthiness Directives. The delays and cancellations added to Canadair's problems by delaying or eliminating projected cash flow. All of the modifications to the plane added significantly to its costs and caused reductions in cash flow.

Delays in certification of the Challenger 600, compounded by technical and delivery problems with the Avco-Lycoming engine, also contributed to Canadair's problems. The company had based its planning on certification being obtained from Canadian and U.S. authorities by March, 1979. The combination of new certification standards and modifications in the Challenger design meant that the Challenger 600 was not certified by the Canadian Ministry of Transport until August, 1980. Certification was not obtained from the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration until November, 1980. During this period of certification delay Canadair had to bear the costs of producing aircraft that it was not allowed to deliver. But even when the Challenger was initially certified, a series of changes in the weight and design of the plane to enable it to approach the modified specifications on which it was acceptable to customers also had to be approved by regulatory authorities. In August, 1980, certification was obtained for a 33,000 pound plane. Later, in January, 1981, certification was obtained for a 36,000 pound plane, in May, 1981 for a 38,500 pound plane and ultimately in April, 1982 for 40,400 pounds. These changes had to be made in order to produce Challenger which could meet basic specifications for customers. Only 32 Challengers had been delivered to the end of 1981, the first full year of aircraft deliveries and each one of these planes, to meet final certification standards, had to be significantly modified after it left the factory floor.

In the same 1979-1980 period Canadair encountered delays in engine deliveries from Avco Corp.'s Lycoming engine division in Stratford, Conn. The company consistently failed to meet its agreed-on delivery schedule, forcing Canadair to send in its own employees and consultants to Lycoming as early as mid-1979. In late 1980 Avco agreed to a new delivery schedule which it continued to fail to meet. It promised delivery of 114 engines in 1981 but delivered only 45. As members of this committee will know, Canadair on May 30, 1983, announced it was suing Avco-Lycoming for $109.6 million on the grounds that it has suffered from delays in deliveries and lost sales as well as added costs because of problems with the Avco-Lycoming engine. Morcover, these engine problems continue to hamper the Challenger 600 program.

As a result of delays and problems with the Challenger 600 and the company's desire to manufacture a product that would be fully competitive in the market, Canadair in March, 1980 embarked, with board approval, on the development of a stretched version of the Challenger 600, to be known as the Challenger-610. It was to be powered with General Electric engines. The plane was to have a maximum take-off weight of 49,000 pounds and an IFR range of 3,950 nautical miles, carrying six passengers. The 610 was to become the centrepiece of Canadair's marketing efforts. In many respects the decision to embark on the 610 was a reflection of Canadair's lack of management depth in dealing with a major new aircraft program. The 600 was already overweight and to build the 610 would have required a major redesign of the Challenger wing, improvements to the GE engine and re-certification of the aircraft and the engine. A re-assessment of the program in 1981 disclosed these realities and led to the abandonment of the CL-610 program in August, 1981.

In March, 1980, Canadair also announced the launch of the Challenger 601, in part because of its concern with the problems resulting from the Avco-Lycoming engine. With the cancellation of the 610, would-be customers of the 610 were offered the alternative of either the 600 or the 601 at prices close to $1 million below the list prices of these aircraft at the time.

Another outcome of Canadair's unfortunate experience with the 610 was that General Electric insisted on a renegotiation of the engine contract for the 601. The original agreement with General Electric had contemplated both the 610 and the 601 aircraft. When Canadair cancelled the 610, the U.S. engine company demanded a price increase of nearly 20 per cent on all engines and an increase in the contracted-for deliveries from 100 to 200 engines on the grounds that there was less likelihood of otherwise selling a significant quantity of engines. Canadair felt it had no choice but to accept these terms if the CL 601 program was to proceed.

Canadair's rising cash requirements in this period were met entirely by borrowing, and most of that borrowing was done in periods when interest rates were extremely high. The already high cash needs of Canadair were in turn increased as a result of having to make increasingly large interest payments.

Canadair's financial troubles were compounded by its over-optimistic, sales, delivery, and break-even forecasts. The company's order book gave a misleading picture of its future prospects since it included a large number of soft orders or options which were never likely to result in actual sales. It also included a number of transactions that were not profitable, and hence resulted in losses for the company. Indeed most aircraft to date have been sold and delivered at less than the now-expected average cost of production.

The company needed increasing numbers of orders and rising prices to maintain a break-even scenario for the program as costs kept escalating. See attached Table 1. For example, in the discussions leading to the $1.35 billion loan guarantee, approved by Parliament in March, 1982, Canadair management had projected deliveries of 60 Challenger 600s in 1982, compared to actual deliveries of 33. If Canadair had been able to sell for the original price of U.S. $4.375 million a plane which had met its original 1976 specifications, it would have had a very big market for its Challenger aircraft. But the company could not deliver that plane and, even worse, it failed to recognize the warning signals of rising costs and changing specifications and to tie these into its sales and production forecasts. If anything, Canadair's sales forecasts became more optimistic as the company experienced increasing difficulties in physically designing and building the plane. As problems emerged in meeting the specifications and timing, the company was so anxious to hold orders and compensate for short falls in its performance that it committed itself to contractual terms on sales that are hard to justify.

But as recently as last year, Canadair continued to forecast large numbers of sales. In April it forecast orders of 541 Challengers to the end of 1989 and deliveries of 456 Challengers to the end of 1989. For 1983 Canadair forecast orders for 48 Challengers versus actual orders of one to date. Canadair expected 115 Challengers to be delivered in 1982-1983 alone. Actual deliveries for 1982 and 1983 to date total 45 aircraft.

In addition to basing its cash flow projections on highly optimistic sales and delivery forecasts, Canadair assumed it would be able to make significant price increases each year. In June, 1981, for example, it projected a 15 per cent increase on January 1, 1982 and a 5 per cent increase every six months after that throughout the program period, until 1988. This would have meant a price (including projected escalation) of U.S. $22 million by 1986. Under this schedule the price of the Challenger 600 today would be U.S. $10.98 million and the Challenger 601 U.S. $12.43 million. Average list prices are U.S. $8.25 million for the Challenger 600 and U.S. $11 million for the Challenger 601.

Canadair's approach to marketing created other problems for the company. The initial low prices at which it agreed to make early deliveries encouraged potential buyers to commit themselves to aircraft which they could easily resell on the market at a profit. This indeed is what happened and the resulting overhang of Challengers has acted as a barrier to new Challenger sales.

The excessive optimism on sales also led Canadair to excessive production rate decisions which resulted in deliveries of costly parts and components from suppliers far in excess of what was needed. At the start of 1982 Canadair management planned the production of five Challenger 600s a month for 1982 and 5½ a month in 1983. In April it reduced the number to four a month, although this was due to delays in the delivery of Avco-Lycoming engines rather than a reassessment of the market. It was not until June last year that Canadair began to reassess the production schedule. In July shipments from suppliers were halted and plans were made to halt the CL-600 production line for two months starting in September. Subsequently the only Challenger 600s that have been completed were 18 that were so far along in the production line they could not economically be converted to Challenger 601s. But orders for parts and components were based on the earlier and much more optimistic production rates. These excess parts and components were a contributing cause of Canadair's additional need for funds that was recognized in the $200 million equity infusion made by Parliament in December of last year.

Thus the picture that emerges is that of a program that cost much more to develop than was originally estimated while sales were much lower than projected. The result was that cash requirements soared while cash flow from progress payments and deliveries fell well below company projections. This growing gap was filled by borrowed money, priced at high interest rates, which in turn added to Canadair's ongoing cash requirements.

Today, we are still faced with a period of excessive supplier obligations, large inventories, and very substantial interest burdens arising from the debt built up over the period of 1976-1982. Sales are slow for reasons of the condition of the general economy and our need to satisfy the market that we are through the phases of promises and are now selling what does, in fact, exist. Indeed the Challenger 601 exceeds the original conceived specifications. It has an IFR range of 3,500 nautical miles at low fuel consumption levels and impressively low noise levels. But a period of losses and on-going net cash requirements lies ahead of us before a combination of operating efficiencies and sales can bring Canadair into cash balance.

This brings us to Table 2. This attached table summarizes the ways in which the cash needs of Canadair accumulated from 1976 up to the end of 1982. As can be seen, the cost of the Challenger program to the end of 1982 has totalled $1.9 billion. The table demonstrates the increasing cash needs of Canadair resulting from the costs of redesign and modifications, delays in engine deliveries and certification, failure to achieve sales forecasts and obtain the projected cash flow from progress payments on anticipated sales, the costs of over-ordering of parts and components based on unrealistic production schedules, foreign exchange losses and, more recently, the rising interest burden on borrowed money.

Table 3 shows where the money came from. To the end of last year, sales revenues and progress payments had contributed $635 million. This left $1.3 billion of costs which have been financed through guaranteed loans and a $200 million equity injection. In essence the story of the Challenger program is one of sharply rising costs financed by steadily growing debts.

Table 1, referred to earlier, shows some of the changing breakeven calculations made by the company as the program progressed. The break-even quantity grew from 136 in 1976 to 349 in June, 1981 and 389 by year-end 1982. (In assessing the achievability of Canadair's break-even estimates, it is worth noting that it took Gulfstream 14 years to sell just under 270 Gulfstream IIs.) Canadair currently calculates that the Challenger program will never break even if Canadair has to pay interest on its debt.

Mr. Chairman, this brings me to the 1982 financial statements for Canadair which we are tabling with the committee today. The financial statements represent, in effect, the moment of truth for the Challenger program. The statements recognize that in excess of $1 billion of past unrecovered costs of the Challenger program are unlikely ever to be recovered. As a result of these actions, Canadair is reporting a 1982 loss of $1.4 billion, leaving the company with a negative net worth of $1.2 billion.

The accounting policy used by Canadair, called "program accounting", was designed to accommodate the unique nature of the aviation industry and is widely used in North America by companies such as Boeing Corp., Lockheed and Gulfstream. Program accounting treats the entire program—for example the Gulfstream III or the Challenger—as a cost centre. This is in contrast to other manufacturing industries, which use inventory accounting and treat each unit of production as a cost centre. A detailed discussion of this policy and its consequences and the 1982 reported loss is provided in the explanatory note distributed with the financial statements.

Development of any new aircraft is a high-risk and costly venture. Large-scale design, engineering, development and production costs are recovered only if there is a successful production run. An aircraft manufacturer incurs substantial start-up costs to launch a new plane, with up to five years of development costs required before a new plane is ready to be delivered. Significant investment in production equipment and inventory must follow after which an aircraft manacturer may need 10 to 15 years of sales to recover the development and production costs and realize a profit. Program accounting recognizes this by allowing the deferral of many costs during development.

When applying program accounting the aircraft manufacturer estimates the number of planes it can prudently expect to sell over the life of the program and the average cost of producing the planes it expects to sell. In developing the estimated costs of producing the planes, the manufacturer also recognizes that as production proceeds, the cost of producing a plane will decline. This is due in particular to the accumulation of production experience by labour and is referred to as the learning curve effects. The production cost per plane in the early life of the program is above the average cost per plane while in the later life of the program the production cost of each plane is below the average cost per plane.

The costs charged against each airplane sold under program accounting is the average cost per plane. The excess production costs of each plane in the early life of the program are capitalized as work-in-progress inventory instead of being expensed. In the later life of the program these capitalized costs are expensed when actual costs are below average cost. The result is to produce a relatively constant gross profit per aircraft sold over the life of the program instead of lower profits or, more likely, losses at the start of the program and high profits at the end. The accounting profession believes this method of accounting provides a better matching of program revenues and expenses over the life of the program.

While program accounting is widely used within the aviation industry, other aviation companies have been more conservative than Canadair in the costs they have capitalized. In previous years Canadair capitalized its general and administrative overhead, interest costs of money borrowed to finance the Challenger program, marketing costs, commissions, royalties and product support costs (so-called "soft costs") instead of deducting these from current revenues as other aviation companies have done. In preparing its 1982 financial statements, Canadair deemed that full commercial production of the Challenger program had commenced January 1, 1982, since by that time the planes being produced were of a configuration which was ready for delivery to customers without further modifications. In recognition of this, the company adopted the general practice of expensing soft costs as incurred.

In addition, for 1981 and prior years, instead of calculating the number of Challenger aircraft it could reasonably expect to sell as the basis for its average cost per plane, Canadair has based its projected program costs on an estimated break-even number of sales. In effect, the amount used to calculate Canadair's cost of sales each year has been the actual Challenger sales revenues for the year, with the remaining excess of actual production costs and other expenses related to the Challenger program during the year over sales revenues being capitalized and carried as inventory. The accounting result has been that Canadair has reported a break-even position on the Challenger program for 1981 and prior years when other aviation companies in similar circumstances would have reported losses. If it had used the accounting approach in 1980 and 1981 which it used in 1982, Canadair would have reported losses of $140.6 million and $233.6 million for those years.

To avoid carrying excessive capitalized costs in the balance sheet when employing program accounting the aircraft manufacturer is required to review the program, at least annually, to determine whether the costs capitalized can reasonably be expected to be recovered from future sales. If the manufacturer determines that the costs will not be recovered, it must write-off the portion of capitalized costs that it does not expect to recover.

As a result of carrying out a review for 1982, Canadair determined that there was no longer reasonable assurance that it would recover $1.054 billion of capitalized costs and therefore wrote off that amount in its 1982 financial year. Having also recognized 1982, for accounting purposes, as the first full year of commercial production for the Challenger, Canadair expensed "soft" costs incurred during the year and recorded a loss of $360.6 million for the year. This plus the write-off results in a $1.4 billion loss for the year.

The $1.054 billion write-off relates mainly to the unrecovered capitalized costs in Canadair's balance sheet on January 1, 1982 and includes the following:

—the unrecovered interest, marketing costs, commissions, royalties, product support costs and general and administrative costs included in work-in-progress inventory;

—the unrecovered initial tooling and development costs included in inventory;

—the unrecovered excess of actual production costs over amounts charged to cost of sales for planes delivered to the end of 1982;

—the write-off of obsolete and unusable items in inventory at December 31, 1982;

—the write-down of completed and partially completed aircraft in inventory at December 31, 1982 to their net realizable value; and —the provision for claims by suppliers relating to production and delivery slow-downs.

The write-off does not include any provision for future losses on the Challenger program. Such a provision would have been necessary if Canadair had projected that future losses on the entire program were likely and could be reasonably estimated. As noted earlier, Canadair is still incurring losses on the Challenger program. However, for accounting purposes, a reasonable estimate of the final results of the program cannot be made at this time because of the high degree of uncertainty surrounding the critical factors, such as orders, debt versus equity, interest rates, production rates and costs, that enter into such an estimate. As a result of this approach the future reported results of the Challenger program will reflect actual operations, this would not have been the case if provisions for future losses had been recorded in the 1982 financial statements.

It may well be asked in view of the write-offs Canadair is now taking whether a portion, perhaps a substantial proportion, of these should have been taken in the 1981 financial statements. We have considered that question. It is very difficult to reconstruct the circumstances in which such a decision would have been taken shortly before January 22, 1982 when the 1981 audit certificate was issued. It will be recalled that the 1981 audit certificate was issued before the succession of sharp drops in economic activity began or were even widely anticipated. Optimism about the market for the Challenger was a more reasonable sentiment at that moment in time than it later became. On balance we do not feel justified in substituting our judgment at this time for the judgment at that time of management, the Board and auditors of Canadair.

Mr. Chairman, it may be helpful to point out that as a result of CDIC assuming responsibility for Canadair, the public will in the future have much more information than it has had in the past on Canadair's situation. This is the first time members of Parliament have had before them financial statements for Canadair. Under CDIC not only will there be a public annual report each year for Canadair, there will also be quarterly financial statements. These annual and quarterly financial statements will meet, in general, the reporting requirements that have to be met by publicly-traded companies in Canada, which is how publicly-traded companies are assessed and held accountable to those who invest money in their activities.

In addition, CDIC will adopt for itself and its subsidiaries, including Canadair, the discipline of timely disclosure that currently applies to publicly-traded companies. This means that events or decisions of material significance to Canadair will be disclosed to the public at the time they occur.

Mr. Chairman, CDIC assumed responsibility for Canadair, by Order-in-Council on November 23, 1982. That's about six months ago. Since then, CDIC has been working intensively with Canadair to bring the situation under control and to develop a step-by-step plan for correcting the situation.

Let me also set out for you the other actions that CDIC has taken to date at Canadair:

1. It cut production to reduce cash requirements and avoid an undue inventory build up.
2. The reduction of the production rate necessitated a reduction of the work force by 650 people this year to the end of July 1983.
3. It has established a new Executive Committee of the Board chaired by the President of CDIC, which has drawn the Directors more actively into the operations of the company to ensure effective inputs by both the shareholder and the directors in achieving balanced and corrective action.
4. It has initiated a thorough, technical review of the engineering, cost control, financial reporting and production operations of the company. Outside experts with direct operating experience and exposure to dealing with these kinds of problems were called in to support this review. A serious, business-like response is being taken to an essentially business problem.
5. Independent and thorough-going market appraisals are under way with the help of independent advisers.
6. All past contracts have been reviewed from a legal and business perspective and some are under re-negotiation. Other factual situations have been referred to independent counsel for an opinion on whether any wrongdoing has taken place. A case involving bribery in Alaska, which has been the subject of investigative and criminal action in the United States, has been referred to the law officers of the Canadian Department of Justice to determine whether any wrongdoing has occurred on the part of Canadair or any of its employees.

7. All future transactions must meet established standards which reflect the commercial judgment of CDIC.
8. A new Chief Executive Officer is being recruited and an interim President will be appointed later this month. Over the next month or so, CDIC will be making additional appointments to the Board of Directors of Canadair to strengthen its input to the activities of the company.

I believe that close examination of the steps would satisfy you that a process is underway which is leading to an understanding of the situation as it stands, a stabilizing of the situation, an identification of corrective actions needed, the implementation of appropriate changes, and the establishment of a more effective monitoring capacity over the on-going performance. That monitoring will be particularly closely carried on until we can re-establish confidence that a firm footing has been achieved.

We cannot expect that a difficult situation can be turned around overnight. I believe, however, that we have made good progress in taking the initial steps necessary to control the situation and in establishing the more careful assessment of the strengths and weaknesses of the company.

The critical question that has had to be faced is the future of the Challenger program. Should we not pursue the market and development potential of our product? To date, we have identified no reason for believing that the Challenger program cannot be incrementally profitable for Canadair and its shareholder.

We have, in the Challenger 601, a very attractive product which is no longer a forecast or a promise. We have an aircraft which is meeting the original performance specifications promised for the Challenger program. Moreover, there are some positive signs the marketplace is interested. In looking at firm orders on a plane-by-plane basis we calculate that in 1982 Gulfstream III obtained 15 orders, a sharp drop from 32 in 1981. The 601 obtained 13 firm orders, compared to eight in 1981. The Falcon 50 obtained nine firm orders compared to 22 in 1981. And the Challenger 600 obtained five new orders, compared to 10 in 1981. The market for business jets is recovering. Regrettably the Challenger has been handicapped by recent adverse publicity and continued public controversy could impede future orders.

We have to be aggressive in our marketing and we have to be careful to control our costs. But out of all of this I want to repeat that we have a good product. We intend to develop our product to its maximum potential. We will, however, draw lessons from past mistakes and take steps to correct the situation as we have begun to do. We will take steps to cut overhead costs, make our production more efficient, improve cost controls, provide disclosure for more effective accountability and support aggressively profit-making opportunities on the asset base we enjoy.

Let me summarize our assessment of past performance, and of the financial results we have reported today.

1. Canadair promised more to the government than it delivered. The Government authorized the major investments made in the Challenger program on the representations of Canadair's board and management that the costs would be a lot lower than they have in fact been. The project was approved because, on the data provided, even though all such projects involve risks, the program was an attractive investment and an opportunity to advance the company's participation in a high-technology and growing sector of the aircraft business. Part of the unfortunate outcome is attributable to causes beyond the reasonable control of the company, but essentially management must bear responsibility for the initial lack of control over the design and manufacture of the product and an initial overestimation in the technical and operating capabilities of the company.

   The company also promised more to the market than it delivered at the outset, and had as a result to make very costly modifications in the product to reach the desired results. The company was also late in performing on promised deliveries, in part because of problems with the original supplier of engines, but also because it established too ambitious a task for itself from its depleted operating base in 1976.

   The Company had the misfortune of entering the market in the slowest economic period. Since the great depression, the recent world-wide recession has been the most severe slowdown in post-war history—and that eliminates new buyers and causes former buyers to drop out if they can. This is not uniquely Canadair's experience—although its situation was clearly complicated by the fact that the aircraft was not at that time everything the company had promised it would be.
2. The company entered contracts which do not reveal the calibre of business shrewdness which we as shareholders should expect. This as well must be corrected and we are taking steps to do so.
3. We find many strengths in the operations of Canadair, including some highly dedicated people. But we have also identified weaknesses which are undergoing fuller assessment and which are leading to corrective measures. We have found poor financial and cost controls in the company and have launched corrective action.
4. We believe that management's assessment of the Challenger market was excessively optimistic. Furthermore as problems developed with the weight and range of the aircraft, management failed to adjust its market prospects.
5. Canadair has now reported a 1982 loss of $1.4 billion. We believe that Canadair's balance sheet at December 31, 1982, which reflects that loss, fairly presents the position of the company at that date.

I would also draw to your attention that most of the expenditures on the Challenger to the end of 1982 were funded by borrowing. From the date of government's purchase of Canadair in 1976, until December of 1982, there was no cash investment in the company on behalf of the Canadian people. Parliament authorized loan guarantees for borrowed funds on the prospects put forward for the program by management.

Mr. Chairman, in considering this catalogue of management misjudgments we have to consider as well the role played by the Board of Directors. In our view, management frequently failed to communicate to the Board the information required to permit a proper assessment of the company's problems and management's proposals. At the same time, the Board, through its powers to question, to challenge, to deny approval, and if in the last analysis it proves necessary, to change management, could have prevented or corrected some of the problems I have described. The Board membership has certainly not lacked men of distinction in business, finance and the professions, and they have been faithful and industrious in their attendance at board meetings. But there appears to be a special problem with commercially-oriented government-owned corporation boards. This problem is the difficulty directors have in clearly understanding the objectives of the shareholder of the corporation. Inevitably the tendency is to rely on leadership from the one or more government officials who sit on the board. If these individuals appear satisfied, private sector members of the board are likely to assume that management is acting in accordance with government wishes. The fact is, however, that government officials are not engaged, on a daily basis, in business or commercial activities, have many competing demands of public policy on their minds and have moved frequently in their government careers so that little continuity has been achieved. The Government, in turn, believes that the private sector directors are ensuring commercial standards in project management, and the government officials are not inclined to substitute their judgments. Thus government-corporation boards sometimes seem to fail to provide the checks and balances which a board should provide. This is indeed one of the most important advantages which CDIC expects to be able to offer in the administration of Government Corporations. CDIC will represent on the boards of the corporations entrusted to its care clear, continuing and business-oriented representation of the shareholder's interest. It will permit government ministers and officials to focus their attention on the broader policy and financial questions while the board and management of CDIC work actively to translate those objectives into commercial measures. CDIC will regularly report back to Government and Parliament on its plans and budgets and on its progress. This thought will no doubt be fully explored in another place and occasion, but is worth at least a footnote here in considering the role of the Canadair Board in matters we are discussing. It is our purpose to make of such boards a more effective check and assist in businesslike implementation of these government investments in commercial ventures.

The role of Government should also be mentioned. Government made a policy decision to back this program for industrial reasons. Based on the proposals outlined to it, the project was highly attractive and the Government relied on the management and board for its implementation. But after Canadair repeatedly exceeded its cash requirement projections a government task force was set up in 1981 to review Canadair's cash needs to develop agreed-upon plans and performance for the future.

The task force recommended a Government-guaranteed loan ceiling of $1.35 billion which it was felt at the time would represent Canadair's peak cash needs. However, it soon became apparent, as the recession took its toll on sales and backlog, that management was not bringing the Company under better control and that the amount of the loan guarantee would be insufficient. It also became clear that the high interest rates then prevailing were cripping Canadair. A second Government review was organized in 1982 to assess the Canadair situation. This led to the $200 million equity infusion approved by Parliament last December.

The two task forces did more than simply assess cash needs. Together they accumulated a great deal of information on Canadair, all of which pointed to an urgent need for more intense supervision of the Government's investment in Canadair. Something had to be done.

Let me stress that what I am reporting today is simply the culmination of steps initiated some time ago. In early 1982, the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Herb Gray, agreed with Canadair on specific performance targets. These were not met. Management showed no signs of coming to grips with its problems. By the fall of 1982, and after a careful and accurate appraisal by the officials of the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Finance, the then ITC Minister, Mr. Ed Lumley, informed Canadair that many of its future decisions would require government approval. The Government, which had established CDIC as a commercial holding company, assigned it the task on November 23, 1982 to manage the investment and perform these duties on an ongoing basis, with full-time attention to these issues, and from a traditional business-community basis. It is the next step of this process which I and CDIC have placed before Parliamentarians today.

Canadair's $1.05 billion write-down and modifications to Canadair's accounting method have provided a clear picture of where the company now stands and the dimensions of its financial problems. But it would seem clear that Canadair is not commercially viable with the existing level of debt. A financial restructuring must take place. I wish to announce today that CDIC intends to restructure the debt and equity of CDIC's aircraft manufacturing subsidiaries. The restructuring will take place promptly following the passing of CDIC legislation now before Parliament.

In recognition of the commitment of the Government of Canada to the current programs of Canadair Ltd. and the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd., CDIC will assume the funded debt of these companies. This debt is now fully guaranteed by the Government of Canada.

This restructuring is consistent with the enabling CDIC legislation which provides CDIC with up to $3 billion in borrowing authority and $1 billion in equity.

What CDIC is currently engaged in determining is how the Challenger program can be made commercially viable when assessed on an incremental cash basis, disregarding expenditures made to date and interest payments that would be required on the debts incurred to finance these expenditures.

An extensive review of the Challenger's marketing prospects is being undertaken at CDIC's request. But profitability will depend not only on the number of planes that can be sold. The rate of production, the flow of progress payments and the prices charged for the aircraft are just three of the additional factors that have to be considered. Operating efficiency will also be essential to program profitability and expert advice has also been sought on Canadair's operating and production facilities.

To date, CDIC reports it has found no reason to conclude that the Challenger program does not justify being continued in commercial terms. The product, especially the new Challenger 601, is good. Substantially all of the development costs have been incurred. New expenditures will relate largely to production and marketing and therefore should be more than covered by future aircraft sales.

CDIC's analytical work has been carried on for some months and CDIC expects to be able to report further to Parliament on its analysis and proposed strategy before the end of the year. The longer-term strategy to maximize the value which can be realized from the Challenger program and from Canadair's engineering and other skills and production capacity generally is the object of their work. But Canadair clearly needs additional funds before that analysis is completed. The debt ceiling of $1.35 billion will be exhausted in the next few weeks. Canadair cannot generate sufficient net cash flow from operations to meet its existing debt service costs. The company is currently paying monthly interest charges of about $12.5 million.

The money being sought, the $240 million, will be contributed as equity since Canadair is incapable of servicing new debt. Moreover, the company's debt equity ratio for some years has been far out of line with the pattern of the North American industry generally. In spite of the substantial costs of the Challenger program—today in excess of $2 billion—the company had relied exclusively on debt financing from the time of Government acquisition in early 1976 until late last year, when $200 million of equity was invested in the company. No company in the industry has been made to carry out a major development program on borrowed money exclusively—and most significant new aircraft developments have actually been funded in whole or in part by governments throughout the world, either through defence contracts or more directly.

In calculating the funds needed to carry Canadair into the next year, CDIC, its financial advisers, and Canadair have done their best to be as precise as possible. But cash flow projections should be recognized for what they are—analyses and forecasts of what is expected to happen, not descriptions of what will happen.

Although a great deal of assessment effort is brought to bear in the exercise, cash flow projections in the final analysis are more of an art than a science. Among the variables which have been carefully analysed and which can affect Canadair's future cash flow needs are: The rate of aircraft production, the flow of progress payments from customers awaiting aircraft delivery, the possibility of new orders and existing order cancellations, the level of interest rates, the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar, the ability to maintain or increase prices in the marketplace and the outcome of discussions with suppliers as a result of reduced rates of production.

The Government relieves $240 million represents, after careful analysis, a reasonable estimate of Canadair's financial needs for the balance of this year. Canadair has reduced its overhead costs and further reductions will be made. The company has reduced the Challenger-601 production level and no new CL-600s are being produced other than those which were in the final stage of completion when CDIC assumed responsibility for Canadair late last November. Current levels of production will be reassessed against orders on an ongoing basis.

The estimate of additional cash needs reflects anticipated revenues from the delivery of Challengers under existing contracts.

As I stated earlier, there are sound commercial reasons to provide the additional $240 million being requested today, while further reviews are completed. Canadair has good products and it would not make sense to halt things that can be profitable on an incremental basis. Moreover, the bulk of development expenditures for the Challenger have already been made. These are sunk costs and even if Canadair disappeared today, the $1.35 billion of guaranteed loans would still be there, and they and their interest costs would have to be paid. Eliminating Canadair does not get rid of its existing debts.

It should also be noted that there would be termination costs well in excess of the $240 million, if the Challenger program were ended now. Not only would there be substantial severance payments to many of the company's employees, but Canadair would remain committed to substantial additional payments to suppliers even if a decision were made to terminate the Challenger program and more than 1,000 overall Canadian suppliers to Canadair would be affected.

Termination would ensure that the expenditures made to date would not bear fruit and Canada would close an important centre of technology which, properly utilized and managed, should be able to provide greater opportunities for profitable industrial activity in the future.

CDIC would have preferred to appear after its review of Canadair and strategic policy had been completed. But time does not permit. The commercial decisions that CDIC has to make are major decisions and should be made on the basis of information that is as complete as can be obtained. CDIC does not have all that information yet. Its plans to implement long-term corrective action must be carefully considered rather than be quickly formulated and implemented.

You might well ask why it has taken so long. I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that any troubled business situation takes time to assess and correct—whether in the public or private sectors. It would be irresponsible to act without information and careful analysis. But we were all satisfied at Ministerial and official levels of Government that we needed to equip ourselves with further capacity to carry out this ongoing and commercially-focussed exercise of reorganizing Canadair, monitoring the implementation plan and representing our shareholder interest on an active basis. It is for that reason that we acted quickly to utilize CDIC. We have, indeed, been criticised for launching this corporate vehicle prior to parliamentary approval of its structure. We felt the problem needed immediate attention. We believe that the Government has the duty to act promptly and decisively to exercise its shareholder's role when problems require such initiatives.

Mr. Chairman, my worry today is that the level of controversy over Canadair may do serious damage to the product. If the debate over past business judgments leaves a cloud over the product as well, then the company's prospects could be seriously threatened. We are anxious to aggressively seek out new sales. A good many jobs and export dollars are at stake. But if the product itself is caught up in the debate over past business judgments, then Canadair could lose orders and the company could lose its chance for a comeback.

In summing up, Canadair if properly directed should be able to be successful in this sector. We cannot withdraw from these high technology and high value sectors if we expect to remain an industrially-advanced and high income country. We must organize our holdings and projects to do a better job of achieving the cooperative efforts of both public and private sector risk taking in a disciplined commercial environment.

We have much left to do with respect to Canadair and the aerospace sector generally. These steps will have financial consequences. We will be back with our further analysis and plans for Canadair and we will report regularly on our performance to permit accountability to be achieved. We will be pursuing these responsibilities and our opportunities with vigour.

I believe Canadair's financial report made public today provides very full disclosure and explanations of the status of this company. We make the commitment that Canadair will continue to follow this practice in the future. We believe that such disclosure by corporate managers will make them better performers and that such accountability will permit you to develop the confidence you need to have in CDIC to allow it the latitude to represent your interests with realistic commercial flexibility as to the industrial decisions and transactions. The proper balance of operating freedom to deal in the business world with government and parliamentary control over decisions can be more readily achieved if good disclosure practices permit you to hold us accountable promptly for our actions and results.

Mr. Chairman, Canadair is a diversified company with a long history and important strengths. What it needs is a strategy to make money. That's part of CDIC's role.

In conclusion, let me reiterate what I believe to be a critical point. We do have an attractive product. It is not an uncertain product. It is a real, flying machine. The Challenger 601 was certified on schedule and met its specifications. It is being delivered on schedule, a reflection of the operating improvements that have already been made. It has a General Electric engine that has a long and reputable record of use in the military. The plane clearly beats the competition on noise level and fuel efficiency. It is a technological achievement for Canada.

Canadair should be a part of the future business jet market, a market through which Canadair can make an important contribution to our manufacturing exports.

But, considerable effort will be needed.

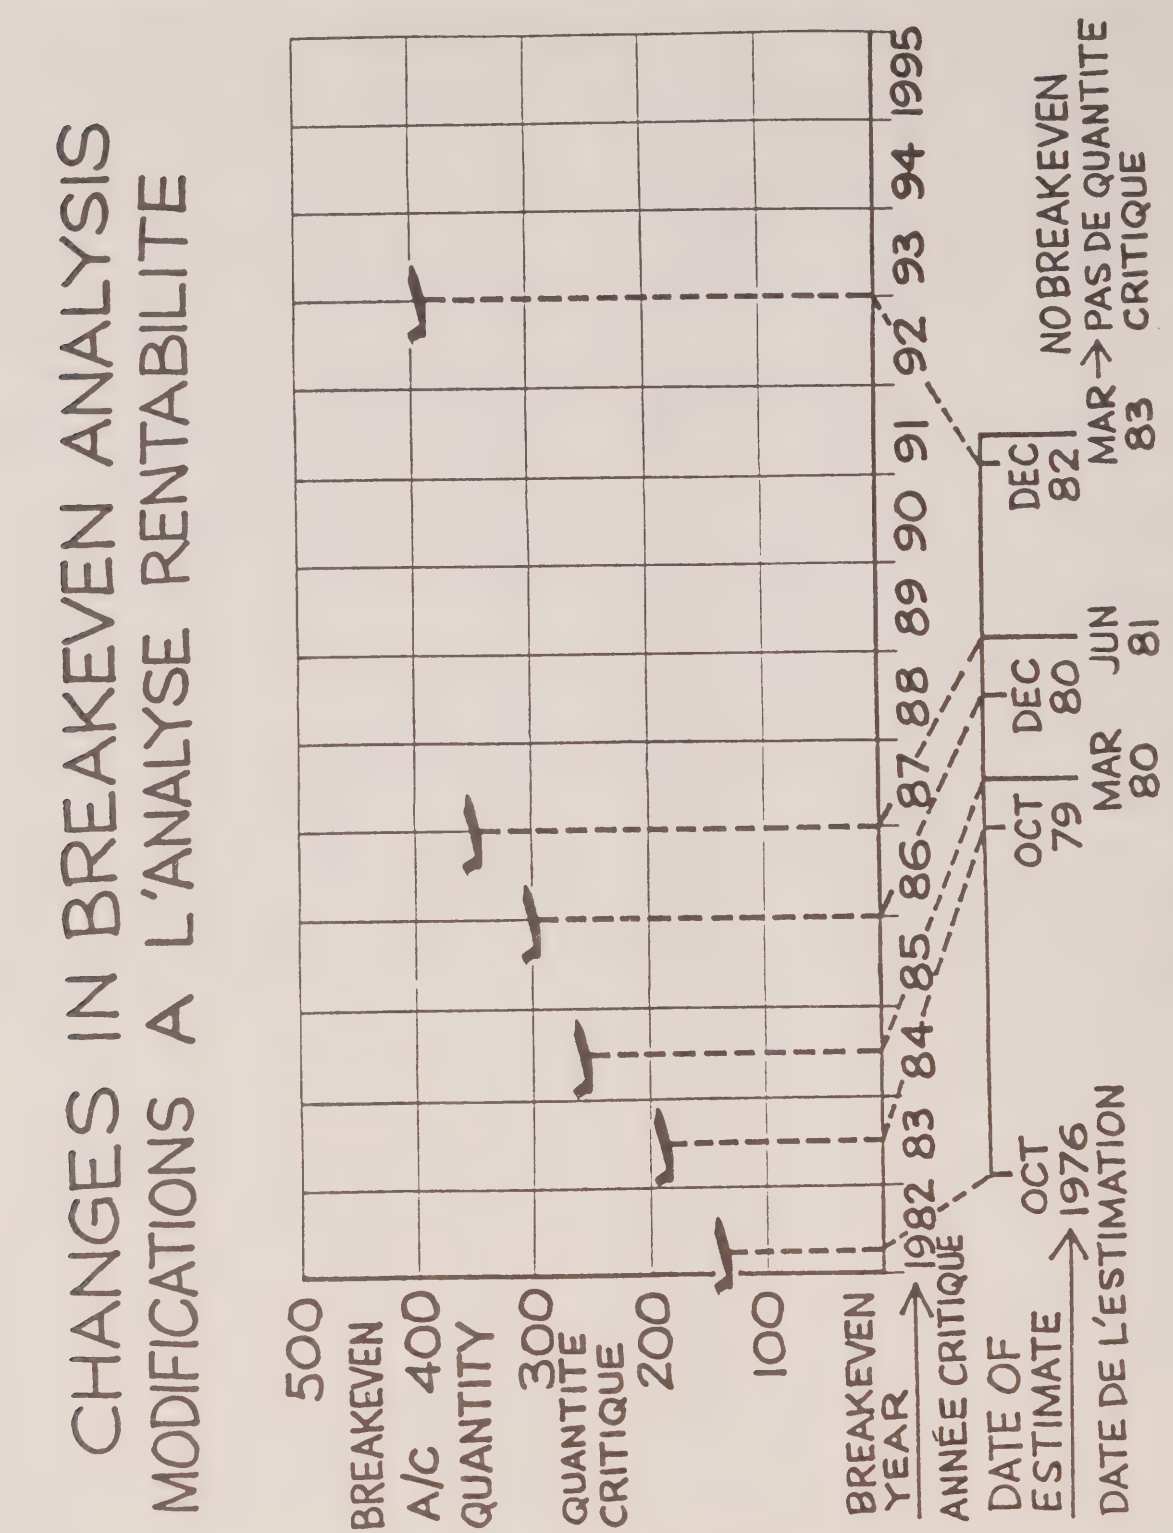
This will take time and money. But the Government believes the effort is worth making. Canadair does have business problems. But there are business solutions to these problems and, with Parliament's support, we will proceed to implement them.

We would be happy to answer your questions.

TABLE 1

CHALLENGER SALES AND BREAKEVEN FORECASTS

	Oct./76	Oct./79	March/80	Dec./80	June/81	Dec./82
Estimated Sales
CL-600	250	250	202	220	201	144
CL-601	—	—	71	58	126	275
CL-610	—	—	150	148	179	—
Total Challengers	250	250	423	426	506	419
Target Date for Production	1Q/84	2Q/84	4Q/86	4Q/87	4Q/88	4Q/93
Breakeven Quantity	136	185	255	298	349	389
Achievement of Breakeven	1Q/82	2Q/83	2Q/84	4Q/85	4Q/86	4Q/92



CHANGES IN BREAKEVEN ANALYSIS
MODIFICATIONS A L'ANALYSE RENTABILITE 500
400
300
200
100
BREAKEVEN A/C QUANTITY
QUANTITE CRITIQUE
BREAKEVEN YEAR
ANNÉE CRITIQUE
1982 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 1995
DATE OF ESTIMATE
DATE DE L'ESTIMATION
OCT 1976
OCT 79
MAR 80
DEC 80
JUN 81
DEC 82
MAR 83
NO BREAKEVEN
MAR → PAS DE QUANTITE CRITIQUE

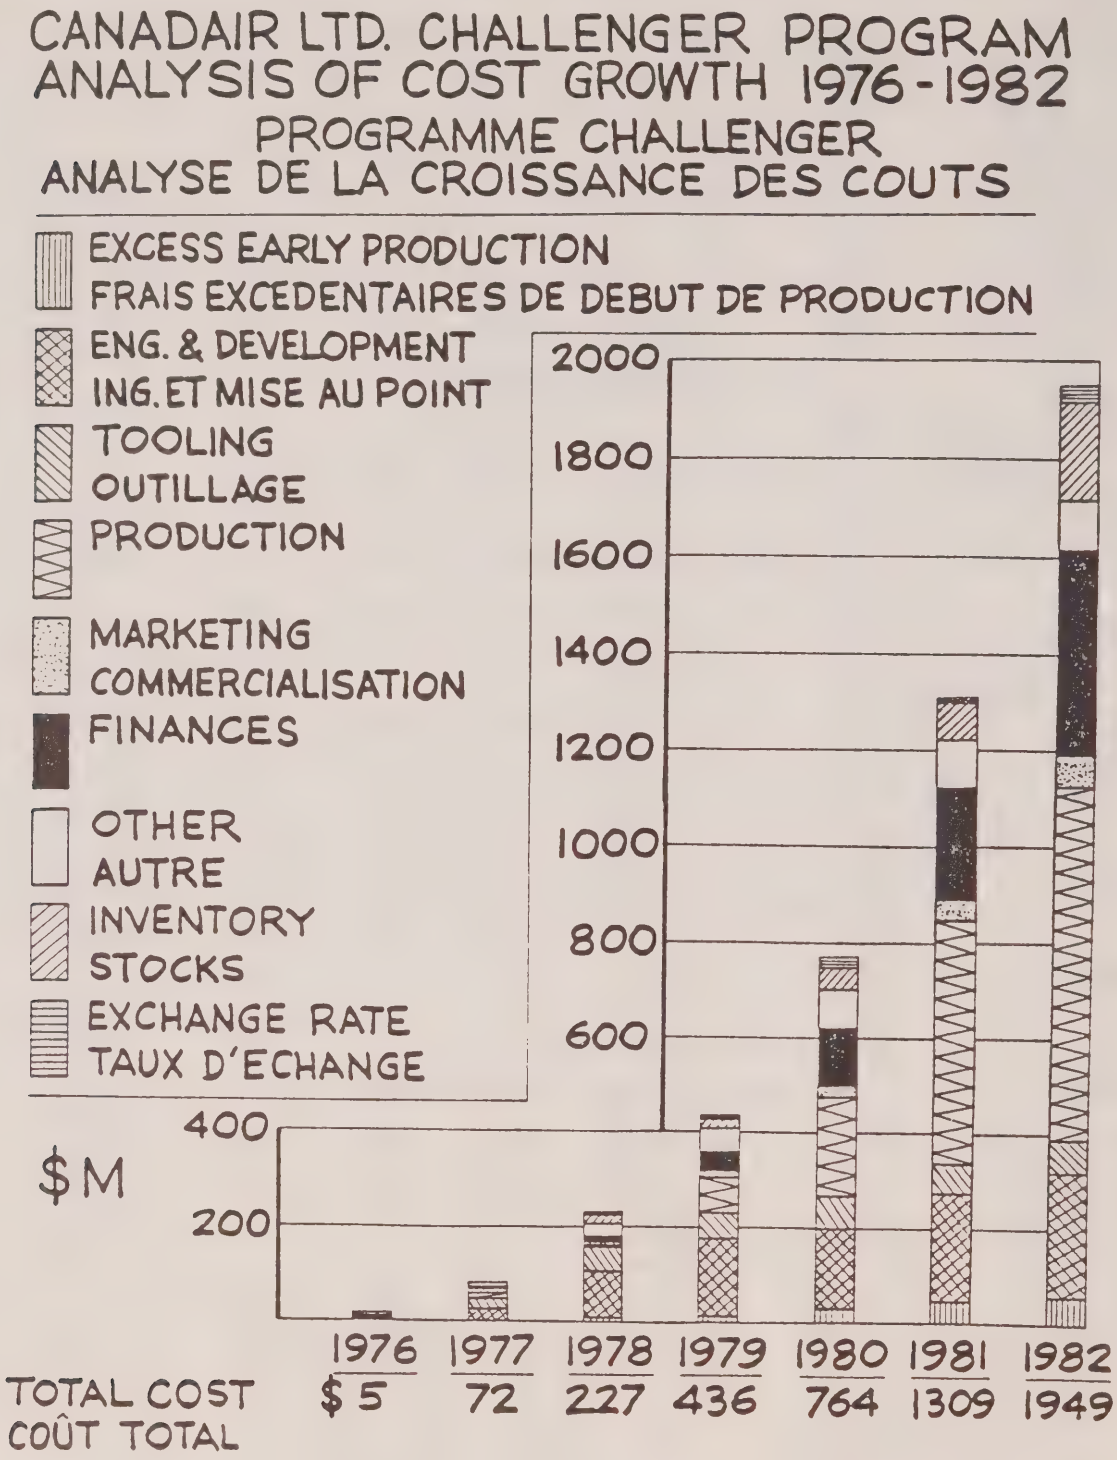
TABLE 2

CHALLENGER PROGRAM

ANALYSIS OF COST GROWTH
1976-1982 ($ Thousands)

	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982
Excess Early Production	—	—	5,000	10,000	25,000	50,000	61,203
Engineering & Development	2,560	34,562	102,083	157,195	183,891	224,783	261,404
Tooling	418	15,674	45,219	51,872	55,241	63,071	66,337
Production	—	3,728	11,408	91,100	222,411	507,660	737,786
Other Costs*	846	8,800	24,813	40,027	71,634	84,955	90,454
Marketing	754	4,292	8,914	11,093	24,809	41,133	61,357
Finance	112	2,843	15,656	46,159	116,345	249,531	440,261
Sub-total	4,690	69,899	213,093	407,446	699,331	1,221,133	1,718,802
Inventory	137	1,987	9,435	25,186	51,555	77,501	107,788
Finished Goods—Aircraft	—	—	—	—	—	—	70,542
Spares	—	—	—	—	4,766	3,415	24,028
Sub-total	4,827	71,886	222,528	432,632	755,652	1,302,049	1,921,160
Foreign Exchange—L.T.D.	—	—	4,698	4,055	8,764	7,235	27,981
	4,827	71,886	227,226	436,687	764,416	1,309,284	1,949,141

* Includes aircraft leasing, insurance, royalties, manuals and publications etc.



CANADAIR LTD. CHALLENGER PROGRAM
ANALYSIS OF COST GROWTH 1976-1982
PROGRAMME CHALLENGER
ANALYSE DE LA CROISSANCE DES COUTS
EXCESS EARLY PRODUCTION
FRAIS EXCEDENTAIRES DE DEBUT DE PRODUCTION
ENG. & DEVELOPMENT
ING. ET MISE AU POINT
TOOLING
OUTILLAGE
PRODUCTION MARKETING
COMMERCIALISATION FINANCES OTHER AUTRE INVENTORY STOCKS
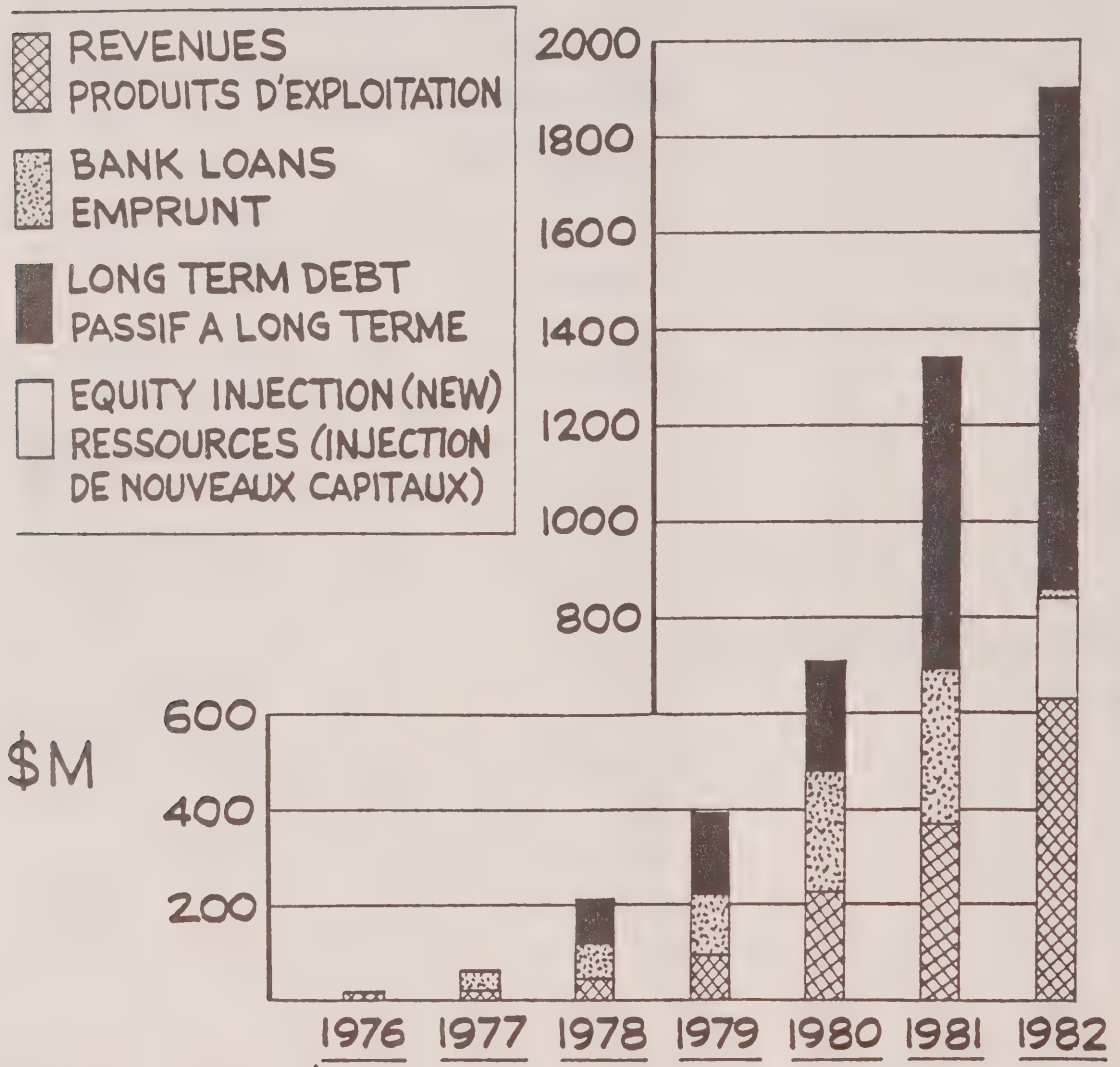
EXCHANGE RATE
TAUX D'ECHANGE
2000
1800
1600
1400
1200
1000
800
600
400
200
$M
1976 1977 1978 1979 1980 1981 1982
TOTAL COST $ 5 72 227 436 764 1309 1949
COÛT TOTAL

TABLE 3



CHALLENGER PROGRAM

SOURCE OF FUNDS
1976-1983 ($ Thousands)

	31 December
	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982*
Sales Proceeds and Advances from Customers	7,843	24,326	41,796	96,798	223,881	369,153	634,994
Equity Injection	—	—	—	—	—	—	200,000
Bank Loans	—	40,385	78,490	127,305	257,009	322,087	10,575
Long Term Debt	—	150	83,919	169,302	221,646	651,372	1,061,667
Other	(3,016)	7,025	23,021	43,282	51,880	(33,328)	41,905
	4,827	71,886	227,226	436,687	764,416	1,309,284	1,949,141

* Prior to adjustments for Challenger unusual items at 31 December 1982.
Includes funds provided from changes in other balance sheet items.

CANADAIR LTD. CHALLENGER PROGRAM
ANALYSIS OF SOURCE OF FUNDS 1976-1982
PROGRAMME CHALLENGER
ANALYSE DE LA PROVENANCE DES FONDS

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 14, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HON. MAURICE LAMONTAGNE, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my colleagues and I were shocked and saddened to learn of the passing of Senator Maurice Lamontagne yesterday. We have lost an outstanding member of the Senate, the Liberal Party has lost an important thinker, and Canada has lost a great Canadian.

Senator Lamontagne made some remarkable contributions to both the academic world and public life in Canada. He served as Professor of Economics and Assistant Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ottawa, and later helped to found the Faculty of Social Sciences at Laval University in Quebec City.

As an economist, Maurice Lamontagne acted as economic adviser to two prime ministers, Mr. Louis St. Laurent and Mr. Lester Pearson. He was later elected Member of Parliament for Outremont, and served as Secretary of State and President of the Privy Council.

The Prime Minister yesterday described Senator Lamontagne as the "father of co-operative federalism." There could be no more apt description of a man who was credited with devising plans for federal-provincial tax sharing, equalization payments to the less fortunate provinces and federal grants to the universities. These are all policies that Canadians take for granted today, and that have become part and parcel of our national fabric.

He was also very interested in areas other than economics, was responsible for culture being included in the portfolio of the Secretary of State and for the establishment of the Canada Council.

Maurice Lamontagne was always striving to bring Canadians together through contributions he made both inside and outside the parliamentary context. Outside Parliament he published many books and articles that offered constructive criticism on the subject of Canadian federalism.

Maurice Lamontagne also made his mark in the Senate. He served as Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy and as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Certain Aspects of the Constitution, a subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, as well as serving on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the Constitution.

We shall greatly miss his contributions to the work of this chamber, which were always innovative and of value not only to adherents of the Liberal Party but also to all Canadians.

On behalf of the Senate, I extend our most sincere and heartfelt condolences to Madame Lamontagne and the Lamontagne family.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the death of our colleague has brought sorrow to all of us. First, I should like to speak about my personal sorrow.

I knew Maurice Lamontagne many years ago when he was a professor at Laval University's Faculty of Social Sciences. The first time I really met him and got to know him was during a labour-management dispute; both of us were on the arbitration board, he as union spokesman, of course, I as management representative. So that this little detail will not be held against me, I must say that I did speak for unions on certain occasions.

So that was when I got to know Maurice Lamontagne, and eventually we developed a very friendly relationship. Although his death was expected, I take it as a very personal loss and it has been a shock to those who have known him.

As the Leader of the Government pointed out, Maurice Lamontagne has had a very outstanding career, first as an economist at the Faculty of Social Sciences of Laval University, which he helped to organize and where he was professor and Director of the Department of Economics. Later he came to Ottawa as Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources. As an economist, he also became advisor to Prime Ministers St. Laurent and Pearson. In the St. Laurent cabinet, he was actually with the Privy Council as an economist, whereas he was more like a personal advisor to Mr. Pearson.

Besides being a well known economist, he was also a constitutional expert. As one of our colleagues said earlier, he chaired the last subcommittee of our Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs which published a report on certain aspects of federalism, mainly as they relate to the Senate. He was also co-chairman of the committee which examined that famous Bill C-60 in 1978, which we all remember.

He had published a few books—particularly Le fédéralisme canadien—at a time when his opinions on that issue were in direct conflict with those of Maurice Duplessis who was then Quebec premier. In any event, I think that the two sides or two positions on that question have been reconciled since then.

He was also a distinguished parliamentarian. He was elected to the House of Commons in 1963, after two defeats, including that of 1962 when we both suffered the same fate. He was appointed President of the Privy Council and then Secretary of State, and I think it was in that capacity that he was responsible for the construction of the National Arts Centre, of which the City of Ottawa and all Canadians are so proud.

Of course, I do not remember how he behaved as a member of the House of Commons, but I would say that he avoided politically motivated debates. He preferred to take an interest in major issues and viewed his position here as an exceptional opportunity to use his great talents to promote various causes, among which his role on the Committee on Science Policy has already been singled out, and rightly so. He devoted all his time, all his energy and all his talent to that committee for many years. It published a report which was very well received in all scientific circles. The government considered this report favourably on many occasions and at other times with some reticence. It still remains that the report of the Committee on Science Policy chaired by Senator Lamontagne stands as a monument to our late colleague. As noted by the Leader of the Government, Senator Lamontagne also took an interest in various problems here in the Senate, for instance during debates on the economy, and I must say that he sometimes criticized government policy quite strongly. Senator Lamontagne was a charming man, a well-read man, an obliging man who actually succeeded in making a truly remarkable contribution to public life in Canada.

It is for those reasons that we on this side of the house share the sorrow of all parliamentarians and the Canadian people; we also share in the sorrow and the loss of his wife Jeannette, known informally as Jeannot, and his three children, and extend to them our deepest sympathy.

● (1410)

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I hope you will forgive me for adding just a note about my friend Maurice. I have little to add to what was said by the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition in the context in which they so eloquently spoke, but because Maurice has been a particularly close friend in recent years, I add a few words. I first met him when, as Senator Flynn has said, he was a principal adviser to Mr. Pearson. At that stage I was active in the Young Liberals and met him in that role. Although I respected and admired him, I did not know him well then, but later he had a close and helpful connection with important parts of my life.

He was the author of the terms of reference of the Laurendeau-Dunton B & B commission, on which I was lucky enough to serve, and I came to know him well during that period. When I was appointed to the Senate we renewed our friendship and became close professional and personal friends, often having dinner together and meeting in my office to discuss subjects of mutual interest, including those matters Maurice Lamontagne was most interested in, as underlined by Senator Flynn—specifically, national unity, federal-provincial relations and constitutional issues.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Maurice Lamontagne was a true intellectual, but one with a heart and a passion that combined to make it such a pleasure to be in his company.

Senator Flynn, in particular, can verify that for most of his life Maurice Lamontagne was actively involved in important Canadian events. National unity and federal-provincial relations and relationships between linguistic communities, these were the events with which he was closely associated. A topic would arise in the course of a conversation about some such historic event and Maurice would always have some pointed vignette, some memory that would give a very human and often touching dimension to the event that would also illuminate its historic importance.

I will certainly miss him very much. He was a person of such stature that the usual superlatives fall short. "An outstanding person," "a great Canadian" are expressions sometimes used with less discipline than affection so that, when one wishes to apply them to someone who truly merits them, they have lost their force through loose use.

● (1415)

I am sure all of us are aware that Senator Lamontagne suffered greatly in his last few months. I should like to express my sympathy, and I am sure that of other senators, too, to Jeannot and their three children. As you may know, his daughter Hélène was very close to him and was also of great comfort to him, particularly towards the end.

In expressing my condolences to Jeannot, to Hélène and to his two sons, may I say that I will miss Maurice a great deal, and I know I am only one of legions of friends and admirers who feel the same way. We shall mourn his death all too briefly, but Canadian history will long celebrate his life.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I must confess that it is with considerable emotion that I join in the tribute being paid to the memory of Senator Lamontagne.

I feel very deeply the loss not only of a great Canadian and a friend, but also of a fellow university student. We met for the first time in 1939 while attending the "École des sciences sociales" which at the time did not rank among the "facultés". As a matter of fact, it was Maurice's work which would later contribute to a very large extent to the university school obtaining the status of a university department.

We met, as I said, in 1939 on the same school benches, together with Jean Marchand and several others, and Father Lévesque was our teacher. We were there in the early years of the school, which was established in 1938 since we arrived there in 1939. Maurice was among Father Lévesque's most brilliant students, and therefore he was in the very first group which Father Lévesque sent abroad to study. He went to Harvard to study economics. Jean-Charles Falardeau was sent to Chicago to study sociology and others went elsewhere. This constituted a turning point in the approach to teaching social sciences in those days at Laval University, which were not sciences just yet but something more akin to a sort of social or economic philosophy. As far as economics is concerned, when Maurice Lamontagne came back, he brought back with him an economic science, because I believe it was from a Mr. Shumpetter, one of his teachers, that he had learned about the new Keynesian theory which had just been developed in the context of the economic recession. He brought back that science to the Laval University School of social sciences and he taught it to a whole generation of students. From the remarks made by his students in those days—I was also a teacher, but in a different school, the "École de pédagogie"—and news spread freely among the various schools confirming that he was their very best teacher.

• (1420)

I think that was one of Senator Lamontagne's basic assets. He was a man of thought who could consider problems from a great many points of view and who had an extraordinary gift for communicating his knowledge as well as his enthusiasm for the study and analysis of problems.

To recall an event both close and intimate, I was there at the time he wrote "Le fédéralisme canadien", which he published I think in 1954. At that time, we lived across from each other on the same street. During the summer of 1953 and as early as the spring of that year, he had already decided to join the Department of Northern Affairs at the urging of Mr. Lesage; before leaving, he really wanted to write the book he had been planning for some time on Canadian federalism. I was also working on a book during those same months. So, that summer, we met practically every day, with our respective families and gave each other a report on our day's work. We went through some dry days: "I was unable to write a single page today; what about you?" "It went a little better for me; I wrote five." We did this throughout the summer. I must say that he finished his book before I did.

Recalling this closely shared experience in writing books flowing from our respective reflections reminds me that I then fully realized to what degree Maurice Lamontagne possessed the qualities of rigour and analysis that are also to be found in many other of his works. In my opinion, this great continuity is reflected throughout the career of Maurice Lamontagne, a continuity in the power and precision of analysis, along with the power to inspire the people around him by his approach to problems. Moreover, his familiars were not just anybody because he influenced important people of his time during his years in Ottawa. First, there was Mr. St. Laurent, and if I remember correctly, it was Maurice Lamontagne who suggested to him a formula for grants to universities which later led to a solution. The grants paid to universities across Canada were being refused by Quebec, with the result that Quebec universities could have lost substantial amounts each year. I believe that it was Maurice Lamontagne who suggested to Mr. St. Laurent that in order to prevent those amounts from being denied to the people of Quebec, they be set aside until the Quebec government changed its position. That position underwent a change under Mr. Sauvé, which resulted in the Sauvé-Fleming formula in 1959-1960. However, if the funds had not been put aside, universities in Quebec would have incurred a significant loss. All this serves to underline that Maurice Lamontagne had the knack of finding a new approach to problems, giving rise to position suited to circumstances. I will stop here, but I could add a great many recollections, for example about the decisive role he played when in 1965 certain personalities who later had to be reckoned with entered federal politics. I am thinking of Jean Marchand, of Gérard Pelletier and of a man called Pierre Elliott Trudeau. At that time, Senator Lamontagne had some input in the negotiations between Mr. Pearson and these men. On many occasions, he was right at the core of things, and he always showed a great capacity for analysis and for going to the heart of a matter, a quality he kept until the end, in my view. The 1980 report of the Senate Committee on certain aspects of the Constitution is further evidence of this.

Personally, I mourn a friend, a man with whom I had the opportunity to work very closely at one time, as I have recalled, and less closely at other times. For all Canadians, it is the loss of a man who contributed in a very decisive way to a renewal of what I would call the fabric of Canadian federalism on fundamental points.

To Jeannot, to their children, I extend my deepest sympathy, and I hope I will have the opportunity in the next few hours to express my sympathy to them personally.

• (1425)

Hon. Yvette B. Rousseau: Honourable senators, I must say that other senators have been very eloquent in their tribute to the qualities and the contribution made by the late Senator Lamontagne. I agree wholeheartedly with what was said. Further remarks or comments might even be unnecessary. However, as a Canadian and a Quebecer who worked together with Senator Lamontagne on many occasions, I feel I have an obligation to offer my personal condolences and those of my family to Senator Lamontagne's wife and children and also to add a few comments.

As you know, in the sixties, Senator Lamontagne was a university professor and a professional economist, and was actively involved in public affairs at the time. Not so long ago, this was unusual in Quebec where few economists pursued a career in the public sector. However, through his actions and his publications, Senator Lamontagne inspired two of my sons to opt for political economics, not only as a course of study but as a profession, and I am sure that he has influenced many young people in Quebec.

I have many other reasons for paying tribute to Senator Lamontagne. I was profoundly influenced by his report on Canada's science policy. I think he was ahead of his time with his understanding of the potential and dangers of scientific and technological progress for this country. He fully understood Toffler and his "Third Wave" theory.

At that time, in the early seventies, I was active in feminist groups and organizations as a member of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and I had many opportunities for listening and speaking to women throughout the country. One of women's major concerns, and it has remained so in this decade, is technological change, which has emphasized the need for implementing appropriate policies and programs. I think Senator Lamontagne understood this, and his work on the subject has not lost anything of its immediacy.

I would like to mention that during the sittings of the Committee on the Constitution, I had the honour of sitting with the Senator. I respected his views and was pleased to be able to share his feelings as a Quebec politician about the constitutional question. He had a remarkable vision of this country and Quebec, especially in the areas of federal-provincial relations and public finance, including the equalization program, which he helped to develop halfway through the sixties.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I think that many of us will agree that Senator Lamontagne's profound interest in economic and scientific questions during his involvement in public life will have had a considerable impact. I would also like to extend again my sincere condolences to Mrs. Jeannette Lamontagne and her three children.

● (1430)

[English]

CANAGREX BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret that we cannot give leave to proceed today. However, we do not mind if the bill is placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

We need an opportunity to examine the situation since this bill was passed only last night by the House of Commons after having been on the order paper of that house for months. I cannot understand why the government is suddenly asking for second reading later this day.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I agree with that. I was hoping that, with Senator Flynn's consent, we could begin the debate today. However, I am satisfied if we can proceed with it tomorrow, and do not have to give the usual 48 hours' notice. It would appear—and the house leader will have more to say on this—that we may not sit on Thursday afternoon, which means this matter would extend into next week. However, what the Leader of the Opposition has suggested is satisfactory.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, having waited for months, I am sure this bill need not be passed before we adjourn.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I was not trying to give any indication on that question. I was trying to agree with Senator Flynn that, with his consent, we proceed tomorrow rather than waiting 48 hours; that is a reasonable proposal.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

INTERIM REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984. I ask that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

I might say that, while procedure requires the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to make the report, the examination of the estimates was made by the Subcommittee on Estimates under the chairmanship of Senator Doody.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix, p. 5794.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to inform you that I have now received a message from the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Neiman, in which she states that a meeting of that Committee is scheduled for 4 p.m. tomorrow on Bill S-33. She asks for leave to meet tomorrow. I have not prepared the motion to that effect, but I shall introduce it tomorrow. I am giving notice of this at Senator Neiman's request. I am also informed that a meeting was scheduled for 11.15 a.m. Thursday, but that has been cancelled. I understand that meeting probably will be rescheduled for 2.30 or 3 p.m. on Thursday. I would like to add that I have already discussed with the Leader of the Opposition the possibility of arranging a program for this week; it is agreed we shall meet tomorrow afternoon. Further, since Senator Lamontagne's funeral will be held at 11 a.m. on Thursday in the Cathedral on Sussex Drive, I would move that the Senate do not sit on Thursday afternoon nor on Friday. Of course, if any committee chairman intends to meet on Thursday, he may always do so.

For next week, since a reception has already been scheduled for the Prince and the Princess on Monday at 3.45 p.m., I have discussed the matter with the Leader of the Opposition so that we could meet on Monday evening. We may be receiving bills from the other place. The Leader of the Opposition suggested a specific term earlier, but I have forgotten it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I believe the term you are looking for is "non-contentious."

Senator Frith: Now, we will be receiving from the House of Commons two, and maybe three bills this coming Friday. Since all senators will probably be here on Monday, we will sit Monday evening at 8 o'clock. I also suggest that the Senate should sit for the remainder of June at 2 o'clock instead of 8 o'clock on each of its sitting days. For instance, next week, we would be sitting Monday evening at 8 o'clock, Tuesday at 2 o'clock, Wednesday at 2 o'clock. On that day, Royal Assent could be given to some bills. I also point out that it is quite possible that we will not be sitting on Thursday and Friday of next week. At any rate, we will surely not be sitting on the 24th, because it is St. John the Baptist Day. It is a kind of rough timetable which I am suggesting and I intend to discuss it with Senator Flynn and Senator Roblin. The reason I have been raising these points was to give the senators an idea of what is being considered by the leaders in the Senate.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I do not wish to lodge any complaint nor raise any objection, because I do not have any in connection with the two previous motions to have the two committees sit during the sitting of the Senate this afternoon. It had been agreed, since I have been appointed co-ordinator of committees that when the Senate is sitting, it was quite difficult to have two committees sitting at the same time, because it creates pressures and problems for our staff. When they do not get advance notice they cannot hire additional employees and this creates problems for many of our people. However, the motions have been passed. Today, we cannot do anything about it. On the other hand, even if we are under pressure just before the adjournment, I think that we should be very careful before we continue to proceed in such a manner.

Senator Frith: I take notice of Senator Lafond's comments. I entirely agree that the arrangements made this afternoon are an exception to the rule. The reason for it is that we have altered our plans for tomorrow. Those meetings had already been planned with the witnesses. I entirely agree that normally the Senate and two committees cannot sit at the same time.

• (1440)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

MANITOBA—SHOAL LAKE INDIAN BAND—ALLEGED DUMPING OF SEWAGE—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Natham Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On December 21 last I asked the Leader of the Government a series of questions concerning the Shoal Lake Indian band and the alleged dumping of sewage, which contributes to the deterioration in the quality of water for the city of Winnipeg. At that time Senator Olson took those questions as notice. I realize I have not pressed him since then, but I now ask him if, perchance, the problem is as acute as it was before. I do not recall having had a response.

I might add that officials of the City of Winnipeg have not forgotten, if he and I have. First, I would ask whether there are answers available to those questions.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I do not have answers with me today. Also, I do not have an update on the other part of the question that was asked. However, I will give an undertaking to try to have it here tomorrow. If I do not have a complete answer I will at least tell the honourable senator the status of the preparation of the reply.

Senator Nurgitz: I ask the Leader of the Government to look at the various questions at page 5226 of Debates of the Senate, and to make himself aware of the fact that two studies have been commissioned by the City of Winnipeg respecting potential solutions to this sewage problem and the problems it creates for the city's water supply? Is the government aware that the city has now endorsed a proposal to provide for on-site disposal of the sewage, certain construction and other matters, in which I believe some departments of the federal government were to have had some input. I ask that as supplementary to my earlier questions, and ask if he would look into that at the same time.

Senator Olson: Yes, I will give an undertaking to look into that too. However, I am sure Senator Nurgitz would agree with me that, while I undertook a few minutes ago to try to get an update on his previous questions and the reason why answers are not readily available, I could not give that undertaking for tomorrow on the supplementary portion of his question.

Senator Nurgitz: I accept what the Leader of the Government has said, but I would point out that the problem is worse now, and there is greater fear on the part of the city officials, who have written to me, and, I am sure, to other honourable senators, asking that the government be pressed on this matter. That is the purpose of my question. I will provide later today some information I have received, in the hope it will be helpful in getting an answer.

Senator Olson: I think that might be helpful. If the honourable senator does that today, my staff will not have to wait until Debates of the Senate is printed.

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. Apparently, we are going to sit three days next week and possibly four days in the last week of June. Under the rules applicable to the other place, there should be an adjournment on June 30, and because of that I ask the following questions: Will June 30 be the last day of the current session? What are the bills that are considered a "must" before the adjournment?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): In reply to the first question, let me say that I know the leadership in the other place is making a very serious effort to have the business completed in accordance with the rules; that is, to ask for no suspension of the rules or to have the house called back early, but to finish on June 30. When they finish it will, as far as I know, take the form of an adjournment, not prorogation.

As to the "must" bills, excluding the so-called non-controversial bills, I think we will have a clearer picture on Monday when we see what is disposed of this Friday. At the moment the priorities that I know of are the Canagrex Bill, the Borrowing Authority Bill, 1983-84 (No. 2), supply.

Senator Flynn: The Canagrex Bill is now up to us.

Senator Frith: The Canagrex Bill is now up to us.

Senator Flynn: The Borrowing Authority Bill also.

Senator Frith: As is the Borrowing Authority Bill. I think that later today there will be a vote in the other place on the Appropriation Bill, so we will probably get that tomorrow, and that will be a priority. I will know more on Monday about other priorities when we see what non-controversial bills are looked after. Some of them are a "must" in the sense that there are expiry dates to be extended.

• (1450)

Senator Flynn: If I understood the deputy leader correctly, he said that on June 30 it will be an adjournment and not a prorogation. I understand that technically that is what always happens, in case it is necessary to recall Parliament. But there are adjournments that really are, in fact, prorogations; we return just to prorogue, and then start a new session. So I would hope that we shall get a clearer answer than one that merely says it will be an adjournment. I would like to know what the adjournment will mean.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that shows the close connection between the two parts of the Leader of the Opposition's question. I cannot say whether the adjournment will be of the type he referred to, namely, almost a technical adjournment with one day's sitting, then prorogation, and then the commencement of a new session one day later. That, of course, turns on what bills will have been passed by June 30, which leads to a second question, namely: What are the "must" bills? At this stage I cannot say whether or not the adjournment will be of the technical and virtual prorogation kind, or whether it will merely be an adjournment. I will not know anything more about that until next week.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Hope springs eternal.

Senator Flynn: On your side that does happen.

NEWFOUNDLAND

SECONDARY ROADS PROGRAM—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COST SHARING

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Marshall on May 12 concerning the Newfoundland secondary roads program. I feel certain that it is an answer that the honourable senator will be happy to receive. It is rather long, and perhaps honourable senators will agree to its being taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Senator Marshall suggested on May 12, 1983 that the government proceed quickly with the funding and selection of highway improvement projects in Newfoundland.

Perhaps the honourable senator realized that on the very same day the Hon. W. Rompkey and the Premier of Newfoundland were making an announcement to this effect in St. John's.

The federal contribution of $35 million is part of the Special Recovery Projects Program announced in the Budget of April 19. As such, the projects are subject to "fast-tracking" and the honourable senator can be assured that every effort is being made to ensure that the actual work begins as soon as possible.

Some of the specific projects identified in the announcement of May 12 are:

$16 million ($14 million federal contribution) for the Trans-Labrador Highway from Labrador City to Churchill;

$12 million ($9 million federal) for a four-lane arterial connecting the Trans-Canada Highway to the Conception Bay Highway;

$7 million ($5 million federal) to upgrade and pave Route 436 from Route 430 towards L'Anse-au-Meadow; and several others.

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA—HALIFAX—CONTAINER TRAFFIC VOLUME

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Donahoe on May 31, 1983, concerning container traffic at the Port of Halifax. The reply is fairly long, and perhaps it can be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Senator Donahoe expressed concern on May 31, 1983 about container traffic at the Port of Halifax. Specifically, he spoke of container traffic going up the St. Lawrence, and Canadian National's monopoly in terms of rail service at the port.

On the first question, I think the honourable senator should not downplay the attraction of Halifax as a deep-sea port. Granted, the port, like many others, has seen a recent decline in traffic, but its prospects are excellent. In fact, the world's largest containerline, Sea-Land, has just inaugurated a service to Halifax, and there are reports that as many as three other lines are considering calls at the port. In some cases Montreal may be more attractive because of the longer haul by inexpensive water transportation, while in others, Halifax clearly has an advantage by virtue of its proximity to U.S.-Europe shipping lanes.

On the question of CN's monopoly at Halifax, the Minister of Transport can find no evidence that the monopoly is being abused. For example, container rates between Halifax and Montreal (31.6¢/mile—20-foot container) are considerably less than those between Montreal and Toronto 56.1¢/mile—20′)—a more heavily travelled and competitive route. In the past decade, container rates beween Halifax and Montreal have increased 176%, just slightly higher than the Consumer Price Index (162%). By comparison, Montreal-Toronto container rates went up by 244%.

In fact, CN would have no interest in abusing its monopoly to the detriment of Halifax, as it would only hurt its own substantial investments there, such as Halterm, Halifax shipyards and Autoport.

As the government disagrees with the Hon. Senator's premise, it cannot accept his suggestion that CN's monopoly be removed, or that CN be instructed to increase the use of the Port of Halifax.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEWFOUNDLAND—SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—EMPLOYMENT RELATED INITIATIVES AND EXPENDITURES

Question No. 97 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What is the breakdown, by federal district, of locations in the Province of Newfoundland which received monies under the budget of Small Craft Harbours in 1981-82 (estimate $7,600,000.00) and 1982-83 ($10,500,000.00) and what were the particular projects?

Reply by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans:

Monies spent under the budget of Small Craft Harbours for the Province of Newfoundland for the year 1981-82 is $7,974,645.00 and present estimates for 1982-83 is $9,036,100.00. Attached is a list of the individual projects. The 1982-83 figure does not include projects funded under the Employment Related Initiatives of EIC; however, a list of these projects is included.

EMPLOYMENT RELATED INITIATIVES (NEWFOUNDLAND) 1982-83

LOCATION	DESCRIPTION	PROJECT COST $000
Anchor Point	CCDP Wharf Repairs	100.0
Baine Harbour	Wharf Extension	15.0
Bareneed	Wharf Repairs & Extension	50.0
Bide Arm	Hardware for CCDP Wharf	4.0
Blue Beach	Wharf Construction	84.0

Boxey	Slipway Repairs	35.0
Cape St. George	Marginal Wharf (Roses Brook)	41.0
Codroy	English Point Breakwater	130.0
Forrester's Point	Wharf Reconstruction	50.0
Fortune	Wharf Repairs	70.0
Frenchman's Cove	Approach Improvements	25.0
Frenchman's Cove	Wharf Extension	30.0
Garnish	Wharf Repairs	25.0
Grand Bank	West Slipway	25.0
Grand Bank	West Breakwater Repairs	55.0
Grand Beach	Harbour Redredging	7.4
Green Island Brook	Demolition & Clean-up	18.0
Harbour Breton	Slipway Reconstruction	10.0
Harbour Le Cou	CCDP Wharf Repairs	23.0
Herring Neck	Marginal Wharf	100.0
Isle Valen	Wharf Repairs	12.0
La Scie	Wharf Repairs	13.0
Little St. Lawrence	Slipway	4.0
Lumsden South	Breakwater/Model Study/ & Construction	50.0
Merasheen	Wharf Repairs	8.0
Old Perlican	Wharf Extension & Slipway	150.0
Pass Island	Wharf Repairs	13.0
Plate Cove West	Dredging	3.0
Point May	Slipway Repairs (CCDP)	12.0
Port au Choix	Marginal Wharf Development Phase 2	125.0
Port de Grave	Breakwater	15.0
Raleigh	Wharf Extension	50.0
Ramea	Slipway Repairs	30.0
Rose Blanche Diamond Cove	Breakwater Repairs	7.0
Savage Cove	Complete Wharf Under CCDP	100.0
Seal Cove (F.B.)	Slipway Reconstruction Breakwater Wharf Repairs	60.0
Tizzard's Harbour	Wharf Reconstruction	100.0
Whiteway	Wharf Extension	95.0
Wild Cove	Wharf Extension	160.0
Woody Point	Wharf Repairs	30.0
		1,934.4

CCDP — Canada Community Development Program
C/O — Carried over (Report)

SMALL CRAFT HARBOUR EXPENDITURES BY LOCATION (NEWFOUNDLAND) 1982-83

LOCATION	PROJECT	PROJECT COST $000
Bartlett's Harbour	C/O CCDP Wharf Extension	5.6
Flowers Cove	C/O CCDP Wharf Extension	3.0
Pinware	C/O CCDP Wharf Phase 1	20.2
Ship Cove	C/O CCDP Wharf Improvements	3.9
St. Carol's	C/O CCDP Wharf Phase 1	38.8
Three Mile Rock	C/O CCDP Slipway	.0
Throughout NFLD	Salaries (2 PY's)	30.0
Throughout NFLD	Salaries (10 PY's)	285.0
Throughout NFLD	CCDP Bulk	100.0
Throughout NFLD	Goods & Services	100.0
Throughout NFLD	Goods & Services Gulf	60.0
Throughout NFLD	C/O CCDP	400.0
Throughout NFLD	CCDP Various Minor Projects	38.0
Throughout NFLD	C/O CCDP Gulf	88.5
Throughout NFLD	Advance Planning	280.0
Throughout NFLD	Advance Planning Gulf	100.0
Throughout NFLD	Minor Capital < 20K	100.0
Throughout NFLD	CCDP Admin Costs	50.0
Throughout NFLD	Minor Capital < $20K Gulf	15.0
Throughout NFLD	Minor Operating & Maintenance < $20K	625.0
Throughout NFLD	Minor Operating & Maintenance < $20K	105.9
Throughout NFLD	CCDP Bulk Operating & Maintenance	100.0
Throughout NFLD	Redredging < $20K	125.8
Throughout NFLD	Vehicle Capital Admin	8.7
Anchor Point	CCDP Marginal Wharf	70.0
Anchor Point[1]	Land Marginal Wharf North	6.0
Anderson's Cove	CCDP Wharf Replace	5.0
Argentia	CCDP Boat Pool Wharf Repairs	4.0
Bacon Cove	CCDP Wharf Extension	3.0
Bank Head Cove (1)	Land Boat Harbour 327198	1.0
Bartlett's Harbour	CCDP Wharf Extension Phase 2	56.0
Bauline	C/O Slipway Repairs	32.0
Bauline South	Wharf Repairs	208.0
Bay Bulls	C/O Breakwater Wharf	91.4
Beaumont	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	100.00
Bellevue	CCDP Breakwater Construction	3.0
Belleoram	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	4.0
Black Duck Cove	C/O Breakwater Repairs	49.9
Blue Beach (1)	Waterlot 061112-328069	1.0
Blue Cove	CCDP Crib & Parking	10.0
Boat Harbour	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	12.0
Bonavista	Deep Water Wharf Extension	175.0
Branch	East Breakwater Repairs	83.0
Brigus South	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	15.0
Burin	CCDP Wharf Completion	2.0
Burnside	CCDP Wharf Repairs	13.0
Burnt Cove	CCDP Slipway Repairs	4.0
Burnt Point	CCDP Approach Repairs	3.0
Carbonear South	CCDP Slipway Breakwater	3.0
Coachman's Cove	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	25.0
Codroy	Emergency Dredging	70.0
Codroy (1)	Land Harbour Improvements 328869	12.7
Colliers	CCDP Wharf Repairs	5.0
Conche	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	90.0
Cooks Harbour	CCDP Gear Storage Shed	10.0
Cow Head	C/O Breakwater Extension Phase 1	230.0
Cripple Creek	CCDP Harbour Improvements	2.0
Cupids	CCDP Breastwork	2.0

Cuslett	CCDP Harbour Development	25.0
Dildo South	Wharf Repairs	10.0
Duntara	CCDP Slipway	7.0
Durrell	Redredging	30.0
Embree	CCDP New Wharf	20.0
FlatRock	C/O Slipway Modifications	40.3
FlatRock	CCDP Slipway Repairs	2.0
Fortune	CCDP Ice Breakwater	15.0
Fox Island River	CCDP Harbour Entrance Improvements	40.0
Foxtrap	CCDP Groyne Construction	10.0
Foxtrap/Flatrock	Harbour Development Study	20.0
Garnish	Groyne Replacement	140.0
Glovertown North	CCDP Wharf Repairs	10.0
Gooseberry Cove	Wharf Protection	14.0
Grates Cove	CCDP Slipway Approach Repairs	2.0
Great Brehat	CCDP Slipway	5.0
Greenspond	Wharf Extension	115.0
Hants Harbour	CCDP Slipway Reconstruction	5.0
Happy Adventure	Wharf Reconstruction	170.0
Harbour Grace	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	3.1
Harbour Le Cou	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	20.0
Harbour Round	CCDP Wharf Repairs	80.0
HBR Main Ezeckiel's	CCDP Fill	35.0
Hickman's Harbour	CCDP Wharf	10.0
Hopeall	CCDP Wharf Replacement	20.0
Jerseyside/Placentia	Dredging	90.0
King's Cove	CCDP Wharf	25.0
King's Point	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	25.0
L'Anse au Loup (2)	Water Lot 062458-328769	9.5
Lance Cove	CCDP Wharf Extension Slipway	4.0
Lawn	CCDP Retain Cribwork	3.0
Little Catalina	CCDP Slipway	5.0
Little Port (2)	Land Wharf Access	3.5
Monkstown	CCDP Slipway	2.0
Mount Arlington Heights	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	30.0
New Ferolle	CCDP Wharf Extension	10.0
New Harbour	CCDO Wharf Reconstruction	5.0
Newtown	C/O Dredging	4.7
Newtown	CCDP Wharf Repairs	12.0
Ochre Pit Cove	Wharf Protection	191.0
Ochre Pit Cove	CCDP Marginal Wharf	8.0
Old Shop	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	10.0
Parker's Cove	CCDP Wharf Improvements	10.0
Peter's River	CCDP Slipway Repairs	25.0
Petley	CCDP Rebuild Wharf	20.0
Placentia	CCDP Groyne Construction	50.0
Point au Gaul	CCDP Slipway Repairs	10.0
Point Lance	CCDP Wharf Construction	3.0
Point May	CCDP Slipway	10.0
Port Au Choix	Wharf Repairs	55.0
Port Aux Choix	Wharf Demolition	21.0
Port de Grave	CCDP Wharf	4.0
Port Kirwin	CCDP Wharf Extension	10.0
Port Saunders	CCDP Fish Wharf Extension	50.0
Portugal Cove	CCDP Wharf Reconstruction	50.0
Rose Blanche	CCDP Wharf Extension	60.0
Rose Brook C St-GEO	CCDP Multi-Purpose Building	15.0
Salmon Cove	CCDP Wharf Completion	2.0
Savage Cove	CCDP Fishermen's Wharf	51.0
Savage Cove	CCDP Wharf Phase 2	30.0
Seal Cove	CCDP Fishermen's Wharf	70.0
Shoe Cove	C/O Approach & Marginal Wharf	280.0
St. Bride's	CCDP Breakwater Reconstruction	25.0
St. Bride's (1)	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	78.0
St. Bride's (2)	C/O Breakwater Improvements	115.2
St. John's	Test Quarry	75.0
St. Julien's	CCDP Wharf Extension	10.0
St. Mary's	CCDP Wharf Repairs	5.0
Tapper's Cove	C/O Phase 1 Marginal Wharf & Approach road	260.0
Upper Island Cove	CCDP Wharf Extension & Repairs	60.0
West Bay Centre	CCDP Boat Slipway	10.0
Whales Gulch	C/O Dredging	222.0
Throughout NFLD	CCDP Bulk Small Project	45.0
		7,101.7

SMALL CRAFT HARBOUR EXPENDITURES BY LOCATION (NEWFOUNDLAND) 1981-82

LOCATION	PROJECT	EXPENDITURES $
Admiral's Beach	C/O Wharf Repairs	40,384
Admiral's Beach	Property Manager	375
Admiral's Beach	Canada Works Project	8,553
Admiral's Beach	Canada Works Project	12,523
Admiral's Cove	Canada Works Project	3,793
Anchor Point	Harbour Improvements	12,239
Anchor Point	Property Admin	1,500
Anchor Point	Canada Works Project	38,614
Anchor Point	Canada Works Project	309
Aquaforte	Minor Improvements	2,452
Aquaforte	Canada Works Project	12,701
Arnold's Cove	Property Manager	1,958
Avondale	Canada Works Project	1,716
Baine Harbour	Concrete Wharf Deck	40,633
Baine Harbour	Property Admin	5,700
Bank Head Cove	Minor Improvements	326
Barr'd Island	Property Admin	700
Bartletts Harbour	Canada Works Project	40,835
Bartletts Harbour	Canada Works Project	2,754
Bauline	Slipway Repairs	12,595
Bauline	Property Admin	11,525
Bauline South	Minor Improvements	23
Bauline South	Property Admin	13,111
Bay Bulls	C/O Breakwater Wharf	356,421
Bay Bulls	Property Admin	2,557
Bay de Verde	Minor Improvements	248
Bay de Verde	Property Admin	4,600
Bay de Verde	Canada Works Project	5,978
Bay de Verde	Canada Works Project	4,532
Bear Cove	Property Admin	280

Bell Island	Canada Works Project	850
Bellburns	Property Admin	10,408
Belleoram	Minor Improvements	2,177
Bird Cove	C/O Wharf Repairs	45,635
Biscay Bay	Canada Works Project	525
Black Duck Brook	Property Admin	900
Black Duck Cove	C/O Breakwater Improvements	147,011
Black Duck Cove	Property Admin	2,743
Black Duck Cove	Canada Works Project	7,205
Black Duck Cove	Canada Works Project	18,150
Black Head	Canada Works Project	588
Black Head	Canada Works Project	2,170
Black Head	Canada Works Project	777
Blue Beach	C/O Harbour Development Phase 2	31,983
Blue Beach	Property Admin	2,880
Bonavista	C/O Harbour Improvements Phase I	142,864
Bonavista	Property Manager	3,800
Boxey	Canada Works Project	11,236
Boyd's Cove	Canada Works Project	275
Branch	C/O Dredging	68,241
Branch	Property Admin	220
Branch	Canada Works Project	56
Branch	Canada Works Project	17,069
Brent's Cove	Canada Works Project	1,080
Brent's Cove	Canada Works Project	82
Bridgeport	Property Admin	5,821
Bridgeport	Canada Works Project	54,473
Bridgeport	Canada Works Project	7,868
Bridgeport	Canada Works Project	1,917
Brighton	Minor Works Project	2,894
Brigus South	Canada Works Project	3,624
Brigus South	Canada Works Project	854
Broad Cove	Property Admin	718
Browns Cove (Heatherton)	Minor Improvements	3,380
Bryants Cove	Canada Works Project	1,995
Bryants Cove	Canada Works Project	532
Burnt Cove	Property Admin	1,400
Burnt Point	Property Admin	136
Burnt Point	Canada Works Project	27
Burnt Point	Canada Works Project	1,976
Butter Cove	Canada Works Project	502
Calvert	Property Admin	687
Calvert	Canada Works Project	33,479
Calvert	Canada Works Project	4,154
Campbell's Cove	Property Admin	1,325
Cape Broyle	Canada Works Project	624
Cape Freels North	Canada Works Project	3,710
Cape St. George	Property Admin	3,980
Cape St. George	Canada Works Project	2,506
Cape St. George	Canada Works Project	623
Caplin Cove	Wharf Repairs	9,800
Caplin Cove	Property Admin	4,800
Caplin Cove	Canada Works Project	134
Caplin Cove	Canada Works Project	1,788
Carbonear	Property Admin	4,224
Castors River	C/O Wharf Repairs	89,458
Castors River	Property Admin	2,650
Castors River North	Property Admin	10,116
Catalina	Property Admin	10,290
Cavendish	Canada Works Project	2,620
Cavendish	Canada Works Project	112
Champneys East	Canada Works Project	300
Chance Cove	Canada Works Project	6,090
Chance Cove	Canada Works Project	37
Chance Cove	Canada Works Project	126
Change Islands	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	160,771
Channel	Property Manager	2,848
Chapels Cove	Minor Improvements	2,164
Chapels Cove	Canada Works Project	2,515
Charleston	Property Admin	4,506
Clam Bank Cove	Property Admin	495
Clifty Bank Cove	Property Admin	750
Codroy	Canada Works Project	6,239
Codroy	Canada Works Project	9,334
Codroy	Canada Works Project	2,260
Comfort Cove	Minor Improvements	174
Cooks Harbour	Property Admin	3,500
Cooks Harbour	Canada Works Project	2,477
Cooks Harbour	Canada Works Project	5,522
Cow Head	Breakwater Extension	114,931
Cow Head	Property Admin	7,297
Cow Head	Canada Works Project	3,550
Cow Head	Canada Works Project	23,316
Crabbe's River	Harbour Improvements	27,565
Crabbe's River	Property Admin	5,224
Cupids	Canada Works Project	157
Cupids	Canada Works Project	712
Cupids	Canada Works Project	1,382
Daniels Harbour	Property Admin	4,633
Daniels Harbour	Canada Works Project	1,525
Daniels Harbour	Canada Works Project	3,282
Deadman's Bay	C/O Slipway Repairs	66,989
Deadman's Bay	Canada Works Projects	555
Degras	Property Admin	3,500
Dildo	Property Admin	50
Dildo	Canada Works Project	5,818
Dildo	Canada Works Project	26,119
Dildo	Canada Works Project	17,270
Dildo South	Property Admin	1,606
Duntara	Property Admin	4,960
Duntara	Canada Works Project	2,163
Dunville	Canada Works Project	94
Dunville	Canada Works Project	1,092
Durrell	Minor Improvements	704
Eddies Cove East	Minor Improvements	6,850
Eddies Cove East	Property Admin	5,300
Eddies Cove East	Canada Works Project	3,755
Elliston	Property Admin	2,200
English Harbour West	Canada Works Project	720
English Point	Property Admin	2,200
Fairhaven	C/O Breakwater Wharf	179,872
Fermeuse	Property Admin	3,000
Ferryland	Minor Improvements	240
Ferryland	Canada Works Project	4,250
Ferryland	Canada Works Project	6,761
Flatrock	Slipway Modification	34,092
Flatrock	Property Admin	1,059
Flatrock	Canada Works Project	467
Fleur de Lys	Property Administration	4,900
Fleur de Lys	Canada Works Project	51,571
Fleur de Lys	Canada Works Project	1,571
Flowers Cove	Canada Works Project	25,589
Flowers Cove	Canada Works Project	2,987
Forrester's Point	Canada Works Project	2,000
Fortune	Canada Works Project	968
Fortune	Canada Works Project	5,067
Fox Cove	Property Admin	150

Fox Island River	Harbour Improvements	27,872
Fox Island River	Canada Works Project	1,490
Fox Island River	Canada Works Project	150
Foxtrap	Wharf Repairs	6,625
Francois	Minor Improvements	4,265
Francois	Property Admin	2,800
Freshwater	Canada Works Projects	20
Freshwater	Canada Works Project	369
Garnish	Property Admin	10,825
Gaskiers	Property Admin	50
Gaskiers	Canada Works Project	909
Gaultois	Property Admin	2,048
Grand Bank	C/O Fishermen's Wharf	18,990
Grand Bruit	Wharf Reconstruction	63,689
Grand Bruit	Minor Improvements	29
Grand Le Pierre	Property Admin	331
Grand Le Pierre	Canada Works Project	832
Grand Le Pierre	Canada Works Project	6,000
Grates Cove	Property Admin	2,315
Gravels (Port au Port)	Canada Works Project	785
Green Island Brook	Crib Extension	30,660
Green Island Brook	Property Admin	1,500
Green Island Brook	Canada Works Project	12,165
Green Island Brook	Canada Works Project	10,520
Green Island Brook	Canada Works Project	1,376
Green Island Cove	Canada Works Project	4,000
Greens Harbour	Property Admin	1,192
Grey River	Minor Improvements	2,465
Harbour Breton	Wharf Repairs	22,975
Harbour Breton	Property Admin	579
Harbour Breton	Minor Improvements	531
Harbour Grace	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	228,788
Harbour Grace	Property Admin	1,056
Harbour Grace	Canada Works Project	3,398
Harbour Grace	Canada Works Project	1,305
Harbour Mille	C/O Fisherman's Wharf	83,207
Hare Bay	Canada Works Project	1,564
Hearts Delight	Property Admin	250
Hearts Delight	Canada Works Project	3,450
Hearts Delight	Canada Works Project	450
Hearts Delight	Canada Works Project	2,242
Hearts Desire	Canada Works Project	108,115
Hearts Desire	Canada Works Project	1,125
Hermitage	Canada Works Project	31
Herring Neck	Canada Works Project	436
Hodge's Cove	Canada Works Project	98
Hodge's Cove	Property Admin	240
Holyrood	C/O Breakwater/lighting	11,713
Holyrood	Property Admin	125
Holyrood (North Arm)	Property Admin	3,260
Island Harbour	Property Admin	1,458
Islington	Canada Works Project	5,867
Jackson	Minor Improvements	2,326
Jerseys Ide	Canada Works Project	150
Jobs Cove	Property Admin	6,500
Jobs Cove	Canada Works Project	21,249
Joe Batts Arm	Canada Works Project	8,400
Joe Batts Arm	Canada Works Project	5,160
Keels	Canada Works Project	1,816
Keels	Canada Works Project	2,088
King's Cove	Property Admin	250
King's Cove	Canada Works Project	300
Kingston	Property Admin	2,521
Kitchuses	Canada Works Project	327
L'Anse au Clair	Property Admin	9,201
L'Anse au Clair	Canada Works Project	10,199
L'Anse au Clair	Canada Works Project	1,731
L'Anse au Loup	Feasibility Study	25,990
L'Anse au Loup	Canada Works Project	12,687
La Scie	Property Admin	5,450
Labrador	Fish Landing Facilities	7,170
Labrador	Canada Works Project	2,000
Lamaline	Minor Improvements	2,580
Lamaline	Property Admin	2,200
Lamaline	Canada Works Project	214
Lamaline	Canada Works Project	782
Lamaline	Canada Works Project	6,434
Lamaline East	Canada Works Project	2,100
Lark Harbour	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	110,786
Lead Cove	Property Admin	540
Leading Tickle	Property Admin	1,000
Little Catalina	Property Admin	105
Little Harbour East	C/O Wharf/Approach Reconstruction	44,333
Little Harbour East	Canada Works Project	320
Little Harbour East	Canada Works Project	7,416
Little Heart's Ease	Wharf Repairs	69,298
Little Heart's Ease	Property Admin	135
Little Paradise	Property Admin	15,309
Little Paradise	Canada Works Project	1,243
Little Paradise	Canada Works Project	189
Little Paradise	Canada Works Project	13,844
Little St. Lawrence	Minor Improvements	748
Logy Bay	C/O Seawall Extension	12,426
Logy Bay	Property Admin	151
Long Beach	Minor Improvements	3,088
Long Cove	C/O Harbour Development	10,799
Long Cove	Property Admin	650
Long Cove	Canada Works Project	3,275
Long Harbour	Canada Works Project	520
Lord's Cove	Spray & Retaining/Wall Repairs	120,703
Lord's Cove	Property Admin	161
Lord's Cove	Canada Works Project	9,586
Lord's Cove	Canada Works Project	2,416
Lord's Cove	Canada Works Project	5,635
Low Point	Property Admin	1,000
Lower Cove	Canada Works Project	925
Lower Island Cove	Property Admin	5,527
Lower Lance Cove	Canada Works Project	1,628
Lower Lance Cove	Canada Works Project	17,081
Lumsden North	Property Admin	1,100
Lunsden South	Feasibility Study	14,840
Lumsden South	Property Admin	10,960
Main Brook	Canada Works Project	1,740
Main Brook	Canada Works Project	62
Mainland	Property Admin	4,600
Margaree	Minor Improvements	48
Merasheen	C/O Wharf Reconstruction Phase 2	75,511
Ming's Bight	Canada Works Project	17,230
Moreton's Harbour	Canada Works Project	10,142
Moreton's Harbour	Canada Works Project	8,883
Mose Ambrose	Canada Works Project	105
Mount Arlington Heights	Property Admin	1,225
Mount Arlington Heights	Canada Works Project	6,279
Mount Arlington Heights	Canada Works Project	761

Mount Carmel	Property Admin	5,000
Mount Carmel	Canada Works Project	2,708
Mount Carmel	Canada Works Project	558
Musgrave Harbour	Property Admin	11,331
Musgravetown	Canada Works Project	376
Neddy's Harbour	Property Admin	7,599
New Pelican	Canada Works Project	1,264
Newmans Cove	Property Admin	1,450
Newton	C/O Dredging	260,761
Nippers Harbour	Minor Improvements	3,807
Norman's Cove	Property Admin	2,500
Norris Point	Property Admin	1,325
Ochre Pit Cove	Canada Works Project	660
Ochre Pit Cove	Canada Works Project	217
Ochre Pit Cove	Canada Works Project	1,313
Old Perlican	Minor Improvements	1,523
Old Perlican	Property Admin	500
Old Perlican	Canada Works Project	220
Open Hall	Property Admin	2,302
Outer Cove	Property Admin	322
Peter's River	Property Admin	11,049
Peter's River	Canada Works Project	533
Peter's River	Canada Works Project	19,338
Petty Harbour	Property Admin	4,634
Petty Harbour	C/O Dredging	65,694
Petty Harbour	Canada Works Project	12,792
Petty Harbour	Canada Works Project	1,799
Petty Harbour	Canada Works Project	10,193
Piccadilly	Property Admin	3,000
Picadilly	Canada Works Project	37
Piccadilly	Canada Works Project	1,779
Pigeon Cove	Property Admin	1,800
Pine Cove	Property Admin	2,500
Pine Cove	Canada Works Project	525
Pinware	Property Admin	8,588
Pinware	Canada Works Project	33,724
Pinware	Canada Works Project	4,547
Placentia	Wharf Improvements	11,091
Plate Cove West	Property Admin	4,900
Plum Point	Canada Works Project	924
Plum Point	Canada Works Project	2,456
Point au Gaul	Minor Improvements	1,411
Point au Gaul	Canada Works Project	5,313
Point au Gaul	Canada Works Project	8,067
Point Lance	C/O Storage Area	21,270
Point Lance	Property Admin	1,428
Port Albert	Canada Works Project	380
Port au Choix	Pave Parking Lot—Approach Road	52,820
Port au Choix	C/O Harbour Development Phase 1	287,675
Port au Choix	Crib Demolition	1,990
Port au Choix	Canada Works Project	520
Port au Choix	Property Admin	155
Port Blandford	Property Admin	9
Port Kirwin	Minor Improvements	4,496
Port Saunders	Canada Works Project	4,550
Port Saunders	Canada Works Project	8,191
Port Saunders	Canada Works Project	8,208
Portland	Property Manager	300
Portland Creek	Property Admin	6,100
Portugal Cove	Minor Improvements	3,582
Portugal Cove	Property Admin	125
Portugal Cove	Canada Works Project	645
Portugal Cove	Canada Works Project	373
Portugal Cove	Canada Works Project	1,881
Portugal Cove South	Canada Works Project	257
Portugal Cove South	Canada Works Project	2,172
Pouch Cove	Wharf Repairs	16,047
Pouch Cove	Minor Improvements	5,625
Pouch Cove	Property Admin	6,651
Pouch Cove	Canada Works Project	4,500
Pound Cove	Property Admin	1,700
Quidi Vidi	C/O Feasibility Study	9,500
Quidi Vidi	Property Admin	1,456
Quirpon	Property Admin	1,312
Quirpon	Canada Works Project	1,524
Raleigh	Property Admin	60
Red Bay	C/O Fishermen's Wharf	2,029
Red Bay	Canada Works Project	4,000
Red Brook	Canada Works Project	1,700
Red Harbour	C/O Wharf Reconstruction	44,430
Red Harbour	Minor Improvements	1,246
Red Harbour	Property Manager	2,600
Red Harbour	Canada Works Project	241
Renews	C/O Wharf Repairs	15,127
River of Ponds	Property Admin	4,921
Riverhead	Property Admin	595
Riverhead	Canada Works Project	1,120
Riverhead	Canada Works Project	3,862
Robert's Arm	Canada Works Project	329
Rose Blanche	Minor Improvements	471
Round Harbour	C/O Wharf Repairs	124,586
Sally Cove	Property Admin	3,000
Salmon Cove	Canada Works Project	2,350
Salmon Cove	Canada Works Project	2,471
Salvage	Canada Works Project	4,345
Sandy Cove	Canada Works Project	2,800
Saunders Cove	Canada Works Project	45
Savage Cove	Harbour Improvements	23,374
Savage Cove	Canada Works Project	53,934
Savage Cove	Canada Works Project	76
Seal Cove	Minor Improvements	4,465
Seal Cove	Canada Works Project	136
Seal Cove	Canada Works Project	1,250
Seldom Come By	Minor Improvements	211
Seldom Come by	Property Admin	218
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	4,975
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	1,800
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	3,861
Ship Cove	Property Admin	3,500
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	500
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	40
Ship Cove	Canada Works Project	25,430
Ship Harbour	Canada Works Project	8,995
Ship Harbour	Canada Works Project	69
Shoe Cove	Minor Improvements	204
Shoe Cove	Property Admin	1,250
Shoe Cove Bight	Approach & Marginal Wharf	60,086
Shoe Cove Brook	Property Admin	4,100
Sibley's Cove	Property Admin	683
Smith's Harbour	Property Admin	389
South East Bight	C/O Wharf	169,079
South East Bight	Property Admin	763
Southern Harbour	Harbour Improvements	2,995
Southport	Minor Improvements	2,892
Southport	Canada Works Project	8,463
Spaniards Bay	Property Admin	1,500
Spillars Cove	Property Manager	89
Spirity Cove	Canada Works Project	14
Spirity Cove	Canada Works Project	2,180
Spirity Cove	Canada Works Project	5,050
St. Jones Within	Property Admin	125
St. Anthony	Property Admin	2,577
St. Bernard's	Minor Improvements	1,572
St. Bernard's	Property Admin	8,567
St. Bernard's	Canada Works Project	1,079

St. Bernard's	Canada Works Project	748
St. Brides	Temporary Wharf Repairs	45,794
St. Brides	C/O Wharf/Breakwater "A-UNIT"	461,782
St. Brides	Property Admin	288
St. Brides	Canada Works Project	1,123
St. Brides	Canada Works Project	5,871
St. Caroll's	Canada Works Project	66,046
St. Caroll's	Canada Works Project	4,874
St. Georges	Wharf Repairs	9,015
St. Georges	Minor Improvements	184
St. Georges	Canada Works Project	860
St. Georges	Canada Works Project	2,201
St. Jacques	Property Manager	5,549
St. John's	C/O Feasibility Study	38,213
St. Joseph's	Property Admin	365
St. Joseph's	Canada Works Project	2,904
St. Juliens	Property Admin	98
St. Juliens	Canada Works Project	560
St. Mary's	Canada Work Project	818
St. Pauls	Property Admin	3,808
St. Pauls	Canada Works Project	3,936
St. Philips	C/O Dredging	9,102
St. Shotts	Wharf Repairs	23,805
St. Shotts	Property Admin	8,651
St. Vincent's	Minor Improvements	4,041
St. Vincent's	Property Admin	150
St. Vincent's	Canada Works Project	68
Stephenville Crossing	Property Admin	294
Stephenville Crossing	Canada Works Project	4,250
Stephenville Crossing	Canada Works Project	2,460
Stephenville Crossing	Canada Works Project	14,563
Summerford	Property Admin	450
Summerford	Canada Works Project	45,799
Summerford	Canada Works Project	2,449
Summerford	Canada Works Project	2,447
Summerside	Canada Works Project	3,000
Summerville	Property Admin	1,600
Sunnyside	Canada Works Project	75
Sunnyside	Canada Works Project	4,932
Terranceville	Canada Works Project	5,037
Thornlea	Canada Works Project	52
Thornlea	Canada Works Project	3,131
Three Mile Rock	Canada Works Project	1,084
Three Rock Cove	Property Admin	2,000
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk Operating & Maintenance Projects	9,685
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk Capital Project	78,712
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk Operating & Maintenance Projects	8,886
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk Capital Project	31,390
Throughout Newfoundland	Salaries (Gulf)	40,000
Throughout Newfoundland	Goods & Services	5,014
Throughout Newfoundland	Salaries (NFLD)	240,069
Throughout Newfoundland	Goods & Services	39,574
Throughout Newfoundland	Operating & Maintenance (Bulk)	44,810
Throughout Newfoundland	Property Admin	71,523
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP (in full)	89,985
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP Capital	80,141
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP (in full)	39,506
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP Capital	16,592
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP 308	19,042
Throughout Newfoundland	Personal Service Contract	54,920
Throughout Newfoundland	Personal Service Contract	140,079
Throughout Newfoundland	Bulk CCDP 308	367,078
Tickle Cove	Property Admin	3,237
Tickle Cove	Canada Works Project	1,739
Tilt Cove	Property Admin	2,500
Torbay	Property Admin	565
Torbay	Marginal Wharf & Approach	113,197
Torbay	Canada Works Project	935
Torbay	Canada Works Project	460
Torbay	Canada Works Project	23
Trepassey	Minor Improvements	2,893
Triton	Minor Improvements	1,394
Triton	Property Admin	1,700
Triton	Canada Works Project	8,564
Triton	Canada Works Project	1,977
Trout River	Harbour Improvements	20,335
Trout River	Property Admin	2,280
Trouty	Property Admin	1,027
Twillingate	Canada Works Project	2,500
Twillingate	Canada Works Project	240
Twillingate	Canada Works Project	740
Upper Island Cove	Wharf Repairs	26,739
Upper Jenkins Cove	Property Admin	108
Upper Jenkins Cove	Canada Works Project	13,505
Upper Jenkins Cove	Canada Works Project	1,692
Valleyfield	Property Admin	2,432
Victoria Cove	Canada Works Project	320
Wareham	Property Admin	4,750
West St. Modeste	Canada Works Project	4,400
West St. Modeste	Canada Works Project	121
Western Bay	Canada Works Project	3,949
Whales Gulch	C/O Dredging	46,090
Whales Gulch	Minor Repairs	300
Whiteway	C/O Breakwater	15,149
Whiteway	Property Admin	150
Whiteway	Canada Works Project	83,414
Whiteway	Canada Works Project	3,114
Whiteway	Canada Works Project	7,558
Wild Bight	Property Admin	2,500
Wild Cove	Minor Improvements	1,849
Winterton	Canada Works Project	2,803
Witless Bay	Property Admin	4,300
Witless Bay	Canada Works Project	24,483
Woody Point	Property Admin	315
Woody Point	Canada Works Project	75
Wreck Cove	Canada Works Project	5,625
Wreck Cove	Canada Works Project	350
Wreck Cove	Canada Works Project	3,208
York Harbour	Property Admin	113
York Harbour	Canada Works Project	1,860
York Harbour	Canada Works Project	645
Culls Harbour	Canada Works Project	198
Horwood	Canada Works Project	2,750
Curling	Canada Works Project	389
		7,974,645

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1983-84 (NO. 2)

THIRD READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 9, the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for the third reading of Bill C-151, to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the subject matter of this third reading debate is Bill C-151, which provides for very extensive borrowing authority to be exercised by the Government of Canada, and includes within it an amount of $240 million earmarked for Canadair.

I believe that the Senate has been a more interesting place during the past few years because we have had four ministers of the Crown on the government bench who have on some occasions had departmental responsibilities. This gives an opportunity, and indeed a responsibility, for the members of the Senate to engage in debate with those ministers when matters of policy affecting them are contained in the bills which they present to the chamber. That is why I was particularly interested to hear Senator Phillips introduce last week this subject of Canadair, in which he dealt with the problems in an extensive fashion. I was also pleased to hear the response given by the minister.

At that time I asked for the indulgence of the house to have the matter stand over until today, so that I, along with others, might have a chance to read not only the minister's statement that he gave in the debate, but also the 60-page report respecting this matter that he made to two House of Commons committees.

I might as well say, right at the start, that my attention has been somewhat distracted over this past weekend. I have not been able to devote all of my time to a consideration of this matter. Therefore, if I fall somewhat short in my appreciation of the problem, I hope that the minister and the house will excuse me. I have been busy with other things. As the house did agree to have the matter stand over from last week, and the deputy leader gave me the impression that he would like to see the matter dealt with reasonably expeditiously, I thought that I had better go ahead today regardless and do the best I could, with perhaps an indifferent preparation.

When the minister spoke to us on June 9, he also asked to be printed in Hansard a 60-page memorandum on the subject of Canadair. He states in that memorandum:

> Parliament and the public deserve a full accounting of what has transpired.

I quote that from his statement. Further on, in his introductory remarks, he says:

> In reporting on Canadair, I want to be as informative as possible. The public and Parliament deserve nothing less.

Well, I agree with those observations, and I believe that in many respects the minister has given us a full and interesting account of the Canadair situation, as seen from his point of view. I believe he has been particularly impressive in detailing the events that took place inside the company: its problems of estimating, of budgeting, of accounting, of selling, of manufacturing the product, and all of the rest, that have been the subject of public comment.

However, I wonder whether the minister fully discharges his undertaking when he comes to discussing what the government did. Speaking for myself, I am not concerned on this occasion with dealing with the concept of government intervention in high tech industries. That is for another occasion. I am not concerned basically with discussing CDIC—that will be the subject of a debate in the future—and I shall not try to examine the conduct of the management, the technicians or the directors of Canadair. What I wish to do is deal with what the minister describes on page 5764 of Hansard in the sentence that reads:

> The role of Government should also be mentioned.

I am glad that he got around to that, because the bulk of his statement had to do with anything but government, it seems to me, but toward the end he offers that observation. However, he modestly says far less about the role of government than about other factors at play in the situation.

I confirm today the impression he left with me on the last occasion when he spoke, that in his opinion there is little, if any, fault to be found with the government's handling of this problem, even though it has resulted in $1.4 billion being added to the national debt.

It therefore struck me as possibly a useful exercise to look at his statement and to compare it with what I believe to be the facts of the case, so that we might place before the house some further comments or observations on the role of government.

I start with what I think was a basic defence that the minister offered when he described the role of government as being that of "a passive but responsible investor".

When we use the term "passive investor", it conjures up in my mind a life insurance company, or a pension fund or something of that sort, investing in a large corporation. They have a substantial holding, but they are content to leave it in the management of the directors of the company. Their investment is passive, and they do not seek to direct the company.

Of course, in that situation, if they are not satisfied with what happens, they have the significant advantage of being able to sell their shares. So, in that sense they have a recourse from a management that proves to be ineffective, which is certainly not open to the government in this particular case.

The government says that they were "passive investors". I want to examine that idea for a moment, because I suggest to the house that they were something more than passive investors. They were not only passive investors; they were the sole investors. They were the only people who had any equity interest in this company; they owned it completely. The government was not a passive investor, in the terms in which I define it, because it had the right, which it exercised, to appoint directors to this company. Indeed, some of the directors were civil servants who were representing more directly in certain cases the interests of the Crown.

• (1500)

I was interested to note the minister's comment that these civil servants on the board of directors were only in office for about nine months before they were replaced. The minister made the point that it was pretty difficult to find out what might be going on in such a company in a nine-month period. However, he spoiled that argument by relating it to what happened to the Clark government. He went on to wonder what the Clark government was doing during its period in office when all this was going on at Canadair, and suggested that all it did was pay the bills when they were presented. The Clark government had a nine-month term of office as well. But in describing what the Clark government did, the minister could have been more complete by adding the fact that it had set up a special task force or committee to determine whether this company, along with others, should be privatized. I regard that as a significant move. In fact, this committee was to report in February 1980. We know what happened in February 1980—the Clark government was not in power to receive the report. I do not know what the committee reported on or what it said but, in any case, it should be on the record that the Clark government did make that effort.

Speaking of the Clark government, it introduced a bill governing the conduct of crown corporations which, alas, never received the approbation of Parliament. In my opinion, that bill was a much superior bill to Bill C-153, which has been dangling around in the other chamber for some period of time. So while I do not claim any perfection for the Clark government, I think, at least on two counts, it can be said to have had some concern in matters of this kind with which the minister did not credit it. In fact, he left me with the impression that the Clark government was negligent in its duty by merely paying the bills when they came in.

However, this government was not only a passive shareholder; it was not only the sole shareholder; it not only had the right to appoint directors, which it exercised: it was also the banker of the company, because without the support of the government this corporation would not have lasted very long. Anyone who examined its figures, if they had been made available to outsiders—certainly, they were not made available publicly—or if they had been made available to those from whom the company was seeking credit, would not have loaned the money without government support. So the government was the banker.

How did they carry out this role of banker? They were certainly not the banker directly, and I will come to the time element a little later. The government was the banker of this company because, when asked, they supplied it and its creditors with what is called a letter of comfort. A letter of comfort is a very interesting document because it gives the person lending money some assurance that somebody is taking interest in the matter besides the person who gets the loan. In other words, some responsible body assures the lender that it will not see the lender suffer if the loan goes sour. That means that lenders to Canadair did not have to lend money on the credit of that company; they lent money on the credit of the government. So, in fact, the whole of the credit of the Government of Canada was placed behind this company.

The process of letters of comfort is an interesting operation because, in using them, parliamentary supervision, parliamentary reporting and parliamentary approval are bypassed. There is a legal loophole here. Letters of comfort are not considered to be one of those things on which the government must report to Parliament in the normal course, as they are doing now with this request for $240 million for this company. So, for six years, since the company was bought, there was a sequence of letters of comfort backing the borrowings of Canadair. Those letters of comfort covered an amount of over $1 billion—and I stress "billion"—without parliamentary approval. In his report, the minister quite correctly states that Parliament was brought in—six years later, on March 31, 1982—to give retroactive consent and validation to those financial operations. But the fact is that for six years, by means of letters of comfort, Parliament was bypassed, the company was financed and everybody at that point was happy, except Parliament and the Auditor General, who brought to the notice of Parliament, by turning over the stone, that this question of letters of comfort was something that should require Parliamentary approval.

My colleague, Senator Doody—

Hon. C. William Doody: The minister is leaving.

Senator Roblin: That is his business.

Senator Doody, Senator Deschatelets and perhaps some other senators, in dealing with this matter in committee, were zealous to make sure that the matter was brought to public attention, and I think that was a good thing to do.

Any impression left by the minister's statement that the role of the government was that of a passive investor certainly understates the situation to a very considerable degree. It was an active participant—the sole owner, the appointer of the directors, the active provider of the money—for a period of six years. So, to say that the government was a passive investor understates the position the government actually occupied, and it seems to me that there is more to be expected of it in that connection than the minister has indicated in his statement. That is the first argument the minister felt would exonerate the government from any criticism in respect of this matter.

The second point has to do with the nature of the operation. It is to the effect that in high tech industries, particularly in aircraft industries, one is exposed to the risk of failure, to cost overruns, to difficulties arising from being on the leading edge of new technology and so on. Probably the Challenger jet qualifies for that description. I think that statement is correct and that it ought to be given full weight. The minister gave examples of what had happened in other jurisdictions with respect to the supersonic transport; of what had happened to some of the jet aircraft we have; and he referred to a number of different experiences in which other jurisdictions and management had run into problems of overruns, difficulties of technology, manufacturing and that sort of thing. I agree with him. I think that he has made a statement of fact.

However, it seems to me that the minister has not stated anything that is new. We have known for years that these kinds of operations can be troublesome, and long before we got into Canadair we saw the troubles which other people had run into. What occurs to me is that reasonable people might be expected to profit from such experiences. If we find that we are the sole supplier of money et cetera for a highly risky, high tech operation, then it seems to me that we might be a little more cautious in the way in which we organize and discharge our responsibilities in respect to it. So the idea of being content with the passive investor description and then saying that because it is a high tech industry the government is not to be blamed for what happened leaves that question in my mind. It seems to me that it would have been the part of wisdom, based on the experience of several years before we got into Canadair, to recognize the kind of proposition we had before us and to take the necessary steps to tighten up or to introduce extra special measures to make sure that we knew how that firm was getting on.

The minister said that governments generally provide a high level of "deliberate" public support for these high tech operations. That is right, but the key word there is "deliberate". If the government were a passive investor, where is the deliberation there? And as far as Parliament is concerned with regard to supplying the money, when did Parliament have a chance to deliberate on the wisdom or otherwise of continuing to invest in this corporation or of supplying money in the first place? It seems to me to go to the very heart of what I regard as the government's failure to bring Parliament and the public into their confidence as they proceeded with the development of this particular project. There was a clear warning, even to a passive investor, that extra care should be required, which all lends point to the statement made by the minister in his report, which can be found at page 5762 of Hansard. He said:

● (1510)

> This is the first time members of Parliament have had before them financial statements for Canadair.

The first time after six years! I wonder about that, because if you look at the Financial Administration Act, and particularly at sections 72 and 75(3) of that act, you will see some information as to what crown corporations are supposed to do in the way of presenting financial statements to Parliament. Section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act says that:

> A corporation shall, as soon as possible, but within three months after the termination of each financial year submit an annual report to the appropriate Minister in such form as he may prescribe, which shall include the statement of accounts specified . . . and the appropriate Minister shall lay the report before Parliament within fifteen days after he receives it—et cetera. That is one of the standard provisions in the Financial Administration Act.

Section 72 establishes the same requirement with respect to the capital budget for the fiscal year for companies of this kind.

You may ask why it is that we have received no reports for six years. The minister says that the first report was made just recently. He is right about that. It seems to me that he might, in examining the role of government, explain to us why we have not received such reports before. My information is that the legal status of Canadair to submit such reports is quite clear. Canadair clearly comes under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act. The first consideration is that the corporation shall be wholly owned by the government. Canadair is. The second consideration is that the corporation shall report to Parliament through a minister. Canadair does. Moreover, there is a legal opinion in the files of Treasury Board indicating that Canadair is covered by this act.

When considering the government's role, therefore, one must ask oneself what has happened. Why are we only now receiving this report on Canadair? It seems to me that the minister could well have arranged to submit this information on a yearly basis so that, year by year, as these letters of comfort were being issued, of which Parliament knew nothing at all, at least there would have been a statement from Canadair. Such a statement would have been valuable, even if it had not been as informative as it should have been, which it probably would not have been according to what the minister said when dealing with accounting in Canadair. I wish to touch on that, too, before I am through.

In his examination of the problems the government had experienced, the minister made this statement—and I am reading from page 5758 of Debates of the Senate:

> Identification of the financial difficulties was, I must say, seriously hampered by the excessive optimism of Canadair itself and in particular its over-optimistic projection of sales, and its limited disclosure of information.

Admittedly, it is a real problem, if you are trying to administer a company and do not obtain that kind of information. What do you do about it? Well, I do not know why the government got itself into this particular position, but, if it had accepted the advice offered by numerous Auditors General over the years, who recommended that there be a comprehensive report of crown corporations, including this one, then probably such Auditor General's reports might have elucidated some of these difficulties and would have made sure that the information presented was really informative from the policy-parliamentary point of view.

The minister went on to say that there had been an abuse of the accounting processes. He said there was something called "program accounting." Program accounting means that you can postpone the recognition of costs from the time they are incurred over the life run of the production so that, instead of taking them all as one lump sum in the beginning, you spread them out over each one of the items produced during the life of that run.

From a theoretical point of view I do not complain about that, but, if costs are underestimated—and they were—and if sales are overestimated—and they were—the result of program accounting becomes fatally misleading. Well, we have seen that, because it is only in the last six months that anyone has admitted that Canadair is in difficulty.

So we have identification, lack of information from the company, a bad accounting system and the abuse of the program accounting system, and the other problem that the minister raised, namely, the difficulty that the directors of the company had in clearly understanding the objectives of the shareholders of the corporation. Every one of those topics has been covered by reports of the Auditor General. The Auditor General has complained about the difficulty of defining government purposes with respect to crown corporations. The Auditor General has complained of his inability to make a comprehensive audit of these companies because they are audited in some other way.

Although they may be justified, for every one of the complaints made by the minister there was a remedy available, which can be expressed in two words: "Auditor General"—or, if you like, "comprehensive auditing." If those matters had been attended to, if the continual stream of recommendations from the Auditor General and, indeed, from the Public Accounts Committee of the other place, asking for better rules for crown corporations and particularly for an input by the Auditor General, had been accepted, then I think we would have been able to become aware of the problems involved in this corporation much sooner. If they were running into problems associated with hi-tech industries, as indeed was the case, we would have known when it happened, and that "deliberate support" the minister speaks of would indeed have been deliberate support instead of a salvage or rescue operation after the damage had been done.

For several years the Auditor General has warned about crown corporations and the lack of parliamentary accountability and the lack of administerial responsibility. If the Auditor General had been in place, I think each of the complaints the minister made in his statement would have been satisfied. The honourable minister would have learned that the sales estimates were grossly inflated; he would have learned that the cost figures were questionable; he would have learned that program accounting was being carried to undue extremes; he would have learned that the directors were not fully aware of what the government wanted them to do. But, alas, the Auditor General was barred by a deliberate act of policy from being able to discharge any of those functions, and he still is. It seems to me greatly to the public detriment that we are in this situation today.

The last time we discussed this topic, Senator Deschatelets raised a question about the role of the Auditor General and the minister answered the question. He said that we could not have the Auditor General in there, because, if we did, we could not get any people from the private sector to act as directors. He said:

> I have been told by one person whom I have approached to become a director, "I don't know why I should risk public reprobation in statements of the Auditor General. Why should I be made to look like a fool in case the management or the board collectively takes difficult decisions that do not turn out to be perfect?"

That is the problem, says the minister. I regard that as a fatuous excuse. It is fatuous. How do the directors of that company feel now, not having had the benefit of the Auditor General? What would they have said had the Auditor General been of some assistance to them in the early proceedings in preventing this kind of thing arising? They would have thanked him. They would have been grateful for that outside advice coming to them disassociated from the management of the company but bearing on public interest and taking into account the concept of comprehensive auditing. They would have thanked him. That is what they would have done.

But even if they were not thankful, which is a supposition I reject, can one say that we will run again the risk of losses of this nature simply because to have the Auditor General in would limit the people we could ask to be directors? I think not. In my opinion, that is a fatuous argument, and yet it is the only substantial argument the minister used. In fact, it is the only argument he used with respect to why the Auditor General would not be a suitable person to bring into the affairs of Canadair and other corporations covered by the Canada Development Investment Corporation. The word I used was "fatuous." I think that is an accurate reflection. It is not a substantial reason, and certainly not one which this house should be prepared to accept. The Auditor General would have saved the directors of the company some embarrassment; he would have saved us some embarrassment.

• (1520)

Even now, when we consider Bill C-153, respecting crown corporations, and Bill C-158, respecting CDIC and certain other corporations, which will be before us soon, the Auditor General is barred from doing this comprehensive audit which the minister complains would undercut the proper management of these businesses, but which seems to me would be something which would yield important and profitable results. It would certainly help the public and Parliament to know what is going on, rather than being left in the dark for six years, as they have been.

I would like to deal with another aspect of the government's activities in this matter which has to do with the statement of the minister that in 1981 a task force was set up to look into Canadair. That is true. He then stated that in 1982 there was another task force set up to look into Canadair. That, too, is true. It is also true that these task forces reported to cabinet in October 1982, which is not long ago. Even then, Parliament and the public were still in the dark about the real nature of things at Canadair.

Those reports have never been published, so we do not know what they contain. It is alleged, however, that one of them said that we should no longer continue with the Challenger program. I do not know if that is true, but I think it safe to make the assumption that both those reports told the government that there were problems in Canadair; that there was a can of worms to be exposed. Those reports have been kept from us. However, the point I want to make is that, subsequent to those reports being tendered to the government, in November 1982 Mr. Kearns, who was then the person running Canadair, came before a committee of the other place asking for more money, and he got it. At the time, he left the House of Commons with the erroneous impression, I suggest, that things were in pretty good shape at Canadair.

The ministry, however, at that time had had two task force reports. They knew the worst, perhaps not in detail but they certainly knew in substance that there were problems with sales forecasts, problems with cost overruns, problems with accounting procedures, and I would like to know why they did not reveal those matters at that time to Parliament.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: I would like to ask the senator a question, for elucidation.

Senator Roblin: I would prefer to deal with questions at the end of my speech.

Senator Everett: I wonder if the honourable senator could tell me which minister he is referring to.

Senator Roblin: I think that at that time the CDIC was in charge, because shortly afterwards the minister himself, Senator Austin, appeared before the committee to deal with some matters in connection with Canadair as well. It was about the middle of 1982 that the CDIC was created by order in council. It was subsequently given power and entrusted to the care of the minister, so it seems to me that at that time Senator Austin was probably in charge.

Whether he was or was not does not alter my argument, since some minister was in charge, and, whoever that minister was, he clearly had to consider whether or not it was his duty to tell the committee that the optimistic reports being submitted by the man in charge of Canadair—those same reports of which the minister later so eloquently complained—did not reflect the facts. The facts were known in government circles in October; this gentleman came before the committee in November; and it seems to me that some explanation should be offered as to why the House of Commons was left in a situation where it did not have possession of facts which were germane and relevant to the issue, namely, how this company was getting along, and why the chairman of the company had not given a picture which was consistent with the real guts of the matter with respect to Canadair.

I do not wish to detain honourable senators much longer. I am sorry I was unable to detain the minister. He has obviously more important fish to fry, but if he were here I would say to him that his statement regarding the government role in this matter is incomplete. In fact, it might be described as self-serving. It seems to me it was designed to show that, while there was a terrible mess there, it was certainly someone else's fault and not the fault of the government, and that there was no responsibility to be attached to them for the unfortunate situation in which we find ourselves.

Except in response to Senator Deschatelets' intervention, the minister does not mention the recommendations and the warnings issued by the Auditor General over a long period of time. I have in my hand what the Auditor General actually said about this question of letters of comfort, which I will read because it emphasizes my point.

> In the last six years, more than a billion dollars has been advanced to Canadair through a sequence of Letters of Comfort. These were authorized by Parliament on 31 March 1982—

That was six years after the event.

> The authorized limit is $1.35 billion—

That is only slightly less than the amount they lost.

> This amount of taxpayers' money is at risk without what I would consider clear criteria and objectives for providing, continuing, or terminating support. This example is all the more disturbing because there is no assurance that $1.35 billion is sufficient.

I can add, in parenthesis, that the minister says the same thing. He has told us that he does not rule out the fact that further losses may be experienced in this matter, or that more money will be required.

Hon. David Walker: Isn't Senator Austin ultimately responsible for this mess?

Senator Roblin: I thank my colleague, but I will come to that in a minute.

To continue the quote from Auditor General Kenneth Dye:

> In this period of severe recession, government support for such troubled companies as Massey Ferguson, de Havilland, Canadair, . . . represents very big risks, even against the scale of current budgets.

That is certainly the truth. We have this question of the Auditor General continually warning Parliament, warning the Public Accounts Committee and warning this chamber of the problems he could see, and yet, in the statement of the minister to this house, he completely omits to say why the government policy has persisted in ignoring these observations of the Auditor General. Comprehensive auditing by the Auditor General of crown corporations is still stubbornly refused, and it seems to me that it is a matter which the government should not be allowed to persist in. It must address this problem. It seems to me that there is great confusion in the mind of the minister, and perhaps some other members of cabinet, as to just what his duty is. When I read the minister's statement, I noted he talked about his responsibility to report. I agree with that. He has, indeed, a responsibility to report, but something more than that attaches to ministerial responsibility. He has not just to bring the good or bad news, whatever it may be, but he has to accept responsibility for the items on which he is reporting. In that respect the minister clearly seems to me to have forgotten that that is part of the constitutional system in this country.

His is not the first instance. One could point to others where the government seems to have thought that, if it reported to itself, that would be enough; that reporting to Parliament would be somewhat superfluous. If it issues a report to Parliament about things which come to its attention, even though they are the fruit of government policy, the government does not accept that parliamentary and constitutional responsibility which I think is theirs. They have refused, it seems to me, to accept the responsibility of Parliament in the traditional sense. Even now, they intend to keep the Auditor General out of crown corporations.

We have seen how helpful to Parliament outside auditors were in connection with Canadair. Canadair has been audited by someone for six years, even though the reports were either late or not submitted to Parliament. How valuable to Parliament was that outside, professional auditor? I make no charges that they did not do their job properly. Of course they did their job properly. They examined the accounts; they certified the bills; they did things auditors normally do. They are not to be faulted, but it was not part of their mandate, as I know it, to present a comprehensive audit, as the Auditor General does in order to give Parliament an idea of what is really going on and in order to alert Parliament to any problems in order to avoid them in the future. We have been told that that kind of comprehensive audit simply would not do, and that the Auditor General was prohibited from conducting such an audit.

• (1530)

Honourable senators, all I can say, in conclusion, is that we need something better than what the minister seems to offer. While the minister gave us, in many respects, an illuminating account of what had transpired, he was something less than detailed and forthcoming respecting what the government itself was responsible for. It is perhaps useful to place one man's observations on the record so that we may know where the shortcomings fall and can pinpoint the problems so that improvements can be made.

Meanwhile, the sad fact is that $1.4 billion has been added to the national debt, and the minister gave us the frank statement that we may have to borrow more money for this company. Whether or not that borrowing will appear in the national debt remains to be seen. I hope it does not, but there is $1.4 billion in borrowing there now and, at 10 per cent, that will cost the Canadian public $140 million a year forever, because we will never pay that debt off. We will have to pay $140 million a year forever as the price of the learning experiences involved in this tragic situation.

What concerns me about the matter is that there is no evidence at all that the government has learned anything from this experience, certainly not with respect to the use of the Auditor General as part of the machinery by which the Canadian public and the Canadian Parliament can be kept informed as to how public moneys are being spent.

I share the minister's hope that all may not be lost; I share the minister's hope that the Challenger will become the cutting edge of the private jet industry; I share the minister's hope that it is technically sound in every respect and can meet the airworthiness requirements and the requirements of its customers; I share the minister's hope that sales will revive, and that if we put new money into this company in the future some good may come of it. But it seems to me that he is taking far too casual an attitude towards the record of the government's involvement in this process. The fundamental fact that I wish he would reflect upon is whether or not, from here on in, at least, a comprehensive audit, such as that conducted by the Auditor General, will be made use of in the future so that we may know the true facts of these matters. If the minister would give use some—I do not like to say "repentance", because that is probably not the right word, but his appreciation of the responsibility of the government to Parliament, particularly in financial matters, I believe it would be found to be far more traditional than this government has exhibited so far.

On every occasion in this situation the government has found some way to avoid reporting to Parliament, even though large sums of money were being authorized in the name of the people of Canada, without the knowledge of the people of Canada or of Parliament itself. I should like him to come to us and say, "We have made a mistake." That would be fine, because we do not expect perfection. I should like him to say, "We have learned two things: we want to be more candid with Parliament; we want to have an Auditor General's report that will give the information Parliament needs to judge the effectiveness of a particular policy."

If the government would consider dealing with those two problems in the future, that would make many of us feel more confident about the operations of the government of this country.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak to this order, so my remarks will be rather disjointed, and for that I apologize to you in advance.

At the outset, I should like to congratulate Senator Roblin on his magnificent presentation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Everett: I know of no one in this house who can wrap his mind and his rhetoric around complicated financial matters as well as Senator Roblin does. He has done an outstanding job in this particular case.

First of all, in defence of the minister I should like to say that I asked the question I did because it occurred to me that he might not have been the minister responsible during the period when reports should have been made from Canadair to the government.

Also in his defence, he did in fact cause a comprehensive investigation to be made of the situation at Canadair and laid the report before Parliament. He gave us an opportunity to see the terrible mess the company is in.

Having said that in defence of the minister, I want to say that there is no excuse for what occurred. Senator Roblin is absolutely right when he says that the government cannot hide behind the fact that it was a passive investor. The government owned all of the shares and had complete control of the situation.

We ran into this problem in respect of CCI, Consolidated Computer Incorporated. The government eventually wrote off $125 million on that operation. When we spoke to the minister who was responsible for the loans to CCI, he told us that the government had appointed a board of directors of the loaning agency and that they were there to ensure that the government's interest was protected.

Those of us who have sat on boards of directors know full well that directors are really not in a position to protect shareholders from the technical depredations of management. They do have certain obligations, and directors are required to fulfil them, but to go into the intricate details of how a company is operating is not a function of a board of directors, and directors rarely exercise it.

It mystifies me that the government is saying that we were protected by appointing a board of directors. I do not think that is any protection at all. The main thing that was happening here was that the management was capitalizing development expenses. They were putting the expenses of the operation into the development of the plane itself in the hope that when the plane sold they would get those expenses back.

That is legitimate accounting. If somebody erects a new building, the realty taxes payable during the period of construction are capitalized into the cost of the building, as are other expenses, but it is a matter of degree as to how far you carry it. In this case, Canadair carried it to an extreme beyond belief. I share Senator Roblin's wonderment as to how the auditors could have produced a certificate year after year as they did. Perhaps there was some justification, but even if there were, it just shows one how far matters can go before it becomes apparent to the shareholders—the Canadian public—that there is a problem.

To give you an example, as I understand it in the last fiscal year prior to the one in which they reported the $1.4 billion loss, Canadair reported a profit of $3 million. Had they used the accounting standards that I gather they are using now, they would have reported a loss of $270 million. There is a big difference between a loss of $270 million and a profit of $3 million.

● (1540)

When we were confronted in the National Finance Committee with the Consolidated Computer loss of $125 million, we recognized at that time that investments in high technology can lose a lot of money very quickly. We realized that perhaps there had to be some ground rules on which these investments would be made by government, and, indeed, the subcommittee under the chairmanship of Senator Doody, is making a study of this matter. I do not believe that the problem is solved by the appointment of a board of directors, because if that were the case it would probably constitute unwarranted interference with management. It is fairly clear that outside auditors are not capable of doing it. Somebody has to do something in that regard, because we cannot go on losing this kind of money. The suggestion that the Auditor General should be authorized to do that sort of investigation is eminently fair and should be pursued.

As I understand it, what we have done is take the Canadian Development Investment Corporation and interpose that between the government and certain of the crown corporations. That is fine, but that in itself does not protect the public. What is essential is some means of getting at the facts. I think Senator Roblin is quite right in saying that the Auditor General must be given the power to make a detailed audit of all crown corporations and to report to Parliament.

What has happened here is a disgrace. It is an absolute disgrace that the government did not know what was going on, and we have to take the responsibility for it. To protect ourselves in this sort of situation is absolutely wrong because we made the mistake. What is really important here is not the mistake, as such, but that we put in place a mechanism which will ensure that it cannot happen again.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, Senator Everett very ably summarized this matter, but I am still at a loss to understand how, under any circumstances, the government could have taken this matter away from the Auditor General and handed it to outsiders from whom none of us could get any information and with regard to whom the Auditor General had no power whatsoever. This is an unbelievable situation. We are not here to criticize, but we would like to have it explained to us and then we can criticize.

Senator Everett: I do not think the Auditor General ever had the right to audit this particular type of crown corporation. I believe that is the issue that is now being raised by Senator Roblin and others, whether or not the power should be extended to the Auditor General to make that sort of audit.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to join Senator Everett in congratulating Senator Roblin on his speech. Like Senator Everett, I had no intention of participating in this debate, but I rise to comment on a remark Senator Everett made about the duties of boards of directors. This is a subject in which I have taken considerable interest.

Senator Everett is quite right when he says that a board of directors should not manage a company, and when he says they should not unduly interfere with management. There was a study by the Conference Board of Canada on the duties of boards of directors, and I took part in various discussions in connection with that study. Everyone unanimously agreed that boards of directors should monitor the performance of management, and that when they noted that something was not right, that the company was not performing well, they should take some action. In my opinion, that is where the Canadair board of directors fell down. They did not seem to alert the government to just exactly what management was doing, where it was falling down—for example, the way they were not taking proper write-offs, and so on.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, speaking to third reading of the borrowing authority bill, I have only a brief intervention to make.

First, respecting Canadair, as Senator Roblin hinted, we shall have another opportunity to discuss this matter, and I do not mean that therefore we should not seize this opportunity—

Senator Roblin: May I ask, what other opportunity?

Senator Frith: —to discuss the question of Canadair. Our opportunity will come, of course, when the CDIC legislation is before us, which is directly connected to Canadair, as has been pointed out by the honourable senators who have spoken. I do not intend to take the opportunity away from Senator Austin to reply—

Senator Roblin: He cannot.

Senator Frith: —to some of the allegations and statements that were made today, when the CDIC legislation is before us. Of course, as Senator Roblin has pointed out, he cannot speak again on third reading because he has already spoken.

I consider the observations made by Senator Roblin, Senator Everett and Senator Godfrey to be a very useful sort of "pre-trial" for our further discussions on Canadair, including the methods that were used to capitalize development costs, the role of the Auditor General, or further elaboration from Senator Austin as to why he feels it would be inappropriate to have the Auditor General audit in this case. I remember his mentioning, for example, the comprehensive audit that is done by the Auditor General. "Comprehensive" is a word used to describe what amounts to the benefit and wisdom of hindsight after certain decisions have been made. As Senator Roblin said, this is very useful for many organizations.

Senator Austin's position, as I understood it, is that if he is going to now admit, as has been suggested, that mistakes were made earlier, and is going to try to correct them by this more direct role of the government in the management of Canadair, and wants to recruit high-quality persons from the private sector to the board of directors to help by giving their best judgment on business issues at the time, the "comprehensive" audit will be an inhibition. Any of us who have served on a board of directors knows that all we can do is our best and that we can make mistakes.

I think the objection is—and he will elaborate on this, I am sure—that if we or others are asked to serve on the board of directors of a company of this kind and are asked to bring our best judgment to bear, we may be reluctant to play that role if we think that, two years later, someone with the benefit of hindsight can sit back and coolly judge our decisions and say that such-and-such a decision was not right at the time because it did not turn out to be right. No doubt he will want to speak at some length on this important question as to why the Auditor General's comprehensive audits are not as appropriate for Canadair or for CDIC as they might be in other cases.

Again, the subject is not closed. I make no criticism of its having been raised under the borrowing authority, but we shall have an opportunity to discuss it further when the CDIC legislation comes before us.

As for the rest of the debate on the borrowing authority, I think we all agree that borrowing authority bills are necessary for whatever the budget may be, that this bill is in correct form and is directly linked to the budget. Therefore, I ask honourable senators to support it on third reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Roblin: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

• (1550)

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, earlier today I presented an interim report on the main estimates during the Reports of Committees stage. I believe that will give us an opportunity to discuss the matter of estimates.

Therefore, I do not wish to speak to supplementary estimates (A), since much of what I would have said was covered in the debate on the borrowing bill. What I have not said, I propose to say during the debate on the report on the main estimates.

Accordingly, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, I move that this item be dropped from the Orders of the Day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this order is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5776)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

INTERIM REPORT ON THE ESTIMATES LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1984

June 14, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, were referred, presents, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, March 1, 1983, its interim report as follows:

The Subcommittee on Estimates, chaired by the Honourable Senator Doody, examined the expenditures proposed in the main estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

OVERVIEW

The Subcommittee held six sessions during which it heard evidence from the following witnesses:

Issue No.	Date	Witness
5	March 15, 1983	The Honourable Herb Gray, P.C., M.P. President of the Treasury Board
8	April 20, 1983	Mr. Michael McCracken President Informetrica Ltd.
10	April 28, 1983	Mr. Michael McCracken President Informetrica Ltd. Ms. Elizabeth Ruddick Chief of Forecasting Services Informetrica Ltd.
13	May 31, 1983	Mr. J.J. Noreau Deputy Secretary Program Branch Treasury Board
14	June 2, 1983	The Honourable Marc Lalonde, P.C., M.P. Minister of Finance
15	June 7, 1983	The Honourable Jean Chrétien P.C., M.P. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources

When reviewing the estimates the Subcommittee chose to focus on four themes. These were:

1) Part I of the Estimates: The Expenditure Plan.

2) Short and long term considerations of deficits.

3) Energy pricing in Canada and its impact on government expenditures and revenues.

4) Measuring the size of the Public Service.

PART I OF THE ESTIMATES, THE EXPENDITURE PLAN

When the main estimates, 1983-84 were tabled, the Minister indicated that there were two reference points for comparing this year's total outlays to those of 1982-83. These were:

1) the total value of the main estimates 1982-83 at the time of their presentation to parliament in 1982.

2) the value of total government ependitures for 1982-83 as of 1983-84 main estimates time.

Comparing main estimates 1983-84 to main estimates 1982-83, total outlays rose by 17.4 percent. However, comparing main estimates 1983-84 to the latest data for total outlays for 1982-83, expenditures rose from $81.1 billion to $88.9 billion; an increase of 9.6 percent. The Subcommittee expressed concern that the reasons of consistency, main estimates for any year should be compared to main estimates of the previous year. While the President of the Treasury Board indicated that the government attempts to include, under envelope reserves, the amounts necessary to finance future supplementary estimates, the Subcommittee noted that such forecasting in recent years has been underestimated and, therefore, the only basis for consistent comparisons was main estimates of one year with main estimates of the previous year.

The Subcommittee also expressed concern that in 1982-83, 59 percent of the estimates were statutory. For this fiscal year, 1983-84, the statutory component rose to 63 percent; this left a decline of 4 percent of total estimates available for government to meet contingencies or deal with emergencies without increasing total spending. This increase in the statutory component means that once Parliament approves the legislation, no authority from year to year is required from Parliament for expenditures based upon these statutes.

SHORT AND LONG TERM CONSIDERATION OF DEFICITS

In his testimony Mr. Michael McCracken identified four major areas of concern related to the financing of the deficit. These are:

1) Monetization of the deficit and its impact on inflation.

2) Financing the deficit and the "crowding out" of private sector borrowing.

3) Financing the deficit and its effect on the exchange rate.

4) The structural portion of the deficit and the size of the deficit compared to GNP.

1) Monetization of the Deficit and its Impact on Inflation

In his testimony, Mr. McCracken stated that:

> "We have seen real growth come down with lower [growth in the] money supply, and we would expect that out of symmetry that with some increase in the [growth in the] money supply you might get some real growth and not necessarily inflation."

But both Mr. McCracken and the Subcommittee felt that such symmetry is possible only if the lag between the growth in the money supply and real income is known. That is, if there is uncertainty about the length of time it takes for an increase in the money supply to have an affect on economic growth, then such increases can lead to inflation through two channels. Firstly, if inflationary expectations remain strong, expansion of the money supply may not lead to immediate economic growth and may rekindle inflation. Secondly, if economic growth begins as a result of other events between the time of the decision to expand the money supply and its effect on the growth in the economy, then such an expansionary monetary policy may cause the economy to overheat and further fuel inflation of prices and interest rates. While the Subcommittee recognized the importance of both factors, they expressed particular concern that inflationary expectations still remain high in the economy today. In light of this, Senators were perturbed by remarks by the Minister of Finance that the inflationary effects of expansionary monetary and fiscal policies were not a matter of concern at this time because of the low level of utilization of industrial capacity and the high level of unemployment. While the Subcommittee agreed with the Minister of Finance that there is a need to stimulate the economy, they expressed concern that an expansionary monetary policy in this economic climate will be inflationary.

2) Financing the Deficit and the "Crowding Out" of Private Sector Borrowing

None of the witnesses expressed any indication that this is a matter for concern at the present time. The Minister of Finance stated that the private sector is currently in a period of consolidation after facing sharp declines in corporate savings last year, and when this fact is combined with the high rate of saving that Canadians are generating it is unlikely that federal borrowing would put upward pressure on interest rates.

3) Financing the Deficit and its Effect on the Exchange Rate

The Subcommittee also heard testimony describing the relationship between deficit financing and the exchange rate. The witness testified that the relationship is highly complex and is intertwined with the rate of interest. If the deficit does not stimulate the economy by creating growth in real income, then it is likely to generate an increase in both inflation and interest rates. Inflation will put downward pressure on exchange rates while a rise in interest rates, relative to other countries' rates, will have the opposite effect. Overall, the effect of a deficit on the exchange rate is not clear but depends, among other factors, on the strength of the competing forces of inflation and rising interest rates.

The Subcommittee also expressed concern that the Canadian dollar may be under pressure to the extent that there is international concern that the Canadian deficit is out of control. The witnesses indicated that Canada, relative to other countries is not seriously burdened by its deficit. The Department of Finance in Federal Deficit in Perspective, released at the time of the Budget, reports that over the period 1975-1981, the deficit as a percent of GNP for the total Government Sector in Canada was 2.1 percent; this was lower than in the U.K., Germany, Italy or Japan. However, in 1982, the figure for Canada was 5.3 percent and was surpassed only by Italy. (see Federal Deficit in Perspective, Table C-1)

4) The Structural Portion of the Deficit and the Size of the Deficit Compared to GNP

The Subcommittee then examined the components of the deficit to determine whether there is any permanency to such deficits. Witnesses indicated that there are two main components of the deficit.

1) The first is the cyclical component brought on by weak economic activity which results in increased government requirements for social programs such as unemployment insurance and a fall-off in government revenues.

2) The second is a structural component resulting from a structural imbalance between expenditures and revenues. This is brought about by discretionary government action in the form of new programs such as those introduced in the recent budget and changes to existing programs such as unemployment insurance.

The Department of Finance reported that the actual federal deficit in 1982 as a percent of GNP was about 6 percent or $21.1 billion (see Federal Deficit in Perspective, p. 34, Table B-1). When the cyclical component is removed, (i.e. the value of automatic stabilizers such as unemployment insurance is dampened to account for troughs in the business cycle) the federal government was left with a structural deficit of about 3 percent of GNP. By 1987 the Department of Finance estimates that this structural deficit will decline to under 2 percent while the actual deficit will fall to under 3 percent.

But as Mr. McCracken pointed out, there remains a problem in defining how great the cyclical influences are on government revenues and expenditures. That is, to remove the cyclical influences, the government must have in mind some level of unemployment which is consistent with a level of economic activity without cyclical influence. The Department of Finance used high and low measures of unemployment (7.0 percent and 6.3 percent) when defining the cyclical component of the deficit in 1982 and indicated that these measures are not indicators of full employment but of an average rate of labour utilization. With the cyclical adjustments, the Department of Finance indicated that even then there remains a structural deficit which implies that Canada will be running a deficit even at 6.3 percent unemployment.

It is the view of the Subcommittee that deficits that contribute to real growth, and are declining relative to the size of GNP each year, are not a burden especially when the economy is operating below capacity. To achieve this objective government should continue its expenditures financed through deficits only as long as such expenditures remain more productive than private sector investments, and the economy is not in danger of overheating.

The Subcommittee also recognized that in considering the effect of a deficit, provincial and municipal budgets cannot be ignored and therefore assessments of deficits should take into account the budgets of all levels of government.

ENERGY PRICING IN CANADA AND ITS IMPACT ON GOVERNMENT REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

In examining energy pricing in Canada the Subcommittee began its review by focusing on two issues:

1) The three key price setting elements of the Canada/Alberta energy agreement,

2) The impact of stabilizing world oil prices on Canadian energy policy.

1) The Three Key Price Setting Elements of the Canada/Alberta Energy Agreement

(a) Prices for Conventional Old Oil

The governments of Canada and Alberta agreed that the overall average wellhead price of conventional old oil will increase from the August 1981 price of $18.75 per barrel, in accordance with the schedule shown in Table 1, but subject to the condition that the overall average field price of conventional old oil plus transportation costs to Montreal, adjusted for quality, will not exceed 75 percent of the actual international price.

Table 1

FIELD PRICES OF CONVENTIONAL OLD OIL

($/bbl)

	Increase	Level
Oct. 1, 1981	2.50	21.25
Jan. 1, 1982	2.25	23.50
July 1, 1982	2.25	25.75
Jan. 1, 1983	4.00	29.75
July 1, 1983	4.00	33.75
Jan. 1, 1984	4.00	37.75
July 1, 1984	4.00	41.75
Jan. 1, 1985	4.00	45.75
July 1, 1985	4.00	49.75
Jan. 1, 1986	4.00	53.75
July 1, 1986	4.00	57.75

For the purposes of the Agreement, "old oil" means oil recovered from a pool initially discovered prior to January 1, 1981.

(b) New Oil Reference Price

Effective January 1, 1982, a New Oil Reference Price (NORP) came into effect and applies to new oil. New oil is defined as conventional new oil in Alberta, synthetic oil and oil from Canada Lands. The NORP "base prices" are those shown in Table 2 under the heading "Delivered at Montreal".

Table 2

NEW OIL REFERENCE PRICE SCHEDULE

($/barrel)

	Delivered At Montreal	Estimated Wellhead
1982 January 1	47.30	45.92
July 1	50.60	49.22
1983 January 1	54.50	53.06
July 1	58.50	57.06
1984 January 1	61.70	60.18
July 1	65.00	63.48
1985 January 1	68.40	66.83
July 1	71.80	70.23
1986 January 1	75.70	74.08
July 1	79.10	77.48

The NORP (adjusted to the average quality of imported crude oil laid down at Montreal) is not to exceed 100 per cent of the actual international price.

(c) Natural Gas Prices

During the term of this Agreement, natural gas destined for domestic markets east of Alberta is priced at the Alberta border. The Alberta border price in effect on September 1, 1981 was to be increased by 25 cents per Mcf (1000 cubic feet) commencing February 1, 1982 and thereafter increased by 25 cents per Mcf every six months.

It was the intention of the federal government to establish the level of the tax on domestic sales of natural gas and gas liquids so that, taking into account a range of factors including gas transportation costs, the parity relationship between the wholesale price of natural gas at Toronto and the blended price of crude oil at Toronto will remain at approximately 65 percent.

2) The Impact of Stabilizing World Oil Prices on Canadian Energy Policy

Based on these price agreements, Mr. McCracken indicated that the federal government anticipated generating revenues between 1981 and 1986 of $38.8 billion. (This excludes corporate income tax.) As of the April budget, the expected value of these revenues had fallen to $13.8 billion. These data are summarized in Table 3, which was presented to the Subcommittee by Mr. McCracken.

Table 3
ESTIMATES OF FEDERAL ENERGY REVENUES 1981-86
(Billion $)

	"Agreement" Sept. 1981	NEP Update May 1982	Budget April 1983
Canadian Ownership Charge	1.5	1.6	5.7
Natural Gas and Gas Liquids Tax	13.8	4.1	2.6
Oil Export Tax*	0.7	1.6	0.8
Incremental Oil Revenue Tax	7.1	3.7	0.5
Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax	23.0	16.6	11.9
Petroleum Incentive Payments	(7.4)	(8.9)	(8.1)
Corporate Income Tax	22.0	16.9	N/A
Petroleum Compensation Charge	0.1	—	0.4
TOTAL	60.8	35.6	13.8
(excluding corporate tax)	38.8	18.7	13.8
Estimated Price of Imported Oil, Landed in Montreal (Cdn.$/barrel), 1986	$77.60	$56.54	$49.11 ***

* Excludes portion to provinces.
 Estimated on fiscal year basis.
 Estimated by Informetrica from Budget.

Source: Energy, Mines and Resources June 1982, The Fiscal Plan, Department of Finance, April 19, 1983, and Informetrica Ltd.

These estimates were calculated on the assumption that the pricing agreements for domestic old oil, new oil and natural gas would remain in effect until 1986 as would the respective ceilings.

The testimony of Ms. Ruddick and Mr. McCracken indicated that the government has little option but to try to renegotiate the Canada/Alberta agreement. They indicated that in doing so, there were two general options. The first is to give up the 65 percent gas/oil parity and attempt to maintain the parity for domestic/world oil near 75 percent by rolling back oil price increases previously agreed to between the federal government and Alberta. The second option is to raise the 75 percent domestic/world oil parity either to world prices or close to them, but leave the 65 percent gas-oil parity. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that there was a third option which calls for maintaining the 75 percent and 65 percent parity ratios by rolling back both gas and oil price increases previously agreed to by the governments of Canada and Alberta. However, the Minister warned the Subcommittee that any move to deregulate domestic oil prices and shift to world prices for oil, could mean an end to a "made in Canada" energy pricing policy.

The Subcommittee concurred with the testimony from Mr. McCracken that higher net-backs to the producers encourage the development of domestic energy supplies. However the Subcommittee had reservations about the price domestic consumers would pay for oil and gas when the greatest part of the price is going to governments in taxes. If consumer prices were to rise in proportion to increases in wellhead prices, provincial revenues (for both consuming and producing provinces from gas and oil sales) and federal revenues would no doubt rise. The Subcommittee expressed concern regarding the use of these revenues and whether government expenditures would prove to be any more productive than if the money were left in the hands of consumers.

MEASURING THE SIZE OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE

In examining the size of the public service, the Subcommittee found confusion as to which departments and agencies are included as part of the public service. The Subcommittee learned that there are two ways of classifying that part of the Public Service which is controlled by Treasury Board.

1) the part of the Public Service where total authorized person-years is controlled by Treasury Board and for whom the Treasury Board is the employer and bargaining agent;

2) the above part plus the additional part of the Public Service where the Treasury Board is not the bargaining agent.

Officials of the Treasury Board also testified that there are other organizations which are not included in the main estimates but which are included by Statistics Canada in reporting federal government employment. These organizations include:

1) the Bank of Canada

2) Commissions of Inquiry

3) Enterprises which do not require appropriations and in which the government owns more than 50 percent of the voted stock.

The Subcommittee expressed concern that the Treasury Board is not making use of productivity criteria in determining the authorized level of person-years for any program. Officials of the Treasury Board indicated that the introduction of productivity criteria is now the responsibility of the Comptroller General and this includes responsibility for the Operational Performance Measurement System (OPMS) which was introduced some years ago by Treasury Board to measure productivity in the public sector. When questioned, the Treasury Board officials did not know whether OPMS was effective or is still being employed nor did they have any information on the methods used or the progress made in measuring and improving productivity in the federal government.

The Subcommittee pointed out that while the government has indicated its concern for productivity in the private sector, it should also show its concern for productivity within the public sector. One way of doing this is to develop measures for productivity performance. As an example the Subcommittee noted that in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, The Accommodation Program of the Department of Public Works, 1978, it recommended that the productivity measure of "revenue dependency" be introduced for the Department of Public Works (DPW). Such a system would make DPW operate its realty activities on market criteria. The concept of "revenue dependency" put forward by the Committee was accepted by the Treasury Board and by the Department of Public Works as indicated by the Ministers and officials of those departments when they appeared before the Committee at its hearing on March 20, 1979. The Treasury Board officials advised the Subcommittee that the implementation of "revenue dependency" is proceeding following a test run of the concept in Halifax.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT
Chairman

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 15, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HON. MAURICE LAMONTAGNE, P.C.

FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to remind honourable senators that at 10.40 a.m. tomorrow a bus will be made available for their transportation to Notre Dame Basilica for the funeral of the late Senator Maurice Lamontagne.

I have invited the family and close friends of our dear colleague to my drawing room following the funeral, to afford senators the opportunity of offering their condolences to the family.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1983-84

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-164, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Leave is granted on the condition that the debate be adjourned this afternoon by a senator on this side and continued next week.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is the plan.

Motion agreed to.

THE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA, LIMITED

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I ask leave to have appended to today's Debates of the Senate my statement on the financial results for de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of statement see appendix, p. 5812.)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, for Hon. George C. van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, tabled the second report of the Subcommittee on National Defence entitled "Canada's Maritime Defence."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Lafond: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I regret having to present this report in page proof form, but the Canadian Government Printing Bureau defaulted on its commitments to deliver the finished product, initially last Friday, then yesterday and again this morning. The text, however, is intact, final and, I suggest, most valuable.

First, I should like to express my gratitude to members of the subcommittee who laboured so assiduously and successfully on this study. While the Senate itself suffered a grievous loss last December in the demise of Senator G. I. Smith, his loss was felt most seriously in the Subcommittee on National Defence. Honourable senators will recall that Senator Smith's last intervention in this chamber was on the first report of the subcommittee.

In preparing my notes for this presentation today, I went over what I had to say in similar circumstances on February 10 last year, when I tabled the first report of the Subcommittee on National Defence. I could repeat myself with more emphasis and more vehemence and it would be entirely appropriate. If the government would only give more heed to what we have to say, there might then be some hope of Canada's emerging from the sorry situation it has complacently settled into.

The story we have to tell is not a pleasant one; it is a sad one. We have been and are being terribly imprudent in ignoring elementary safeguards for the protection of our sovereignty, in peace as well as in conflict, and we are unacceptably deficient in honouring our commitments to our allies in the defence of our continent or of the alliance of democracies.

The most recent issue of the Canadian foreign affairs magazine International Perspectives carries a lead article by Professor Nils Orvik entitled "Canada needs defence against help." The title says it all, but I commend this article to honourable senators.

Help we would receive from our neighbours to the south, certainly, against any hostile act towards Canada. But if we were, as I believe we are close to being, in a situation of self-induced helplessness, such help would be to the detriment of much of the sovereignty for the assertion of which we had to go through such constitutional throes some months ago, as we were told.

It seems to me that of equal priority in peacetime as in time of conflict are the preservation of Canada's sovereignty and the creditable fulfilment of her commitments to her allies. It also seems to me that Canada's maritime forces have the major role in both endeavours.

Honourable senators, sovereignty is more than a concept to be repetitively proclaimed. It must be continuously asserted and exercised in tangible and visible fashion. Our geography dictates that this be done, particularly in our Arctic and our extended sea frontier. We must keep in mind that encroachments, from friend or foe, on our sovereignty can easily be invited through inertia. This is a task our maritime forces are best fitted to execute efficiently and visibly, given the manpower and the equipment.

● (1410)

With respect to the purely military scenario in peace and in war, our geography again dictates that our first priority, for purely selfish reasons as well as for the reasons implicit in assuming our responsibilities to our alliances, is keeping the sea lanes and our harbours open and operative. This again is a task only our maritime forces are fitted to execute competently if they are provided with the manpower and the equipment.

The conclusions and recommendations in this report are not revelations. Much of the testimony before our subcommittee has been public, and the conclusions have been obvious. It is only normal that in recent weeks commentators have drawn them and published them. This is all to the good, since it is your subcommittee's basic purpose to call the attention of Canadians to just how shaky our defences are.

A public debate on defence policy is required now, so that the people of Canada can be thoroughly acquainted with just how much defence they do possess, and make a rational decision about whether that much is good enough.

If the Canadian people decide, and I think they will, that their defence has been allowed to slip below an acceptable level, they would be prepared to make available resources to rectify the situation.

[Senator Lafond.]

We are fully aware of the fiscal and financial difficulties currently confronting our national government. These difficulties severely constrain what can be done to bring about improvements in any area of national policy. Nevertheless, the time has come to abandon the pretense that all is well with our armed forces; to place the facts before the public and, following a free, frank and open discussion, to set a course for the next two dangerous decades.

Canada, one of the world's greatest industrial powers, one of the resource-rich nations of the world, and one of the world's few democracies, has put this incredible patrimony at risk through lack of attention to its defence posture and lack of support for its men and women under arms. I am confident the people of Canada would agree with this conclusion if the facts were placed squarely before them.

I suggest the best way open to us to achieve this is to have a thorough debate on the substance of our report in this chamber. It is reasonably succinct and concise, and should be read thoroughly by all honourable senators. We have endeavoured to spell out the state of our Maritime Command, to identify the tasks we expect it to perform, to define the perils, to suggest steps to counter them and to establish their cost.

I also suggest there is no such thing as lack of interest in defence matters, and there should not be. All honourable senators should put on record their views, observations or reservations on the protection of our territory, our peace and our way of life. I am sure our colleagues who are members of the subcommittee or I, when closing the debate, will be pleased to present explanations or reply to questions.

The Leader of the Government can assume that we would expect, as with our first report, a response from the government to be placed on the record of this chamber before this debate is concluded. I have already intimated as much to the Minister of National Defence.

Your subcommittee now wishes to pursue its inquiries by examining Air Command, with particular attention to continental air defence, detection and resistance, and strategic and tactical transportation of personnel and equipment.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a) moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation hereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 20, 1983, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (1415)

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as we discussed yesterday, the adjournment until Monday evening at 8.00 o'clock is in accordance with the plan we launched then. It is that the Senate adjourn until 2 o'clock each day, except for Mondays, until it adjourns for the summer recess. So, we shall be sitting at 8 p.m. on Monday, at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, and at 2 p.m. on Wednesday.

We hope to have Royal Assent on Wednesday. Then, if there are no further bills expected or business before the Senate, we shall adjourn until the following Monday or Tuesday. If we decide to adjourn until Monday, we shall adjourn until Monday at 8 o'clock in the evening rather than at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Would that be Monday, June 27?

Senator Frith: Yes. I say that so all chairmen of committees and honourable senators are aware that that does depart from the practice of leaving Wednesdays free for committee meetings. The plan is to sit at 2 o'clock so that, if we require further debate on a particular piece of legislation coming from the other place, or on reports of committees dealing with legislation, we shall have the evening in our pocket, so to speak.

Summarizing, except for Monday sittings, when we will likely sit at 8 o'clock in the evening, we shall sit at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Senator Flynn: I agree with the proposal made by the deputy leader. However, I suppose he is not in a position to tell us anything more regarding the program the government hopes to accomplish before we adjourn, as was suggested yesterday by the deputy leader, on June 30, if that is still the objective.

I wonder if we can be told what bills are likely to come before the Senate that the government considers must be approved by Parliament before June 30, or before the summer adjournment.

● (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have very little to add to what I said yesterday. As is implied in what Senator Flynn said, several priority bills have now cleared the other place—namely, the borrowing authority bill, the supply bill and Canagrex. We know that the bill relating to the Crow rate has some priority, and I shall have more information next week as to its degree of priority. As I understand it, that leaves us with the bill relating to the sports pool—

Senator Flynn: That is the one I wanted to talk about.

Senator Frith: There are bills that fall into two categories: those that are controversial but that the government might want passed by June 30; and those that are non-controversial. I hope I will have more detail some time next week.

Senator Flynn: My understanding is that the only controversial bills are those relating to the Crow and the sports pool.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): There is nothing controversial about them.

Senator Flynn: Probably the reason they have become controversial is because they have been prepared by the former Leader of the Government, Senator Perrault. I understand that with reference to the bill relating to the Crow rate, the government's objective might be only to have it referred to committee, and that we would not have to deal with it before the summer adjournment. Does the deputy leader have any information on that?

Senator Frith: Not yet.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—USER FEES AND EXTRA BILLING

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development. Has the government decided, as indicated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to introduce legislation in the fall to make user fees and extra billing in medicare illegal?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, the government is considering legislation respecting our medicare program. When a decision is made, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will announce it.

Senator Murray: The Minister of National Health and Welfare has taken it upon herself to make such an announcement in New York, namely, that the federal government plans to introduce a new Canada Health Act in the fall that will make user fees and extra billing illegal. Is that the intention of the government or not?

Senator Austin: I will have to let the minister's statement, as quoted by Senator Murray—if it is accurate—stand on the record. I have no comment to make with respect to it, except to say that I shall ask her what point she intended to make in that speech in New York.

Senator Murray: May I ask the minister whether it is the position of the government that there is some authority under which the Government or the Parliament of Canada could impose these conditions on the provinces, given the constitutional jurisdiction, which he is aware of, and the fact that any intervention by the federal government in this field has always been taken after negotiation and agreement with the provinces?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been conducting discussions with provincial health ministers in such provinces as Alberta, Ontario and New Brunswick, and those consultations, I suppose, will continue. It is the position of the government—and the matter has been discussed in this chamber—that the universality of medicare is a policy which will be protected by this government. Whether legislation will be introduced in the fall making amendments that enhance that universal program is something I will be glad to report on if I am in a position to do so, or that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will report on when she is in a position to do so.

I should like to mention that I very much welcome the public position taken by the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party on universality and medicare. It is a statement that shows sensitivity and awareness of an issue that is of concern to all Canadians.

● (1425)

Senator Murray: The minister should not be at all surprised by the position taken by the Conservative Party, since medicare was brought in as a result of a decision taken by the Diefenbaker government following the royal commission of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall.

Senator Austin: What I should like to hear from Senator Murray and other senators on his side is some tone of approbation with respect to medicare. What I heard in the last exchange I had with some of his colleagues was a suggestion that user-pay and extra billing were to be permitted activities under a national and universal medicare program.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Who said that?

Hon. Martial Asselin: Name him.

Senator Austin: Senator Donahoe said it very clearly.

Senator Asselin: No, he did not say that.

Senator Murray: The minister should read the record and should have listened more carefully when the discussion was taking place in this chamber.

I was interested in the minister's statement a few moments ago that discussions have been under way between his colleague, the Honourable Monique Bégin, and the provinces on this matter. I noted that the Minister of State for Social Development mentioned Alberta in particular. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Alberta Minister of Hospitals and Medical Care, the Honourable David Russell, that:

> It does get a bit frustrating. She—

Meaning Miss Bégin.

> —and the prime minister say there are ongoing discussions about the new health act, but we haven't heard about them.

would the Minister of State for Social Development tell us when, where and how these discussions have taken place without the participation of the Province of Alberta?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, the quotation Senator Murray has just read is somewhat puzzling to me because I have seen, on the press record, acknowledgements by Mr. Russell that he has met with Miss Bégin within the last four weeks to discuss the question of user-pay and extra billing, and that he is aware of deep ideological differences between himself and Miss Bégin over these questions.

Miss Bégin, in turn, has said in the press that these discussions will continue in the hope that these differences may be settled, but that the federal government will not step away from its commitment to universal medicare.

Honourable senators, I will be pleased to review the various press statements on this subject to assess whether I am being too hard on Mr. Russell. Perhaps he does not intend to introduce user charges.

Senator Murray: I would ask the Leader of the Government whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare was speaking for the government when she said in New York yesterday that she will introduce a new Canada Health Act in the fall, which will make user fees and extra billing illegal.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the answer to that is very simple. It is that the Minister of State for Social Development has already answered the question.

Senator Murray: No, he has not. I am asking the Leader of the Government, whose responsibility it is in this chamber to tell us what the policy of the government is, whether one of his colleagues was speaking for the government. I want to know whether Miss Bégin spoke for the government in giving that undertaking in New York yesterday.

Senator Olson: The reply that was given by the Minister of State for Social Development was completely accurate. It was to the effect that he would examine that; and, furthermore, that when announcements are to be made for and on behalf of the government, the minister directly responsible—in this case, Miss Bégin—will make them.

In the meantime, if Senator Murray is attempting to draw either Senator Austin or me into making statements—

Senator Flynn: Speak for yourself.

Senator Olson: —on government policy based on newspaper reports, I think he should do what he has reminded us to do on a number of occasions, and that is, look at the rules. It is improper to ask the question; and it is even more improper, under citation 357, to answer the question.

Senator Murray: Would the Leader of the Government obtain from Miss Bégin's office, or perhaps the Consul General in New York, a copy of the speech made in New York yesterday and have it tabled in the Senate so that we can all see it and ask further questions on this subject?

Senator Olson: The Minister of State for Social Development has already given Senator Murray an undertaking that he will look into that matter. I believe that he is also going to have an interpretation from Madam Bégin, which will be far more profound than the interpretation put on some newspaper report by Senator Murray.

• (1430)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The suggestion that the user fee could be made illegal makes it necessary that it be attached to some jurisdiction of the federal government. I do not see how this can be done other than by making the charging of user fees, or even the adoption by a legislature of legislation providing for user fees, a criminal offence. Is that what the minister had in mind when she mentioned that she would make user fees illegal? Would it become a criminal offence for a doctor to charge a user fee or even for provincial legislation to provide for such a fee?

Senator Olson: Far be it from me to give a former Minister of Justice and a long-time expert on rules and the constitutional division of powers either an interpretation or legal advice on what is constitutionally possible. I could go into some discourse—

Senator Flynn: You win, you win.

Senator Olson: —as to the constitutional basis on which the federal government can make legislation respecting the protection of the universality of medicare, but I am sure that my honourable friend knows all of that even better than I do.

SPORT

WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES—FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I was in Edmonton earlier this week and heard some concern being expressed about the funding for the University Games which will be held there this summer. Can the minister assure the people of Alberta that the federal government is doing its share to ensure the success of those games?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to state most emphatically that, largely because of the outstanding efforts of the Honourable Senator Olson, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, a generous amount of federal government funding has been made available for the second largest multi-sport international event in the entire world—the World University Games to be held in Edmonton between July 1 and July 11.

Honourable senators, this is a very important athletic event. Many Canadians do not, as yet, fully appreciate the size and scope of the games. At this event, 98 countries and over 4,500 athletes are expected to compete. The Soviet Union and China will each be sending more than 300 athletes to participate. Together with representations from other nations, they will form part of the largest sports delegation from abroad that this country has ever hosted. Nine hundred media representatives will be covering the event. The Canadian team consists of 250 athletes, all of whom are hopeful that they will go on from Edmonton to the Olympic Games in Los Angeles. The World University Games are second only to the Olympics in size and scope.

Yesterday in Ottawa there was a flame ceremony held on Parliament Hill. The University of Ottawa and Carleton University played key roles in conveying the games torch to Ottawa, maintaining its continuity, and relighting it for successive runners to convey it all the way to Edmonton in time for the opening of the Games on July 1.

I urge honourable senators to plan to go to Edmonton to attend this outstanding Canadian-hosted event. The work done by our colleague in the Senate, Senator Olson, and by many others, including those of different party affiliations, deserves the support of all of us. This is an opportunity to indicate to our Canadian athletes that we appreciate all they have done to train for this outstanding event. Honourable senators, this invitation to Edmonton is not a partisan or regional one. It is extended to all Canadians, because sport transcends our political and regional differences.

In terms of federal government investment in the Universiade '83, may I say to Senator Lucier that the federal government is providing a total estimated amount of approximately $14 million to cover direct and indirect costs. We regard this as an investment. The thousands of people who will be attending the games will leave behind in Canada a great deal of purchasing power, and the jobs created will be totally consistent with our program to increase employment during this time of economic stress.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is a good commercial.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister is advocating that as many people as possible attend, and in view of the fact that Air Canada has just asked for an increase of 5 per cent because they cannot get enough people to fly at special fares, has the minister had any consultation with Air Canada to allow special rates for people from the other end of the country to attend the games in Edmonton?

• (1435)

Senator Perrault: Senator Marshall has asked a good question. I hope that there will be some domestic charters put in place to enable citizens from, for example, Newfoundland to come to Alberta. May I offer this suggestion to Senator Marshall? We have a good rail system. VIA Rail is attempting to attract an increasing clientele. Here is an opportunity for Senator Marshall and other citizens of the great province of Newfoundland and other Atlantic provinces to board the VIA Rail train in those provinces and spread purchasing power all across Canada on their way to Alberta. That will help Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and all the other provinces. Let us make this a summer when thousands of Canadians will plan to see Canada, and that includes the great Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Senator Marshall: Could the minister explain how the people of St. John's will get to Sydney to get on that train? Will they walk the 560 miles from St. John's to Port aux Basques, and probably miss the games?

Senator Perrault: There were many suggestions at the Conservative Party convention at the weekend that many Conservatives are capable of walking on water. If this is true, this may be one way for some Canadians to get across to the mainland.

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is a good suggestion.

Senator Flynn: We were trying to copy Trudeau.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HONOURABLE DANIEL MacDONALD MEMORIAL BUILDING, CHARLOTTETOWN, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—LAYING OF CORNERSTONE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, before I refer to another event, which, in the immortal words of Senator Perrault, is also non-partisan, I can tell him that, while the Conservative Party is not at the moment walking on water, there are very good portents that we are walking very definitely upward, and I hope he will be prepared for that.

I wish to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning an event that took place in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, this morning, namely, the laying of the cornerstone of the Honourable Daniel MacDonald Memorial Building, which will be the Department of Veterans Affairs centre for the whole of Canada. I remember many months ago suggesting, as my colleague, Mr. McMillan, did in the other house, that nothing could be more appropriate than naming that fine building after that most outstanding minister, Mr. MacDonald, who was a colleague of mine for many years, and a friend for longer.

I hope the minister will convey to those concerned, if there are any, that I, as a member of the upper house, as a former colleague and as a representative of Charlottetown for over a quarter of a century, would very much like to have been at that opening today. However, since I heard about it only a few minutes before noon on Monday, since Air Canada had no space and so many people were wisely wanting to go to Prince Edward Island, since Senator Perrault's suggestion about VIA Rail would not get me there in time, and since although I once won a walkathon of 20 miles I would not trust myself to walk, I feel great regret that I could not make it. I would like to have been there with Senator Phillips and some of our colleagues from the lower house. I do not see Senator Bonnell here, and I cannot say where he is or for where he is destined.

I want it conveyed that we believe that the designation of that building for our dear colleague, an outstanding Islander, was one of the finest things that this government has done, a government not distinguished for fine things. However, in this case it has done a fine job. I regret that, because of either ineptitude, lack of consultation, slow planning, or whatever, I was not able to be there. Certainly it had nothing to do with a lack of desire to be there on that most auspicious occasion.

• (1440)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to thank the honourable senator for his kind and appropriate remarks. I was going to say "generous" remarks but I am sure he will understand if I say that the word "appropriate" is more suitable on this occasion with respect to our colleague, the late Honourable Daniel MacDonald. I concur with the honourable senator. The government recognized some time ago the contribution made by Mr. MacDonald to Canada and, in particular, the Department of Veterans Affairs and the functions of that department. It is therefore appropriate to name that building after him. I regret if there was insufficient time for the honourable senator to make travel arragements in connection with that event. I do not have sufficient knowledge of the situation to give a more adequate reply to the question, but I appreciate the honourable senator's comments regarding our colleague.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, further to Senator Macquarrie's comments and the courteous reply of the Leader of the Government, I should like to ask the leader if he plans to have this matter of invitations looked into, as there may be other incidents of a similar nature that require examination. Recently in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada's most modern hotel was completed and opened. I understand that approximately 600 guests were invited to the opening ceremony of that hotel, which is an adornment not only of St. John's but also of Canada as a whole. I understand that no senators from Newfoundland were invited to attend that opening. Most of us receive far more invitations to events of that kind than we can attend, but it seems to me that on such a special occasion it would have been a matter of common courtesy to extend an invitation to the Newfoundland members of Parliament of both houses. I am sure that some of us would have been happy to have attended that function.

When the Leader of the Government is looking into the matter raised by Senator Macquarrie, perhaps he will also inquire into this matter, because there is a principle involved.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will see that the honourable senator's comments are conveyed to those who made the arrangements.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PERFORMING RIGHTS FEES

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government, who has been kind enough to keep me up to date on developments concerning agricultural fairs and performing rights fees. Recently there has been some publicity concerning the increase in performing rights fees for all concerts and performances. It is my understanding the federal government has imposed an increase of 600 per cent on performing rights fees paid in respect of any public concert or performance. People in the concert promotion business complain that—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It was not imposed by the federal government.

Senator Nurgitz: A performing rights fee is charged in accordance with a tariff approved by the government by regulation.

Senator Frith: But it is not the government that imposes it.

Senator Nurgitz: No, I am sorry. The government does not impose it. In any event, the increase is now 600 per cent, and concert promoters indicate that because of the increase concerts will not be performed in other than the six or seven major cities in Canada. Smaller centres such as Moncton, Saskatoon and Regina are concerned about this matter. I should like to know whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is looking into the situation and what the government proposes to do about the matter.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will ensure that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is advised of this matter, and I shall make further inquiries in response to the latter part of the question as to what is in process and what has been done.

THE SENATE

REFORM—GREEN PAPER—APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE BEFORE SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The Minister of Justice is expected to appear before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Reform of the Senate of Canada tomorrow afternoon. On that occasion is he going to table in committee the green paper of the government on Senate reform?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I feel sure that my honourable friend can patiently await tomorrow afternoon's committee meeting. He knows that the Minister of Justice, the minister responsible for this matter, will appear before the committee, and no doubt he will have something to say, otherwise he would not have requested an appearance. I am sure that my honourable friend would not want me to scoop my colleague.

Senator Asselin: Then I will direct my question to the joint chairman of the committee, Senator Molgat.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I am living in the same fond hope as Senator Asselin, who has asked on a number of occasions when the green paper might be tabled. I have the same expectation as the honourable senator and hopefully we will be rewarded tomorrow afternoon, when the minister is scheduled to appear before the committee at 3.30 p.m.

Senator Asselin: The green paper should have been tabled in the Senate before being tabled in the committee.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not accept that interpretation. I believe that both houses of Parliament passed a motion delegating to a committee authority to consider a number of aspects of Senate reform. If it was not passed unanimously, the motion that we delegate to the committee the responsibility for looking into that matter was certainly passed by a majority vote. It is certainly proper for anyone to appear before a body that has been properly and legally set up and has received delegated authority from this house to receive submissions.

Senator Asselin: I do not share your view.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the Leader of the Government as a member of the Government of Canada. Is the government proposing to publish its green paper by presenting it to a committee of Parliament before presenting it to either house of Parliament?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the question again arises as to whether or not the so-called green paper, that was discussed briefly in this house some time ago, is going to be presented to the committee tomorrow. As a member of the government, I believe the Minister of Justice will attend that committee meeting and will make some comments regarding the subject matter that is before the committee. I believe it is entirely proper for him to make his own views and that of the government known to the committee.

Senator McIlraith: I do not think that reply deals with the point I raised. I too am interested in seeing the green paper and I am pleased that it is being presented to the committee tomorrow. There is no question about that. My point is as to whether the government, in its area of responsibility, is proposing to table that government document or have it presented to the committee before it is presented to either house of Parliament. I am wondering whether the government is proposing to table it in the other place tomorrow afternoon before the committee meets.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not quite sure how to answer that question, because I am uncertain of the significance of the difference between presenting information to the chamber and presenting it to a body that has been authorized by both chambers to receive it. That is where the difficulty lies in giving a reply to the question.

● (1450)

Certainly, the Minister of Justice, as the leading minister with respect to this matter for and on behalf of the government, will have something to say. Obviously, the presentation will be made to a body that has been set up jointly by both houses. It seems to me, in the circumstances, that such a proposal should be placed before that body.

REFORM—REPORT OF DELEGATION TO AUSTRALIA

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. It has to do with the remarks he made during his intervention on the inquiry, including those about his trip to Australia and an elected Senate. On re-reading the deputy leader's remarks I was surprised to note that there are no objections or contrary remarks by anybody in the Australian Senate or the Australian government on an elected Senate. During the deputy leader's visit to Australia, did he hear any comments against an elected Senate?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I do not recall that there were, but I am not in a position to say that there were not. I will have to think about it.

Senator Marshall: I have heard from different individuals that to run for the Senate in Australia a person has to appear before a committee of representatives of the Senate and representatives of the party for which he or she intends to run, and must abide by the policies of that particular party. In other words, senators cannot be independent in their positions but must abide by the parties' traditions and policies or they will not be allowed to run for the Senate.

Senator Frith: On reflection, I can tell honourable senators that while in Australia I bought a cassette recorder and taped the interviews we had. The quality of the taping is not extremely good in some cases, but I have had those tapes transcribed. Both the tapes and the transcriptions are available to any honourable senator who wishes to review them. In addition, we obtained a film which explains the voting system for the House of Representatives and the Senate and, in particular, how they count the ballots for proportional representation and it, too, is available. I am sorry if I have not mentioned these items before. I ought to have.

As to Senator Marshall's second question, in essence he is correct although, as I understand it, he is not in all respects. Rather than appearing before a committee, I recall it is much more like the U.S. system of primaries. In other words, there is in place party machinery which enables a person to ask to be put on a party ticket. So there is more involved than merely being interviewed. The parties do push very hard for their tickets. It is also true that one of the major parties—and I cannot remember which one but I will get the information—requires the contestant to vote the way the party wants him or her to vote, and to agree to resign if he or she refuses to vote with the party. The other party does not have the formal requirement. From what I remember, it is unusual for someone in either case not to vote according to the party line.

In my speech in the chamber, in the paper I wrote on policy options and in my testimony before the committee, I stressed that I do not like the very strict party control element of the Australian system. It is something we should not borrow, and I do not think such a system would result in Canada if we were to adopt the model I am proposing.

Hon. Martial Asselin: It is not decided yet.

Senator Frith: Of course, it is not decided. I am giving my best opinion, and another honourable senator's opinion is just as good as mine. I may be wrong; I am just not in doubt.

Senator Asselin: Is it your opinion or the government's opinion?

Senator Frith: The reason for my opinion is that there does not seem to have been a tradition of regional parties in Australia. The voting patterns in Australia follow very closely the two major parties and show a strong loyalty to them. Canada does have a tradition of regional parties. There have always been some parties in the federal system that represent regional interests, and that is why I think that if we had non-simultaneous elections for senatorial regions on the basis of proportional representation, the system would evolve in a Canadian way and not in the Australian way. That is my prediction based on past voting patterns.

Senator Marshall: What you have just said confirms my opinion that such a proposal is wrong for Canada. It is ridiculous.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. I suppose that when he was in Australia he had the opportunity to study the report of the committee of the Victoria government on second chambers, and read about the results of that report in the April 1983 issue of The Parliamentarian. One of the conclusions of that committee was that an upper house was no longer valid because the party system dominated both houses to the same extent and, therefore, issues were not judged on their merits but on political considerations alone. If under the deputy leader's proposition such a system should eventuate in Canada, does he not see that inevitably there would be no need for a second chamber?

Senator Frith: As I have said on many occasions, if the House of Commons and the Senate are simply carbon copies of each other, a strong argument can be made for the case that both chambers are not required. I think an argument can also be made for the opposite. However, I argue that the chambers will not be carbon copies of each other if one is elected on the basis of ridings, the other on the basis of proportional representation by regions and non-simultaneously. I believe that the two chambers are necessary and that, if there were elections on that basis, they would not be carbon copies of each other, for all the reasons I mentioned in my article, my speech and my testimony.

As far as the Victoria situation is concerned, I remember discussing that topic in Melbourne and I informed the people to whom I was speaking that Canadians also felt that insofar as state or provincial legislatures are concerned there was not a need for two houses. I don't think the case that is made for a state or a province has any application at the federal level.

Frankly, I believe that whether senators are elected or not elected, every federal state, particularly a large one, needs a bicameral system.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, may I add that the committee investigating this matter in Australia did not confine its investigation to the state upper houses but included the federal upper house, and that all those upper houses are elected by proportional representation, and that, notwithstanding those facts, its judgment is that they are mere carbon copies of each other.

● (1500)

Senator Frith: Their history is against that. That is not what has happened. Since 1949 they have elected their Senate by proportional representation, not by preferential ballot, as they did before 1949.

What you say may be true with respect to the situation before 1949. The upper house was totally controlled by one party or another, usually by the one which had even the slightest margin of the popular vote because of the system. However, since 1949, when they went to proportional representation, it is not common for the government to control the Senate. It is more common for the government not to control the Senate. So the premise for that argument is entirely wrong.

CANAGREX BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few points with respect to Bill C-85, or what is commonly known as the Canagrex bill. I am pleased to speak in support of this legislation which will establish an agency designed to promote, facilitate and engage in exporting agricultural and food products.

Canagrex has long been advocated by major farm organizations, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers' Union and the Canadian Horticultural Council. During the Commons and Senate standing committee hearings on Canagrex, those groups were among those who came forth with their comments on the bill.

As a result of the suggestions made during the Commons standing committee hearings, a number of substantive amendments were made to the original bill, and I believe they provide the kinds of safeguards and guarantees needed to ensure that Canagrex will be the loyal servant of the agri-food industry.

I would now like to go through the highlights of this much-needed legislation.

Canagrex will be a corporation consisting of 11 directors, including the chairman of the board, the vice-chairman and the president of the corporation. The majority of the 11-person board of directors will be chosen from the private sector.

The board shall direct and manage the corporation, which will have a staff of about 20. The president is the chief executive officer, and his or her duties are assigned by the board.

While it is not part of the legislation, since the minister already possesses this power, the Minister of Agriculture intends to establish a policy advisory committee which will include representatives from all parts of the Canadian agri-food industry, and it will advise him on the operation of Canagrex and the long-term strategy it should follow.

Turning to the purposes and powers of the corporation, the basic role, as indicated in the title, is to promote, facilitate and, in a limited manner, engage in the export of agricultural and food products and services.

Working in co-operation with, at the request of, or jointly with other governments, Canadian companies or Canadian producer organizations, Canagrex will have a wide variety of assistance tools. Canagrex may purchase, package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell agricultural and food products. It may undertake promotion, publicity and improvement of quality and variety. It will be able to enter into contracts with individual Canadians, firms, marketing boards, and so on, and act as their agent. It may enter into contracts with foreign governments, enter into joint ventures, and buy or lease property such as warehouses or containers. It may provide loans and guarantees.

On that last point I want to stress that it is often difficult or impossible to get loans for agricultural exports, mainly because of their perishability. It takes a specialized agency to know how to handle this kind of export, and that's part of the reason Canagrex is needed, especially in promoting new business in agricultural products that does not exist today.

Canagrex will not engage in paying subsidies as a means of getting contracts or products, and it will not duplicate the work of the Canadian Dairy Commission or the Canadian Wheat Board, although those agencies may, in some cases, seek Canagrex's assistance. Where appropriate, Canagrex shall make use of existing federal government programs.

Canagrex will prepare for the minister and the Governor in Council a three-year corporate plan which will be binding on the corporation. The annual corporate plan will be kept confidential to protect the business interests of the corporation, but a summary will be tabled with the minister's annual report.

Each year, through the minister, Canagrex will approach Parliament for an appropriation to cover its capital and operating budgets. Its request will be based on the three-year corporate plan, and a summary of the capital budget will be tabled in Parliament.

Honourable senators, since the original bill was introduced, amendments have been made which will impose extremely thorough safeguards on the corporation, protecting the interests of both the industry and the taxpayer.

In response to the concerns raised during committee hearings, we amended the original bill to make it perfectly clear that Canagrex would only engage in exports in co-operation with, or jointly with, or at the request of, governments, Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards, associations or other Canadian enterprises and individuals carrying on business in Canada.

Another amendment which the minister has made is to have the entire performance of the corporation referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture for report and review five years from the date Canagrex is created.

Other amendments were made to prevent conflict of interest and to allow for an annual comprehensive audit.

The safeguards that have been built into the legislation, plus the corporation's relatively modest budget of $12.3 million over three years, ensure that the private sector will have nothing to lose and much to gain from this new initiative.

Why do we need Canagrex? I would say that the chief reason is that Canadian producers, processors and dealers—especially the smaller ones—need the kinds of assistance and services that Canagrex will provide. Competing countries have these tools at their disposal now, and we need them as well, if we are to succeed in expanding the market for the agri-food sector. Canagrex will also serve as a central guide for prospective foreign buyers and exporters and will generally act as a catalyst in bringing the two parties together.

In asking for your support of this bill, I would just repeat that it does have the support of the vast majority of people in the agri-food industry. They know that exports are responsible for about 40 per cent of farm cash receipts, and that future growth of the industry will depend in large part on how successful we are in expanding the volume and diversity of agricultural exports.

We believe that Canagrex can help to assure the success of that process.

In conclusion, I would ask honourable senators to support this bill so that the enabling legislation—bearing in mind that not all pieces are put in place at the beginning—can be enacted to set Canagrex up to respond to some of the needs and efficiencies that are now apparent relative to other countries, and so that we can put together the kind of structure we need to enhance Canada's export trade in agri-food products.

I hope honourable senators will support the bill on that basis and because it is badly needed in the agricultural sector.

● (1510)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would like to ask which products are covered by the bill, and I am particularly interested in the canola or rapeseed products. Are these products covered under the Canagrex provisions?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there are a number of these products, including the ones indicated by Senator Phillips, that are not at the moment under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and some are, and I think it is clear in the bill that any commodity that is now being handled by the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission, for that matter, are exempted or excluded from the provisions of Bill C-85.

Hon. Martial Asselin: On behalf of Senator Roblin, I move the adjournment of debate.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would plead with Senator Asselin to move through second reading so that we can send this bill to committee to be dealt with there. It did not come as any surprise to honourable senators opposite that this bill was coming up today. It was well known that it was passed by the House of Commons on Monday last. It was also well known, from the discussion yesterday when I asked for leave to proceed with second reading, and through some discussions and negotiations across the floor, that we agreed to proceed with second reading today. I would therefore plead with Senator Asselin and others to allow the bill to be read the second time so that the committee can proceed with it.

The committee has already pre-studied the bill, and there will certainly be an opportunity in committee, and even on third reading, for Senator Roblin and any other honourable senator to make his or her comments respecting it.

Senator Asselin: Senator Roblin is the opposition spokesman respecting this bill, and unfortunately he cannot be here this afternoon. However, I promise the Leader of the Government that we will not be opposing second reading.

There has been a pre-study of this bill and, therefore, the committee will not take too long to consider it and report it back to the Senate, with Royal Assent perhaps taking place next week. I think the Leader of the Government can take my word that we will not unduly delay passage of the bill. However, Senator Roblin cannot be here this afternoon. Senator Phillips, who would like to speak on second reading, is not ready to do so this afternoon. I promise the government that we will do our best to proceed with second reading as soon as possible.

Senator Phillips: On the matter raised by Senator Olson, I would refer him to yesterday's discussion in which I said that we may not sit on Thursday afternoon. That means that this matter will extend into next week. On Monday there is a reception for Their Royal Highnesses, The Prince and Princess of Wales. I would ask him when the bill would go to committee, since the committee cannot meet before Tuesday in any event.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments made by both Senator Asselin and Senator Phillips. I think we can agree to the proposal that Senator Asselin has made. I take it that we can expect to deal with the bill on Monday evening at 8 o'clock, so that we can refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, and perhaps the committee can commence its consideration on Tuesday morning. If that is understood, I am ready to accede to Senator Asselin's request.

Senator Asselin: That is acceptable to us, and we will do our best to be ready for Monday evening.

On motion of Senator Asselin, for Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1983-84

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-164, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before you is the Appropriation Bill No. 2, 1983-84 and provides for the release of the balance of the main estimates for 1983-84 amounting to some $23.6 billion, plus the whole of supplementary estimates (A) 1983-84, amounting to almost $1.4 billion. If you add these two amounts together, $23.6 billion and just a little less than $1.4 billion, the total is just under $25 billion.

Honourable senators, the main estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 1, 1983 and were, as usual, referred immediately to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Those estimates were discussed in committee with the President of the Treasury Board and his officials on March 15, 1983. An interim report of the committee was tabled last night on the main estimates. Senator Doody tells me that it is described as an interim report because the committee wants to continue to focus on particular estimates and does not want to preclude itself from making a final report. However, so far as these estimates for appropriation and supply purposes are concerned, that is their report.

The supplementary estimates (A) were tabled in the Senate on March 24, 1983 and were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Officials of Treasury Board discussed the estimates with the committee on May 31, 1983, and the committee reported back on June 2 last. Those, then, are the two main features: the balance of the main estimates; and the supplementary estimates (A).

There are two $1 items in these estimates. A listing of these votes and an explanation of why they were included was provided to the committee and can be found in the committee proceedings.

Honourable senators, there are two more things I would like to do before asking you to support this bill on voting these estimates and furnishing the supply. First, I want to discuss the tables and then go through the bill to summarize its main provisions. I ask permission to have them appear in Hansard at this point.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The tables follow:)

ESTIMATES TABLED TO DATE FOR 1983-84

Main Estimates	To Be Voted	Statutory	Total
Budgetary	$32,548,669,511	$53,069,529,722	$85,618,199,233
Non-Budgetary	398,490,800	1,444,163,000	1,842,653,800
	$32,947,160,311	$54,513,692,722	$87,460,853,033
Supplementary Estimates (A)
Budgetary	$ 1,362,110,001	$ 22,743,000	$ 1,384,853,001
Non-Budgetary	7,342,001	2,100,000	9,442,001
	$ 1,369,452,002	$ 24,843,000	$ 1,394,295,002
TOTAL ESTIMATES TABLED
Budgetary	$33,910,779,512	$53,092,272,722	$87,003,052,234
Non-Budgetary	405,832,801	1,446,263,000	1,852,095,801
	$34,316,612,313	$54,538,535,722	$88,855,148,035

SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1983-84

Only one Appropriation Act has been approved in respect of Estimates for 1983-84:

Supply Approved to Date
Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84 which granted Interim Supply for April, May and June including 31 additional proportions, based on the Main Estimates for 1983-84.		$ 9,328,506,277.74
Awaiting Approval
Supply for the balance of the Main Estimates for 1983-84	$23,618,654,033.26
Supply for the whole of Supplementary Estimates (A) for 1983-84.	$ 1,369,452,002.00
		$24,988,106,035.26
Total to be voted		$34,316,612,313.00

Senator Frith: The first table shows the estimates tabled to date for 1983-84.

• (1520)

As can be seen, under "Main Estimates" appear the budgetary figures—that is, the actual departmental estimates—both under the heading "To Be Voted", which is approximately $32.5 billion, and "Statutory", which is approximately $53 billion, for a total of actual departmental estimates of $85,618,199,233. The key figures will also be reflected in the bill.

Non-budgetary estimates essentially require authority to be advanced, but usually take the form of loans and, therefore, appear in the Canada Accounts as assets because they are secured by loans. Senator Asselin will recall administering them with reference to CIDA, for example.

With regard to supplementary estimates (A), I have the figures for estimates tabled to date for 1983-84. For budgetary items to be voted the figure is approximately $1.3 billion; for statutory, the figure is approximately $22 million, for a total of $1,384,853,001.

The figures relating to the total estimates tabled appear as the third item in that table.

The second table deals with supply to date for 1983-84. There has been only one appropriation act approved in respect of estimates for 1983-84. The table shows that the supply approved to date, under Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84—which has received Royal Assent—was interim supply for April, May and June, including 31 additional proportions, based on the main estimates for 1983-84. The figure in that case is $9,328,506,277.74.

Awaiting approval are the figures that appear in the bill before you today, honourable senators, which is for supply for the balance of the main estimates—that is, $23,618,654,-033.26.

So, the total to be voted, including the supply approved to date and the two items before us—namely, supply for the balance of the main estimates for 1983-84, and supply for the whole of supplementary estimates (A) for 1983-84—is $34,316,612,313.

Finally, honourable senators, by way of explanation as to what the bill purports to do, we should look at the preamble because, of course, it does say what the bill is all about, namely:

> the sums hereinafter mentioned are required to defray certain expenses of the Public Service of Canada, not otherwise provided for, for the—

And this is the important part.

> —financial year ending the 31st day of March, 1984; and for other purposes connected with the Public Service of Canada.

The first clause, honourable senators, is the short title, which is Appropriation Act No. 2, 1983-84.

Clause 2 is the clause we have already made passing reference to, and authorizes payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of a sum:

not exceeding in the whole twenty-four billion, nine hundred and eighty-eight million, one hundred and six thousand and thirty-five dollars and twenty-six cents—

That is the figure that appears in the tables and to which I have already referred.

The breakdown appears at the top of page 2 for the balance of clause 2 of the bill. That breaks it down into two figures, namely, the balance that is provided for main estimates by this bill, and the full amount in the supplementary estimates (A).

Clause 3 is the normal clause found in these types of bills that links the provisions of the bill—and the authority to pay out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund—to the schedules which have the individual votes and the individual estimates.

Clause 4 deals with commitments, and honourable senators will recall that this is more or less a standard form also. That clause deals with the authority required for commitments under contracts that go beyond the year provided for in the bill—that is, beyond the fiscal year 1983-84. The commitments must be shown in the estimates and must have the approval of the deputy head or other person charged with the administration. The limit, of course, is the limit to the amount of authority stated in the commitment portions of the schedules.

Clause 4(2) states:

> Where an item in the Estimates referred to in section 2—

Which is the main one.

> —or a provision of any Act purports to confer authority to spend revenues, commitments may be entered into in accordance with the terms of such item or provision up to an amount—

And this is important, although it is the usual provision.

> —equal to the aggregate of
>
> (a) the amount, if any, appropriated in respect of that item or provision; and
>
> (b) the amount of revenues actually received or, in the case of an > item in the said Estimates, the estimated revenues set out in the details related to such items, whichever is the greater.
>

What those words mean is that some departments not only receive their moneys from this parliamentary authority for supply but also from services rendered. The Department of National Defence actually provides services and receives revenues as a result of those services. The department is permitted to spend the amount that Parliament authorizes in the schedules and in the appropriations, and is also allowed to spend the amount of revenue it receives, but it requires authority to do that. That is the clause that gives it that authority.

Clause 5 deals with the fiscal year ending March 31. Although the fiscal year end is March 31, the books are not closed at that time. Because there are adjustments to be made at that time, the Financial Administration Act keeps the books open for 30 days beyond the end of the fiscal year, but after that time has elapsed, no more cash payments may come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. However, there are three more weeks when there can be settlement of accounts between departments, but that does not permit additional payments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. From May 21 to approximately June 15 there are internal adjustments, and then the finalization of the books for the Public Accounts.

That brings us to the last clause, clause 6. It deals with that very subject, the Public Accounts, and refers specifically to section 55 of the Financial Administration Act.

Section 55 of the Financial Administration Act states:

> (1) A report, called the Public Accounts, shall be prepared by the Receiver General for each fiscal year and shall be laid before the House of Commons by the Minister on or before the 31st day of December next following the end of that year, or if Parliament is not then sitting, within any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

That completes the three subjects I wish to address in explaining this bill to honourable senators—namely, the basic provisions of the bill, the details provided in the schedules, and the clauses of the bill itself.

I ask honourable senators to support second reading of this bill.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

DAILY ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—SUSPENSION OF RECORDING—NOTICE OF MOTION

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next I will move:

> That the practice of recording the daily attendance of senators in the Senate be suspended effective April 14, 1981, and remain suspended until the beginning of a new session of the Thirty-second Parliament, or the first session of the next succeeding Parliament, whichever may firt occur.

Honourable senators, it had been my intention today to ask for leave to proceed with this motion, but in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, his deputy leader and other honourable senators, I think it would be improper to do so.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 20, 1983 at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 5799.)

THE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA, LIMITED

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

On May 25, at a press conference unveiling Bill 158, an Act with respect to the Canada Development Investment Corp., I made the following statement:

"I have written to the Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance stating that, along with officers for CDIC, I would like to appear in early June to provide a report on financial and other business matters concerning Canadair and de Havilland."

At this time, the Government had just tabled in Parliament supplementary estimates seeking $240 million in funding for Canadair and $60 million in funding for de Havilland.

While an opportunity has been found to report on Canadair, no opportunity has been found so far to report on de Havilland because of House of Commons Committee scheduling. Therefore, I am releasing today the audited financial statements for de Havilland, for the seven months to the year ended December 31, 1982. A report on de Havilland will be provided when scheduling of a committee permits.

The financial statements I am making public today are for the seven months ended December 31, 1982. The de Havilland financial year, in previous years, has run to May 31. However, de Havilland has changed its financial year to December 31 to accord with the financial year of CDIC's other aircraft company, Canadair. CDIC has had responsibility for managing the Government's investment in de Havilland since November 23, 1982.

In the seven-month period, de Havilland recorded a $69.6 million loss, of which $30.5 million was a loss on operations, $35.4 million represented interest costs and $3.7 million research and development. In addition, a write-down of previously incurred and capitalized costs which are no longer recoverable of $196.5 million is reflected in these statements, for a total pre-tax loss and write-down in this period of $266.1 million. In the same period, sales amounted to $151.6 million.

Like other aircraft companies, de Havilland uses the program method of accounting which permits it to capitalize certain costs which it can reasonably expect to recover from its forecast of future sales. But the use of this method of accounting requires the management and board each year to review each program to determine whether past capitalized costs can still be recovered from future sales.

In reviewing the Dash-7 and Dash-8 programs, de Havilland and CDIC were both of the view that there was no longer any reasonable assurance that past capitalized costs would be recovered, under any reasonable scenario, through future profits from these programs.

In the case of the Dash-7, as with other commuter aircraft, sales have been very weak through the recent recession. And the original city-centre to city-centre market for which the Dash-7 was uniquely suited did not materialize at the volume level projected. New aircraft entering the market, including the Dash-8, will be competing for the same general commuter traffic volumes. Some $83 million of capitalized costs on the Dash-7 program have consequently been written off.

In the case of the Dash-8, while first commercial delivery will not occur before the fall of 1984, it is the opinion of de Havilland and CDIC that capitalized costs of $113 million incurred to the end of December, 1982 for development and tooling are unlikely to be recovered over the life of the program. Hence this amount was written off in the financial statements.

De Havilland is a key element within the aerospace industry of Canada. It is one of only two companies with a complete aircraft design capability. Sales have grown from $70 million in 1975 to $450 million in the year ending May 31, 1982. In the most recent seven-month period, however, sales fell to $151.6 million as a result of the economic recession and its impact on aircraft sales worldwide.

The Dash-7, a 50-passenger aircraft with four Pratt and Whitney Canada PT-6 engines, was launched into production in 1975. Its concept market was seen to be high-density short-haul commuter airlines. But it was a market that did not develop as fully as projected. In addition, the current economic recession has cut into the projected growth of U.S. commuter airlines. Since the first delivery of the Dash-7 in 1977, some 88 have been delivered to customers in 16 countries.

The Dash-8 is a 36-passenger aircraft, powered by two Pratt & Whitney Canada PW 120 engines and designed to fill the middle point of the commuter aircraft market between the 19-passenger Twin Otter and the 50-passenger Dash-7. It has other possible uses including maritime patrol, corporate transportation and a resource or regional development aircraft. Preliminary design work was largely completed in 1979 and a prototype was rolled out at a ceremony in Toronto on April 19, 1983. The first Dash-8 will be ready to fly within the next few days.

In short, de Havilland is an important part of the Canadian aerospace industry and the Government is anxious that it should recover its financial health and continue to make an important contribution to the Canadian economy. In particular, it represents an important achievement in a specialized area of technology, namely short-take-off-and-landing or STOL.

A full analysis of the company's problems and prospects developed in the course of CDIC's work with de Havilland's Board and management will be presented to Parliament as soon as committee time is available for a hearing. In the meantime, CDIC has pledged for all of its subsidiary companies, including de Havilland, that full and timely disclosure will be provided on a quarterly basis.

Later this year CDIC will be reporting back to Parliament on the Dash-8. I want to proceed with this plane. It represents a potentially significant market opportunity for Canada. The plane is on schedule and within budget and the market is responding with a large share of the total contracts and options being entered into for this class of aircraft going to the Dash-8. It is also a reflection of good Canadian technological skills. It could provide excellent jobs and generate important export dollars.

But the program also faces difficulties. In particular de Havilland is one of six aviation companies bringing a plane into production to serve the same commuter market segment. And unlike its competitors who are receiving strong government support, de Havilland has received no government risk-sharing support for the Dash-8. It will not be fair to expect de Havilland to operate and be judged against its competitors if it is not supported as they are.

This summer and fall, CDIC and de Havilland will be concluding their analysis of the range of financial risks and commercial and national benefits of the Dash-8 program. This will lead to a corporate plan that Parliament can study. While, as I have said, I want the plane to proceed, I also believe it is vital that Parliament be aware of the risks and participate in deciding how the Dash-8 should proceed.

Last month, the Government asked Parliament for $60 million to meet the ongoing cash needs of de Havilland for the balance of the year. At the same time, I announced last week, in my report on Canadair, that once CDIC's enabling legislation is passed, it will assume all of the de Havilland debt.

These are the questions I am prepared, along with CDIC and de Havilland officers, to discuss with the relevant House of Commons committee when an appropriate opportunity arises in the scheduling of those committees. I want Parliament to be informed and I am ready to present a full report on de Havilland as soon as the request is made.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 20, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

THE CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-161, to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2).

Bill read first time.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-148, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-147, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL WINNIPEG RIFLES

The Hon. the Speaker: I take pleasure in drawing the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the gallery of members of the Royal Winnipeg Rifles, the oldest regiment in western Canada, which is celebrating its hundredth anniversary this year.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

MEMBERS OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S FOOT GUARDS ASSOCIATION

Hon. George J. McIlraith: I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the gallery of members of the Governor General's Foot Guards Association.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, the members of the association are here to honour our distinguished Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, a former commanding officer of that famous regiment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the names of the Honourable Senators Rowe and Bonnell be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, last Wednesday I asked the deputy leader to tell us the government's intended program for the remainder of the session, and at that time I think Senator Frith said that he would give me an answer tonight. This evening we have received three bills for consideration, and I am wondering if there are many more to come to us before we adjourn, as I understand it, on June 30.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I hope what I told Senator Flynn last Wednesday was that I would try to have an answer to that question tonight. I know that today and tomorrow the other place will be dealing with the Crow bill.

● (2010)

Wednesday is private members' day, and, as usual, after the meeting of the house leaders in the other place on that day, I should have more information regarding the balance of the week. As was mentioned last week, June 24 is Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day, and I take it that the House of Commons will be dealing with the Crow bill on Thursday, unless something miraculous but pleasant happens on Tuesday.

In any event, I should have more information for the Leader of the Opposition on Wednesday afternoon after I have heard the results of the meeting of the house leaders of the other place.

Senator Flynn: That is not very helpful. I suppose it would be useless to put any supplementary questions.

Senator Frith: I think so. I am just as disappointed in that I cannot give the Leader of the Opposition any further information, but again, back to the operative verb, I shall keep trying.

Senator Flynn: That is not enough.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PERFORMING RIGHTS FEES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz on June 15 regarding performing rights fees. Because the answer is fairly long, I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Last November, the two performing right societies CAPAC and PROCAN had asked that the Concerts tariffs be set at 3 per cent of gross receipts, representing an increase of between 1,600 and 4,000 per cent depending on the example used. After six days of hearings the Copyright Appeal Board has set the Concerts tariffs at 1 per cent of the gross receipts for concerts of popular music and at .25 per cent of the gross receipts for concerts of classical music.

I would like to read an extract from page 20 of the final report which has been sent to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

> "To take an example, a concert given in an auditorium seating 1,500 persons, for which the receipts would total $15,000. would, under the existing tariffs, produce $23.40 for CAPAC ($1.17 per song for a concert consisting of 20 songs) and $26.25 for PROCAN ($1.31 per song). Usage and convention being what they are, it should also be remembered that authors, composers and publishers share in these revenues at rates of 25 per cent, 25 per cent and 50 per cent respectively. In the example given, without taking into account the distribution formulas used by the Societies, this would represent about .30¢ for the author (lyrics), .30¢ for the composer and .60¢ for the publisher of a song. Obviously, an increase limited to 6 per cent would be unacceptable. As some witnesses indicated, 6 per cent of a pittance is still a pittance."

According to Section 50(8) of the Copyright Act, the only responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to this matter is to publish the statements in the Canada Gazette and furnish the society concerned with a copy of them. The Minister does not have any discretion and cannot modify the Copyright Appeal Board's decision.

Finally, you may be interested to know that certain opponents before the Board have served an originating notice under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act asking review of the Copyright Appeal Board's decision.

THE ECONOMY

COST OF DAVEY-JOYAL REPORT

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, on December 7, 1982 I posed a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. That question can be found at page 5127 of Debates of the Senate. That question was with respect to the cost of the Davey-Joyal Report. To date I have not received a response.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I wonder if Senator Balfour could identify the question number as opposed to the page number. I could look up the question found on that page, but—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): There is no number.

Senator Balfour: It was a question addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Olson: Oh, an oral question.

Senator Balfour: Yes. It was addressed in terms of giving notice to the Leader of the Government and he undertook to respond, but I have not received a response.

Senator Olson: I understand now. I thank Senator Balfour for that explanation. I shall look into the matter and attempt to get some kind of response, either directly to the question or, indeed—

Senator Flynn: Or indirectly, as is usual.

Senator Olson: No, no, indirectly as to the status of the situation.

AIR CANADA

FREDERICTON-OTTAWA FLIGHT—COMPLAINT

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I have a question to pose to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Yesterday I had a confirmed seat from Fredericton to Ottawa on what they call a "direct flight". However, there is a stop in Montreal of 20 minutes. I disembarked at Montreal, but before doing so took my boarding pass and left an "Occupied" sign on my seat. When I reboarded the aircraft I was told to get off.

An Hon. Senator: The Tories get preference.

Senator Riley: Yes, apparently they do, but I did not.

I was told by a young lady that I was not confirmed and that I had to leave the aircraft.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Did that happen because I am a senator, or what?

● (2015)

I used both official languages, but it did not make any impression on that girl. She ordered me off the plane, and I was completely humiliated. I said to her that my seat was confirmed and that she should let me remain on board.

I would like to know why that happened. Air Canada is supposed to be a crown corporation and they are supposed to treat people with a certain amount of dignity, but I was not treated that way.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Riley obviously would not expect me to have an answer to that question this evening. The best I can do is take it as notice and refer it to the Minister of Transport, who will ask for an explanation.

[Translation]

CANAGREX BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the second reading of the Bill C-85, intituled: "An Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada".—(Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.).

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, since Senator Roblin is away on official duties, I ask for leave to resume the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is permission granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, last week, when I moved the adjournment of the debate, I informed the Leader of the Government that we would proceed this evening with second reading, that perhaps the Bill would be referred to the appropriate committee to continue study on the Bill, and that there was a possibility that the third reading stage would be passed this week.

The Leader of the Opposition has announced that arrangements were made with the Leader of the Government and his assistant, and that agreement had been reached to consider the Bill at the second and third reading stage within the next few days and that third reading and the Royal Assent would be put through the House as soon as possible.

Last week I adjourned the debate on behalf of Senator Roblin. Since he is attending a meeting of our American and Canadian Parliamentarians and cannot be here this evening, I have decided to say a few words about a Bill which I feel is very important.

This Bill has been debated in the other place for many days, and I would even say weeks, and even at the end of the debate, it did not seem likely that the Bill would be agreed to by all Parliamentarians sitting on the other side. It seems that a perhaps somewhat political division appeared when this Bill was being considered, and that in some parts of the country, objections to the Bill are more pronounced than in others.

This important piece of legislation raises a number of questions, and I believe that it is at the second reading stage that any questions or comments that come to mind should be made before the Bill is finally passed. Is the Bill justified? I think that is the first question we should ask when considering a Bill of this magnitude. After all, it involves creating a Crown corporation for the development of agricultural exports. Apparently, there is no quarrel on the principle of the Bill. The problems arise over the manner in which the new corporation is to operate. There is some concern in many parts of the agricultural industry that by establishing a Crown corporation, the Bill will be displacing existing private interests.

Is it really a development tool whose time has come? Is it an effective way of restoring the balance of trade, which I feel, and with me many Parliamentarians, is in a deficit position, although the impression is created that we have a trade surplus.

Why bother to establish a new Crown corporation? Could Canagrex not just be a division of the Department of Agriculture? Should we not organize or establish an organization that would have major ties with External Affairs and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce? As I said earlier, will Canagrex be competing with a number of already existing private companies?

It is indeed urgent that we should continue our seminars on exports, assessing our external markets, financing, export credits, insurance services, market conditions, and so forth.

The fact remains the Government, by creating this new Crown corporation, will not be immediately correcting the many problems we are faced with today in the agricultural industry. I think Honourable Senators are not likely to forget the financing problems of Canadian farms, the disastrous effects of this situation, and the many bankruptcies that have struck the industry in the course of the current year. Frequent seizures of farm property, and forced sales of farm property have been common across Canada. I do not think establishing a Crown corporation will resolve the problems facing agriculture in this country on the domestic market. We are told that Canagrex will have to be accountable to Parliament, that it will report to a committee of Parliament and that its books will be audited by the Auditor General of Canada. If that is the Government's decision, I think it is a step in the right direction to its setting up a permanent system for monitoring by parliamentary committees of the many Crown corporations we have in this country, most of which are not directly accountable to the Parliament of Canada but to a department or the Minister responsible.

I did some research and I have tried to find arguments for and against the creation of this Crown corporation under Bill C-85. The arguments in favour are many, but it is surprising there are also serious arguments against passing the Bill in question.

● (2020)

[English]

I should like, very briefly, to cite some of the arguments pro and con. On the pro side, Canagrex would be a central promotion agency for marketing and exporting agricultural products. It would provide the necessary catalyst to stimulate increased production and the export of farm products. Canagrex could also prove to be a valuable tool for the direct marketing of our agricultural products.

It has been suggested that, with the establishment of Canagrex, large private exporters would be forced to compete and thus to expand their sales and services, thereby increasing Canada's share of the export market. Canagrex could act as an export promotion clearing house, co-ordinating and making use of various programs which are scattered among a host of federal departments. Canagrex would thus be able to take a more orderly and co-ordinated approach to export marketing than is now the case.

Canagrex would be able to provide promotional, informational, legal, financial and other services required for export marketing that are too costly for small operators and organizations. In its role as a crown corporation reporting to the Minister of Agriculture and Parliament, it could complement agricultural, industrial and foreign policy. Canagrex could establish world-wide lines of communication which it could feed back to producers, organizations and processors to alert them to market opportunities. Canagrex would have powers to help finance export transactions, and would thus complement the kinds of bridge financing and credit offered by the Export Development Corporation. Canagrex could also work in co-operation with the Canadian International Development Agency.

Honourable senators, these are some of the "pro-Canagrex" arguments that have been enumerated during the study of the bill at the committee stage in the other place. Perhaps we could consider now the arguments that have been presented against the adoption of this bill.

There is a fear that Canagrex will provide unfair competition, take business away from private export traders and displace provincial marketing boards. Private operators feel they are fairly successful in developing and exporting agricultural products and that federal intervention is not required. Some producer groups, especially western cattlemen, feel no need for government intervention on their behalf. I think this is the main reason why western farmers are not so enthusiastic about the adoption of this bill. If Canagrex becomes the main marketing agency for agricultural products, there is concern that it will dictate to the farmers what they should grow. There may be some concern that the indirect subsidy which Canagrex represents would be viewed by some countries—especially the United States—as unfair competition and would result in retaliatory trade regulations.

Concern has been expressed as to the efficiency of such a crown agency. Could private sector interests be induced to fulfill this role more efficiently?

Fears have been expressed that Canagrex would grow and take unto itself increased market powers. It has been called the "Petro-Canada" of agriculture. Some claim that, once in place, the government might be tempted to expand its mandate. The complicated nature of the corporation's mandate plus the severe constraints on its area of operations may render the corporation ineffective. Concern has been expressed that the reduction in start-up funding for the corporation has already rendered it ineffective.

● (2025)

One could argue that the corporation, if effective, might distort the market and inadvertently bring about production to fulfill contracts which are subsequently terminated, leaving producer groups in a severe over-supply situation. Transportation systems might also be temporarily over-taxed. There are those who would argue that the Canagrex bill is an attempt to expand national marketing powers, thereby bringing cattlemen and others into marketing boards "through the back door."

Honourable senators, I do not have many arguments against the principle of the bill itself. Speaking for myself, I am ready to vote for the principle. However, I hope this bill will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, where we should try to put forward some amendments in order to secure the approval of those in the west who are opposed to the bill.

Senator Roblin will be here tomorrow, when he will explain his objections to the adoption of the bill. Perhaps some amendments could be introduced in committee, where we will study them very carefully, and when the bill comes back to the Senate we will try to discuss those amendments, if possible, on third reading, and approve them.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I will take but a few minutes of your time, because I appreciate the desire to move this bill forward as quickly as possible. However, in a matter as important as the subject of this bill the record should show that, while there is widespread support, both in Parliament and in the agricultural community, for an agency to facilitate and assist in improving the export trade of agricultural products, there is at the same time very deep concern, and strong and valid objections, which have been voiced both in Parliament and in the agricultural community, to the scope of the powers given this crown corporation under this proposed legislation.

As I say, there can be very little quarrel with the government's taking constructive steps to improve our exports of agricultural products. The concern arises because the provisions of the proposed bill permit the corporation to go far beyond being a government agency to facilitate and encourage exports and actually go into purchasing, processing and all the other activities that are normally engaged in by the private sector in handling commodities of this kind.

• (2030)

I suggest that, in the light of our experience of crown corporations in this country, especially in recent months, the last thing Canada needs is another crown corporation to duplicate the excellent work that has been done for years, and is being done today, by structures within the private sector, and by both federal and provincial departments of agriculture.

I am not a member of the committee that will be examining this bill, but I would appeal to those who are members to consider seriously the advantages that would accrue if the agency were structured in such a way that it is nothing more than an agency to facilitate and encourage the export of agricultural products, and one that is not permitted to intervene in processing and physically handling these commodities to the extent that this bill provides.

I will not labour the subject further, because I think the government has indicated by the position it took in the other place that it is determined to force this bill through Parliament, notwithstanding the valid and serious objections that are being raised, in both Parliament and the agricultural community. I certainly hope that the government will be openminded on the subject of reducing the powers of the corporation in order to remove the serious objections which exist at the present time and yet provide an agency which can render a beneficial service to the agricultural community in the important field of the export of agricultural products.

[Senator Asselin.]

• (2035)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, one of the better known paintings by the artist Picasso consists of a skeleton or the bare bones of a fish on a plate, and that is the way in which I see Canagrex. It is the skeleton of an organization that will give the Minister of Agriculture complete control of our industry. If we add to the skeleton fins, gills, and possibly a few scales, then the fish will be complete. Those amendments can be made quite simply in the future by means of an omnibus bill, which would give Canagrex a little more authority here and there. The Minister of Agriculture would then complete his goal, and he would become a sort of socialist agricultural Picasso.

The Leader of the Government, in introducing the bill, provided us with the bare bones of the legislation and very little else. His remarks contained two highlights, namely, the number of the bill and the fact that it had been passed in the other place after a long debate. In my opinion, those were the two highlights of his explanation. Therefore, I shall be asking him a number of questions during the course of my remarks, and I hope that in closing the debate he will provide us with the answers.

Canagrex is based upon the vision, or perhaps the hallucination, of the Minister of Agriculture that there is a great big wide world waiting out there with agricultural markets throughout; that all we need are fast-talking salesmen and we can supply those markets. The minister says that we need a government agency to deal with other government agencies, but, honourable senators, we have had government agencies dealing with agencies of other governments. We have Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a crown corporation dealing with other governments, and that agency found it necessary to hire a Korean to negotiate with Argentina.

We have had the Canadian Dairy Commission dealing with other governments, and we now learn that the Minister of Agriculture sent in the RCMP to investigate that body and is now threatening to disband it. Then, of course, it would be unfair not to mention Petro-Canada. As honourable senators will recall, Petro-Canada was supposed to be a window on the oil industry, and after $1.5 billion of taxpayers' money was invested in that "window", Petro-Canada now has 55 subsidiaries. It reminds me of the leaded windows installed in my office—small but numerous.

Then, of course, we have the Canadian Wheat Board, an organization that has been in existence for some time. It has dealt extensively with other governments yet we find that both wheat sales and the price of wheat are declining.

• (2040)

Honourable senators, we cannot have anything any more direct than the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Argue, dealing with another government and this process has not been successful. There have been state visits to Japan and Russia, but other countries continue to undercut us and take our markets away. Therefore, I do not have a great deal of faith in government agencies, whether they be involved in agriculture or any other field.

Perhaps we should consider the potential market. It is impossible to sell to countries unless they have the income to purchase our agricultural products. Haiti, for example, has an average income of $300 per person per year. A side of beef in Ottawa costs about $350 so we will not sell very much beef to Haiti. Mexico, Brazil and Argentina all have extensive problems with their foreign debt. They cannot meet their present debts and it is very unlikely they would get credit to purchase our products. Then, the super salesman of super salesmen, the Prime Minister, went to the Pacific Rim but he was only able to complete sales in that area of the world by bartering. They offered him wicker chairs. It would not surprise me to see the Prime Minister giving out wicker chairs to each of the unemployed. He could probably initiate the Indonesian project that he was interested in, and I am sure the unemployed would appreciate a wicker chair.

We think of the Middle East as having all sorts of money. Certainly there is a high national income but it is not distributed very evenly. The average income in that area is not a great deal higher than it is in South America, so it is impossible to sell in that part of the world. We could move on to the Communist countries of Europe. Admittedly, Hungary, Romania and Poland are all potential markets but there is one thing wrong. They are socialist countries and they cannot afford to pay us for our agricultural products. It is rather ironic that the only countries we can sell to are the socialist communist countries—countries which have the same control over the agricultural industry as that proposed for Canagrex.

The European Common Market has threatened to break up a number of times over sales of agricultural products within the common market. If France objects to Germany for selling products within its borders and vice versa, then we are not going to be able to sell in the common market. In addition, the common market countries provide very high subsidies to their farmers and, therefore, they are our very strong competitors in other parts of the world.

When the Leader of the Government sums up, I would like him to give us the details of the potential market of $500 million which the Minister of Agriculture continuously talks about. He seems to see a vast market somewhere and I do not think it would be fair to pass judgment on the existence of that market without having accurate details of it.

Canagrex has been described as a means of bartering with countries that are unable to pay in cash or obtain credit. In fact, I think it was the Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board which expressed that very viewpoint in their presentation to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. When I asked that board's representatives who would distribute these products, I received the answer I expected, "But that is not our problem; all we want to do is sell our products in this country and we will take anything in payment for them, but somebody else can distribute them." Can honourable senators envisage the Minister of Agriculture taking Japanese cars in payment for canola oil and distributing the cars in Windsor? I do not expect to see such a thing happening any more than I expect to see a great deal of barter occurring.

The principle that Canagrex can operate on a regional basis is one that causes me a great deal of concern. Let us suppose for the sake of discussion that Canagrex completes a sale of pork in the export market. The three main pork producing areas in Canada are Quebec, Ontario and Alberta, and the shipment will go through the Port of Montreal. Therefore, Quebec would probably feel that it has the priority on that market. Ontario will feel that its price is lower and that since it has a surplus it should receive preference, and Alberta will say that it can produce the pork more cheaply than the other provinces and, therefore, it should receive the order. It will take the wisdom of Solomon to sort out such an occurrence.

The evidence presented before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture by the Quebec potato producers causes me some concern as well. They see a great potential in joint ventures, and they pointed out that in their view Quebec does not have a large enough share of the domestic potato market. They want a larger share of the market and they expect to achieve this through a joint venture. It is only reasonable that a certain area sees its own possibilities first. However, I ask the Leader of the Government: Which area will lose? Will it be Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Ontario? If a joint venture is undertaken to raise the quota in one specific area, the other three areas must suffer.

Sixty-two per cent of the potatoes produced in my province are absorbed in the domestic market and any interference with that amount would be disasterous for the province. The Minister of Agriculture, while appearing before the Senate Agriculture Committee, said that he thought that Prince Edward Island should get out of the domestic market altogether and concentrate on exporting seed potatoes. We produce an excellent seed potato but it is difficult to establish a continuous market. This year we may sell to Argentina but next year Argentina may not have the money to buy the seed potatoes, so that market is gone. The same situation applies to potatoes in New Brunswick.

Interestingly enough, we have established a fairly consistent seed potato market with Cuba, a communist socialist country, and we did that without Canagrex. We did not need to have a Canadian government agency dealing with another government agency in Cuba. The potato marketing board in my province and individual shippers were able to establish that market and maintain it to a fairly steady degree. The only problem they have had is getting paid in Canadian currency.

● (2050)

The Leader of the Government listed a number of organizations that support Bill C-85, but he neglected to give us the name of any organization opposing it. However, if he were to look at a list supplied by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, he would find that most of the provinces oppose the principle of Canagrex. I need not remind him that it is the function of the Senate to protect the interests of the provinces, and in that respect I am curious to know how he could suggest he was protecting the interests of the provinces while at the same time failing to tell us that the majority of the provinces were opposed to the principle of Canagrex.

The Minister of Agriculture told us in committee that he was enthusiastic about having the authority and opportunity to build storage facilities in foreign countries. In my opinion, that would be a rather risky field to enter. We have already had one experience in that line. We built storage facilities in South America for our bean exports. One problem that arose in that connection was that there were no roads to the storage facilities. Consequently, the beans went into storage and simply stayed there. Once you undertake a project of that kind, honourable senators, you give the people in the particular country the opportunity of asking for roads, railways and trucks to distribute the product.

Moreover, once the storage facility is in existence, other countries can then come along and undercut your prices. For instance, the European Common Market or Russia might say, "All right, last year you paid Canada a price which included a portion for storage costs. This year we will give you that product for much less, because we do not have to pay for the storage facilities."

Many of the countries with which we do business would accept that kind of argument because they are not bound by our principles of contract law. They might well have a change of heart and simply ask, "What are you going to do about it?" and there wouldn't be a thing we could do about it.

Honourable senators, I will make just a brief comment on the list of staff which was provided to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. That list contained one solicitor and one marketing expert. I would suggest that, solicitors being what they are, it would not be too long before solicitors formed the largest department within Canagrex.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Old solicitors never die, they just lose their appeal.

Hon. Lowell Murray: They just build empires.

Senator Phillips: However, the marketing end of it will probably stay as one individual. If one individual can deal with every agricultural product in every country, I would really like to meet that individual.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government can give us some clarification on joint ventures. It was my understanding that the bill was amended in the House of Commons to eliminate the possibility that Canagrex would enter the field of growing fruits and vegetables. However, I understand now that there is nothing to stop Canagrex from entering into a joint venture to do that. I would ask him to clarify that when he replies.

I notice, too, that the bill provides for consultants. I suspect that we will find Alastair Gillespie has left the coal mines and has now entered the export field of the agri-industry.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The two years have expired now.

Senator Phillips: I would point out to honourable senators that the borrowing authority of Canagrex is actually greater than that provided to the Farm Credit Corporation. At the moment, the Farm Credit Corporation has allocated all of its funds and is waiting for approval from the Governor in Council to borrow $500 million in the European market. Canagrex would be able to do that without going to the government. It seems strange that Canagrex should have that kind of authority but not the Farm Credit Corporation.

In closing, honourable senators, I should like to point out that there is an alternative to Canagrex, and that is to have in our embassies abroad trade officers dealing with agricultural products, as the Americans do. In the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce there were for years a number of experts on agricultural matters who knew the trade patterns, but they were transferred to External Affairs. Surely the government could utilize their experience to train people to go out to the embassies, having benefited from the knowledge those former officials of Industry, Trade and Commerce had gained over a number of years.

Of course, I realize most officials do not care to deal with agricultural matters because they are rather mundane. Moreover, agricultural groups do not give as lavish receptions and banquets as the hi-tech industry gives. However, we can hope to find that that attitude changed.

The other day I spoke to the minister concerning clause 14(3)(b), and I believe he intends to give an explanation of that when he closes the debate.

Honourable senators, during the winter I took note of some remarks made by the Honourable Senator Roblin in western Canada in which he said that if members of the Senate were elected debate would be much more extensive and more interesting, because elected senators would take a much greater interest in matters such as Canagrex. I am looking now at several senators who are advocates of an elective Senate. I look forward, therefore, to hearing from senators such as Senator Buckwold and Senator Frith, who will no doubt give us the benefit of their views. They do not have to wait to be elected. They can do that now.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Would the honourable senator allow a question?

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

• (2100)

Senator Buckwold: First of all, I want to thank him for again advocating an elected Senate. I was glad to hear that, and I am sure that all honourable senators will vote for or against this bill on the basis of what they feel their regional interests really are.

However, my question involves the honourable senator's comments on the Canadian Wheat Board. That board is one of the few major achievements of a Conservative government for the farmers of western Canada. It is a rare jewel in the crown of Tory programs, and we are all very proud of it. Indeed, the Canadian Wheat Board has become an institution in western Canada. I was therefore alarmed, on hearing the honourable senator's comments regarding the litany of failures of government agencies, that the sale of wheat is declining and the price is declining. The implication was that this was the fault of a government agency, namely, the Canadian Wheat Board. Is it the honourable senator's position, then, that the Canadian Wheat Board should be abolished?

Senator Phillips: I do not place the blame for these shortcomings on the Canadian Wheat Board. What I said was that, in spite of the existence of that board, the price has been declining and the acreage has been declining.

I would draw the attention of my honourable friend to remarks made recently by the Minister of Agriculture in which he said that the idea of reducing wheat acreage and other activities of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board was unprincipled and unchristian. It is not my intention to discuss theology with the honourable senator this evening. I am sure I would not change his view or he mine.

However, the answer to his question is: No, I would not advocate the disbandment of the Canadian Wheat Board, but I would recommend that there be a Conservative minister in charge to operate it on the Conservative principles upon which it was established.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, first of all I would like to accept the challenge posed by Senator Phillips in calling on those who support an elected Senate to take a position on this bill. Once again, it gives me the opportunity to state that I do indeed support an elected Senate.

However, what we are really dealing with is the question of Canagrex. What has to be principally of interest to us is to determine whether or not we need such a crown corporation. On that question the burden of proof really lies on the government to make its case. One has to examine whether or not that case has been made.

As I understand it, the argument is that Canagrex is needed in order to engage in state-to-state trading; that apparently there are states, particularly socialist states, that will not deal with private organizations, and therefore we need to have a state corporation to deal with them. Surely, honourable senators, the evidence does not support that contention, for indeed the organizations that we now have in Canada—largely of a private nature, with the exception of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission—have been able to deal successfully with both capitalist and socialist states, and the country has enjoyed marked increases in the export of agricultural and food products.

As I understand it, the argument for Canagrex is that it will improve our performance in the export of agricultural and food products. But the evidence is there, in commodity after commodity, that improved performance and increased exports of those products have already occurred. Under those circumstances, one has to wonder whether a state agency can do better than the outstanding performance that has already been achieved.

As I understand it, Canagrex will offer a range of assistance to those who are involved in the exporting of these products and to those who grow and process them. That assistance is already offered by organizations like the Export Development Corporation, so nothing new is being offered in that respect. It may be that Canagrex has a raison d'être if it centralizes all that assistance in one organization. I am, however, sometimes very leery of the concept of centralization.

I want to deal with one particular area within the powers of Canagrex. As I understand it, Canagrex is to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products. I am particularly interested in the power to "engage in export". I quote from the minister's speech where he says:

> Canagrex may purchase, package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell agricultural and food products. It may undertake promotion, publicity and improvement of quality and variety. It will be able to enter into contracts with individual Canadians, firms, marketing boards and so on, and act as their agent. It may enter into contracts with foreign governments; enter into joint ventures; and buy or lease property such as warehouses or containers. It may provide loans and guarantees.

It is true, as the minister says, that amendments have been made to increase public control over the activities of Canagrex. I believe those amendments have been made because there is legitimate concern, even within the government, as to how widely its powers will be exercised. Even with those amendments, extensive powers remain. We have all been around government long enough to realize that, when the powers exist, while they may not be used immediately they will almost certainly be used one day. Let us not delude ourselves, therefore, by saying that we have undertakings from the Minister of Agriculture that he will not use those powers. I am sure that, when he says that he will not use them, he intends to do what he says, but there is no guarantee that the bureaucracy or interest groups will not put pressure on the minister or his successors, over a period of time, to use those powers. In my view, those powers will be used.

What really worries me about this bill is that another bureaucracy is being formed. The history of these bureaucracies and crown corporations is that they start small but they grow and grow and grow. So, what we are proposing, I believe, is something that will have broad powers enabling it to invade a field that is already being well looked after by the private sector, and I include in that field the work of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission. We are not, however, dealing with something that has been badly done; Canada has an outstanding record in the export of its agricultural and food products.

● (2110)

As honourable senators know, it is very difficult for someone who sits on the government side to vote against a bill which is obviously as close to the government's heart as is this one. But my feeling is that the case has not been made by the government; the case has not been made that it should establish a crown corporation to invade this field. My feeling is that the job is being done, and it seems to me that it is the duty of Parliament, and the duty of the Senate, to say to the bureaucracy and to the government: "Make your case; if you can show that the private sector and the current organizations are not doing well, then we will accept your case." But they have not made their case; in fact, the cost to us will be greater than any benefit I can see.

Therefore, as hard as it is for me to vote against those on my side of this house, I will do so, and I sincerely hope that honourable senators who are concerned about the incursions by government into the private sector of this country will vote the same way.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Flynn, for Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved the second reading of Bill C-148, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

He said: Honourable senators, this evening we have heard two excellent speeches on agriculture, one from Senator Phillips and one from my colleague, Senator Everett. It is my turn now to speak briefly, I hope, on Bill C-148, a very important bill to the agricultural industry as it relates to an amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I do not have to tell you with how much pride I stand up and talk about agriculture, coming as I do from Saskatchewan. As I have said in this chamber so often, we have a resource which should be the pride of Canada—and it is—because each spring our farmers, bless them, plant their seeds and in the fall harvest literally billions of dollars of product, most of which is exported thereby adding to Canada's prosperity and development.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Without Canagrex!

Senator Buckwold: Yes, without Canagrex, thanks to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Our farmers, as honourable senators know, represent an industry that is very credit-intensive. That industry requires a great deal of loan capital. The Farm Improvement Loans Act has been operating since 1945. During that time it has provided 1.8 million loans totalling $4.7 billion. Most of those loans were relatively small. They were made for the purpose of improving farms, buying land, and obtaining new equipment. This act provides financing for the agricultural industry in a wide variety of fields.

This has been a good investment. For example, last year—which was a difficult year because of high interest rates—new loans amounted to $208 million. Those loans were guaranteed under the program, and they amounted to an increase of 10 per cent over loans made in 1981.

Now, what is most impressive about this is that these loans were paid back. They are business loans provided by financial institutions—the chartered banks, trust companies, credit unions, and so forth—and are guaranteed by the Government of Canada. The interest rate is one per cent above prime.

The total loss last year—and I was very interested in this figure because we have all heard about the tremendous losses that were suffered by many financial institutions last year because of high interest rates—that was written off so far as this particular act is concerned amounted to approximately $1 million. When one considers the immense volume of loans, I think one would agree that that is an outstanding performance.

